third inning when senior tri-captain Matt Reynolds plated Athas, who had been hit by a pitch, with a sacrifice fly to right field.

The Bobcats then answered back in the top of fourth inning, using a trio of hits to grab their first lead of the afternoon. Third baseman Brian Sabatella and centerfielder Tim Binkoski delivered a pair of big blows in the inning, sandwiching two-out, two-run doubles around a hit batsmen to give QU a 5-3 edge.

From there the game belonged to Gresh, who retired 20 consecutive Minutemen at one point and did not allow a hit over the final six frames.

"I said to the team, I can't believe that guy lasted all nine innings against us," Stone said. "We just didn't hit like we were capable of, and he stayed around the plate and in control.

Senior infielder Cullan Maumus, who broke his arm earlier in the season at George Washington and was feared to be out for the remainder of the year, played most of the afternoon at first base before moving to second for the final two innings. He also collected one of UMass' two hits with an infield single in the third.

The loss was the Maroon and White's sixth in a row, marking the program's longest losing streak since enduring a nine-game skid in March of 2002. It was also the Minutemen's first home loss to a non-conference opponent since April 15.

Focus Testers Needed for a Playboy Themed Sim Game

PLAYBOY

THE MANSION

2 hour sessions at Cyberlore Studios in Northampton, MA

Food and beverages provided to participants.

Males and females needed.

If interested, please send:

- Name, e-mail and phone
- List of favorite games

To: focus@cyberlore.com

Prosecutors to question witnesses in Bryant case

By JOHN SARCHE
Associated Press

EAGLE, Colo. — Prosecutors in the rape case against Kobe Bryant could get their turn this week to question witnesses on whether jurors should hear about the sexual history of the woman accusing the NBA star.

More than two dozen witnesses — including the 19-year-old woman's friends, former boyfriends and college roommates — have testified in closed-door hearings this spring after being called by defense attorneys for the Los Angeles Lakers' guard. Nine defense witnesses testified in private Monday.

Starting Tuesday, however, prosecutors could begin to present their case. Witness lists are sealed, but in a court filing Monday, prosecutors said they had planned to call a witness who was unable to testify because of a scheduling conflict.

The filing said prosecutors will present their side of the issue once the defense is finished.

Also Tuesday, state District Judge Terry Ruckriegle was expected to resume a hearing on another key issue: whether certain evidence should be thrown out because it was gathered illegally.

Bryant's attorneys argue that investigators improperly questioned him and improperly executed a search warrant. Prosecutors say he voluntarily spoke with investigators and handed over evidence, including a T-shirt stained with the woman's blood and a rape kit performed on Bryant.

Among the witnesses who testified Monday were Johnray Strickland, a former boyfriend who met the alleged victim last year at the University of Northern Colorado, and Eagle County sheriff's Detective Doug Winters.

The defense says injuries found on the woman could have been caused by sex with multiple partners before and after her encounter with Bryant.

The prosecution says the sexual history is irrelevant in determining whether the woman was assaulted.

"If they can put on credible evidence that she had sex after Kobe Bryant and before she went to the cops, I'm not sure we're even going to have a trial," said Craig Silverman, a former prosecutor who is following the case. "That one fact alone would cause reasonable doubt for one or more of the jurors."

The woman's attorney, John Clune, has denied that she had sex with anyone in the hours after her encounter with Bryant.

Bryant has said he had consensual sex with the woman last June at the Vail-area resort where she worked.

If convicted of felony sexual assault, the 25-year-old basketball player faces four years to life in prison or 20 years to life on probation.

Ruckriegle has already barred defense access to the woman's medical records, though experts say witnesses will likely be called to discuss her purported suicide attempts and anti-depressant use.

Ruckriegle has said he would like to hear arguments on other topics Wednesday, including requests by the alleged victim and prosecutors to get a formal plea and trial date.

ED ANDRIESKI/AP/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Lakers guard Kobe Bryant, left, walks into an Eagle, Colo. courtroom with his attorney, Hal Haddon.

Vijay Singh shares lead at rain-soaked Houston Open; Braves place OF Chipper Jones on DL

HUMBLE, Texas — Vijay Singh shared the lead with John Huston in the rain-delayed Houston Open going into the last round, then pulled away with a 4-under 68 for his sixth straight win when leading after three rounds.

Singh finished at 11-under 277 for a two-stroke victory over Scott Hoch. It was Singh's second victory in Houston, where he won two years ago.

Hoch was second after a closing 67. Huston (71) was another shot back.

BASEBALL

SAN FRANCISCO — The Atlanta Braves placed outfielder Chipper Jones on the 15-day disabled list with a strained right hamstring, the star's first stint on the DL since 1996.

The move is retroactive to April 19, and Atlanta recalled infielder Mike Hessman from Triple-A Richmond to take Jones' roster spot.

Jones re-injured his hamstring against the Florida Marlins on April 18 while trying to chase down a fly ball. He had to be taken off the field on a cart. He originally hurt the hamstring April 11 against the Chicago Cubs and missed two games.

SEATTLE — The Seattle Mariners designated right-hander Kevin Jarvis for assignment, then waited to see if they will have to cover his $4.25 million contract.

Jarvis, who went 1-0 with an 8.31 ERA in eight relief appearances this season, joined the Mariners in the six-player trade that sent infielder Jeff Cirillo to San Diego in January.

Jarvis is due $4.25 million in the final year of a $9 million, three-year contract he signed after leading San Diego with 12 wins in 2001. Slowed by elbow trouble, he's won seven games over the last three seasons.

The Mariners have 10 days to decide whether to send Jarvis to the minors, but he has enough service time to block that move. The team's alternatives are to trade or release him.

HOCKEY

OSTRAVA, Czech Republic — Richard Park and Ryan Malone each scored power-play goals for the United States, which earned its first point in the hockey world championships by tying Slovakia 3-3.

The Americans looked better in their second game of the tournament, following Saturday's sluggish 4-2 loss to Finland, and nearly skated off with a victory.

Former NHL defenseman Richard Lintner salvaged the tie for Slovakia when he slapped a shot from the point past goalie Ty Conklin at 13:08 in the second period.

WOMEN'S BASKETBALL

PHOENIX — Phoenix forward Lisa Harrison ended her eight-year playing career and joined the staff of new Mercury coach Carrie Graf.

Graf also added former Phoenix Suns forward Cedric Ceballos to the staff as a special assistant.

Harrison played 161 games for Phoenix, averaging 6.8 points and 4.0 rebounds.

TENNIS

BARCELONA, Spain — Former champion Albert Costa was eliminated in the first round of the Open Seat Godo by Albert Montanes 6-4, 7-6 (3).

Montanes next faces 18-year-old wild-card entry Nicolas Almagro, who beat Alex Corretja 3-6, 6-3, 6-4.

Top-seeded Guillermo Coria withdrew, citing a groin injury.

MUNICH, Germany — Seeded players James Blake and Andrei Pavel lost in the first round of the BMW Open.

The eighth-seeded Blake was beaten by Sargis Sargsian 6-4, 7-6 (6), and No. 6 Pavel was eliminated by Nikolay Davydenko 7-6 (3), 6-4.

BUDAPEST, Hungary — Top-seeded Emilie Loit withdrew from the Budapest Grand Prix with a hand injury.

She was replaced in the draw by Melinda Czink, who will face 2000 champion Tathiana Garbin in the first round.

HORSE RACING

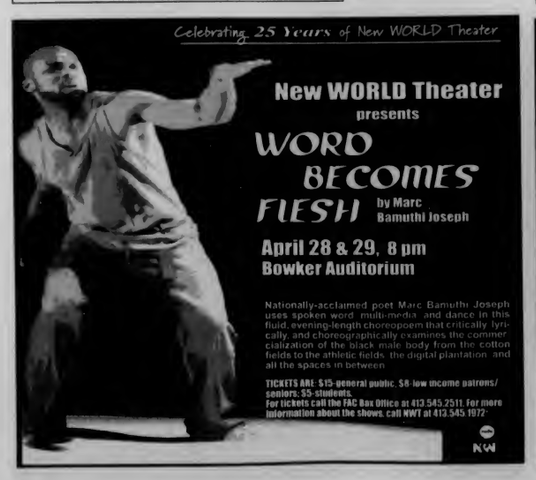
LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Hall of Famer Jerry Bailey and other top jockeys appeared in federal court to ask that they be allowed to wear corporate logos and union patches while racing in Kentucky.

The jockeys have argued in separate complaints that the right to wear the logos during races is speech protected by the First Amendment.

They have asked a judge to block the state law that bans the union and corporate logos in time for Saturday's Kentucky Derby.

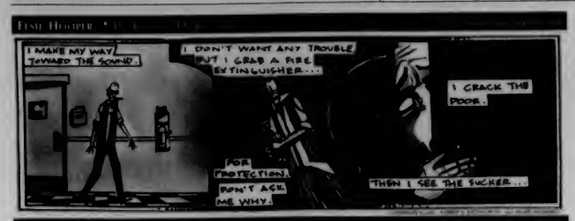
Attorneys for the Kentucky Horse Racing Authority, which regulates racing, argued that the presence of ads or other patches could hamper racing officials' ability to determine a winner in a tight finish, or whether a foul was committed during a race.

SAILING



WELLINGTON, New Zealand — The America's Cup team of Seattle billionaire Craig McCaw won a $1 million court judgment against an employee it accused of selling secrets to rivals.

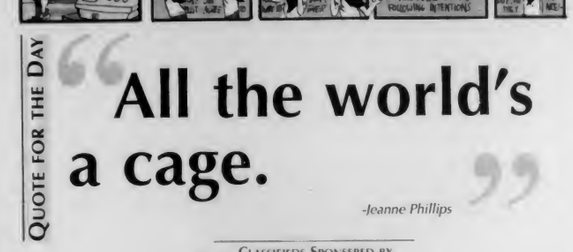
The High Court at Auckland ordered Sean Reeves, the former attorney and operations manager of McCaw's OneWorld syndicate, to pay $1.05 million in damages awarded two years ago by the U.S. District Court at Seattle.

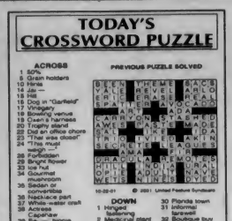


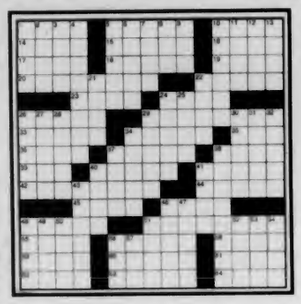
OneWorld sued Reeves in August 2002, contending he approached members of three rival syndicates offering to sell secret design information.

The next month, the Seattle court found Reeves had breached various OneWorld confidentiality agreements and recommended substantial damages.

-Associated Press







QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"All the world's a cage."

-Jeanne Phillips

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

THE HARP Irish Pub

413-548-6900 www.theharp.net

163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst

Just north of the apartments

Check out the Harp Pavilion!

WED. · Reggae Night

THU. · Special Brew

FRI. · Open Irish Seisiun

SAT. · Equalites

April Special!

Molson:

$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher

"Start your own tradition."

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH

- Baked Ziti
- Kickin' Chicken
- Thai Seitan (vegan)
- Riblet Gardenburger (vegan)

DINNER

- Turkey Cutlet
- Roast Beef
- Madras Tofu Curry (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 61
- Low: 38

THURSDAY
- High: 78
- Low: 49

FRIDAY
- High: 78
- Low: 50

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln

COPY EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl

PRODUCTION STAFF
Molly Eggleston/ Dave Pessah/ Jen DiMeglio

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Oops! Did you forget deodorant again?

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Not everyone can pull off an orange suit the way you do.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Perhaps you should find some matching socks.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Today is national Give Your Friends a Massage Day.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
In the next life, you will be reincarnated as a chipmunk. Be kind to little rodents.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You're destined for greatness, but you won't be the next Dalai Lama.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You have a magnifying glass, and you're not afraid to use it.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Don't worry, you'll have your mojo back soon enough.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Your unique style of dancing will draw strangers to you.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You're a genius. It's just that no one else has the capability to tap into that genius.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
If someone asked you to eat a whole ice cream cake, you could do it.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Give in to your desire.

CLASSIFIEDS SPONSERED BY
WIFFLE ROCK
WWW.WIFFLEROCK.COM

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates now Renting 2 bedrm $1050/1100, 3 bedrm $1350/1400 No last months rent, Free Heat & Hot Water, 2 full baths, AC. On busline Mon-Fri 10-5pm 253-7377

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

CHILDCARE

Looking for very responsible person to care for our 3 children, ages 4, 9, 11, in our Southampton home. Must have references and car. Great Summer job opportunity! Pay negotiable. Laura 413-527-9187.

EMPLOYMENT

BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Summer teenage bicycling trips. USA, Canada, Europe. Salary plus expense paid. Student Hosteling Program, P.O. Box 419, Conway, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, www.bicycletrips.com.

EMPLOYMENT

THE RED LION INN Looking for an awesome summer experience? Join our The Red Lion Inn for a fun filled location as a server, host, food runner, room attendant, and cocktail waitress needed. On Property Housing available! Interviews in Staff Just an hour west from UMASS. Call Eva@ (413) 298-1677

Play sports! Have fun! Save Money! Sports Camp in Maine. Coaches needed: Tennis, Basketball, Baseball, Water-sports, Ropes Course, Golf, Archery, and more. Work Outdoors and Have a Great Summer! Call Free: (888) 844-8080 or Apply: www.campcedar.com

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Seeking Summer Sales Staff for DAILY JOLT. Five-C AREA GUIDE. Work with local businesses to place ads. $2000-$4000. Email jobs@dailyjolt.com w/resume.

COOK full time experienced line cook. Great job in newly renovated kitchen. Great starting wage, comprehensive training, paid vacation, health & dental benefits. Apply in person between 12pm-4pm at Eastside Grill 19 Strong Ave. Northampton or Fax resume to 413-586-2406.

Lifeguards for the summer season in private club on Cape Cod. Must have Lifeguard Training, CPR, and First Aid. Competitive wages, meals provided. Call for an appointment- Wianno Club, Osterville. 508-428-6981

EMPLOYMENT

Painters wanted greater Springfield area 1-413-695-2645 or 188-277-9787

Now hiring line cooks, dishwashers and door guys. Apply at Amherst Brewing Company

Students wanted for a summer painting job. $400 - $600/ week. Experience not needed but a plus. All hired will go through a paid training program. Call 888-277-9787 or go to COLLEGEPRO.COM. Work with friends.

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.haus-promotions.com

FURNITURE FOR SALE

3 Rms of furniture for sale Graduating in May Prices negotiable Call Lauren at 253-4993

HOUSE FOR RENT

Sunny Garden 4 Bedroom House near Amherst Center on Bus Route. Air condition, washer/dryer. Quiet back street. $1540.00/month 587-9574 or RichmcKeown@earthlink.net

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female roommate wanted to share 2-bd apt in Sunderland. $418/mo. Includes heat, hot water, and cable. Available 6/1 or earlier. Call Lauren @ 860-604-6068.

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SERVICES

Math/Physics tutor available: $30/hour; $20/hour (travel); Call Dr. Kline (413-552-3805)

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SUMMER SUBLET

Want to live downtown this summer? 1 Bedroom, Above Newbury Comics Amherst Only 600/month. June-August. Call 549-9309

2 BR Apt for summer w/option to continue $820 or Best Offer Everything included Contact Angie_T_MV@yahoo.com or Jamie 617-435-0559

2 room in 3 bedroom house Fall option 253-9376

SUMMER SUBLET

2 bedrooms, fully furnished apartment, 1 full bath. Available June 1st-September 1st. Call Rachel Sexman @ 781-264-1512

WANTED

Compensation up to $7K+; loving, couples seeking egg donors ASAP! Healthy women, 21+, non-smokers with proven academic achievement. View www.tinytreasuresagency.com for info or e-mail apply @ tinytreasures.com for applications. Toll Free 1-866-357-6868. Refer to ad #UMA-117.

Teams Wanted for Summer Wiffleball league in Worcester. $600 in prize money. Call 508-735-9133 or www.masswiffl.com

Collegian Classifieds: 413-545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Punchless Minutemen fall

Bats go silent in sixth straight loss

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

After falling victim to suspect pitching in a weekend sweep at the hands of Atlantic 10 rival Fordham, the Massachusetts baseball team suffered through the exact opposite yesterday afternoon against Quinnipiac University.

After collecting 21 hits in three games over the weekend, the Minutemen (13-16 5-7 A-10) saw their bats go cold as they mustered just a pair of infield singles in falling 7-3 to the Bobcats in a non-conference contest at Earl Lorden Field.

Quinnipiac	7
UMass	3

UMass returns to action Thursday afternoon, when Bay State rival Boston College visits Earl Lorden Field for a non-conference matchup. First pitch is scheduled for 3 p.m.

Quinnipiac (22-14) used a five-run top of the fourth to erase a 3-0 deficit and never looked back, tacking on single runs in the eighth and ninth for the victory.

"Nothing went right for us today," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "It's not that we're making errors, there are just plays out there to be made that we're not making, and it's hurting us.

"I don't know if there's a hangover [from the weekend], but we just need to start playing better baseball and doing more good things on the field and at the plate."

Righthanded starter Chris Gresh went the distance for Quinnipiac and was charged with one earned run in earning his first victory of the season. He allowed just a bunt single and an infield roller while striking out four and walking three in throwing 107 pitches.

Freshman righthander Devin Barnett was the starter and loser for the Maroon and White after he coughed up five earned runs on five hits and five walks in four innings to fall to 2-2 on the season.

Junior righthander Anthony Gallo was strong out of the bullpen for UMass, working four innings and allowing just one run on six hits with one strikeout. Sophomore righthander Jason Hickey worked the ninth in relief of Gallo, allowing a run on one hit and one walk.

"Barnett's a control pitcher for us, and he just didn't have that control today," Stone said. "I thought Gallo did a nice job out of the bullpen and gave us a chance to hang in the game, but we just couldn't get anything going with the bats."

UMass posted a pair of runs in the bottom of the first, as junior rightfielder Jason Twomley walked, senior tri-captain Athas reached on an infield single and both scored on an error by Gresh.

The Minutemen added to their advantage in the

See BASEBALL on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior captain Sean Sarno and the Minutemen have lost six in a row after falling to Quinnipiac in a non-conference matchup.

IOC takes out insurance on Summer Games

By Stephen Wilson
Associated Press

LONDON — Guarding against terrorism and natural disasters in Athens, the IOC took the unprecedented step of buying insurance in case the Olympics are called off.

The International Olympic Committee's $170 million policy guarantees that the organization and affiliated national committees and sports federations have enough money to continue operations. The policy would not compensate individual victims.

The policy also doesn't cover corporate sponsors and TV networks, which have billions of dollars riding on the Athens Games. Many have their own insurance, and city organizers underwrite their own liability coverage.

IOC president Jacques Rogge said Tuesday insurance was "standard prudent judgment" and reflects no lack of confidence in the Aug. 13-29 games, which have been troubled by construction delays and security worries.

The IOC would not be covered if the games are called off because of the delays, IOC finance chairman Richard Carrion said.

The Athens Olympics, the first Summer Games since the Sept. 11 terror attacks, will be the most heavily guarded in history. The security budget is nearing $1 billion — more than three times the amount spent on protecting the 2000 Sydney Games.

Aside from terrorism, insurance experts say the main risk in Athens would be from earthquakes. The city straddles a fault line, and 143 people died in a quake in 1999.

Athens 2004 spokesman Stratos Safioleas said the organizing committee had no comment "on an IOC policy that concerns not just Athens, but the Olympic Games in general."

The IOC is paying about $6.8 million for the policy, and the syndicate is led by New York-based insurance giant American International Group Inc., according to two Olympic sources who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Joe Norton, spokesman for AGI in New York, declined to comment, saying the company had a policy of not breaching clients' confidentiality.

The policy covers full and partial cancellation for a "whole range of issues such as terrorism, earthquake, flooding, landslides, things like that," Rogge told The Associated Press by phone from Lausanne, Switzerland.

Carrion said the IOC negotiated the bulk of the coverage before the March 11 bombings in Madrid, Spain, that killed 191 people.

Rogge said the IOC also will negotiate individual cancellation policies for future Olympics, including the 2006 Winter Games in Turin, Italy, 2008 Summer Games in Beijing and 2010 Winter Olympics in Vancouver.

Rogge said security has long been the IOC's top priority and that Greece has done "everything humanly possible" to safeguard the games.

The Athens policy protects the bulk of the 28 international sports federations on the Olympic program and the 202 national Olympic committees represented at the games. Many of those organizations rely heavily on games-related revenue.

Rogge said the IOC needs just more than $200 million to keep running in the event of cancellation, and it has about $160 million in financial reserves.

"We will certainly have the required amount after the successful completion of the Athens Games," Carrion said.

Rogge said the IOC began exploring insurance coverage in 2001, but the industry was reluctant to offer terrorism coverage after the Sept. 11 attacks. The IOC had no coverage for the 2002 Winter Games in Salt Lake City.

Carrion said the IOC also considered taking out a credit line to absorb the bulk of the risk, or a combined insurance-credit arrangement for Athens and Beijing. The executive board decided in February to go with the standard contingency insurance.

Bills, Bledsoe agree to new deal to keep QB in Buffalo through 2006

ORCHARD PARK, N.Y. — Drew Bledsoe renegotiated his contract with the Bills on Tuesday, potentially securing his future in Buffalo through 2006.

The new three-year deal, which includes some incentive bonuses, will replace the old contract the Bills assumed when they acquired the quarterback from New England in 2002.

That original deal had seven years remaining on it, including a $7 million bonus due Bledsoe in November.

The Bills will no longer have to pay that bonus, and the team will get nearly $4 million of salary cap relief.

"Drew made some concessions for this year and the next couple of years," Bills president Tom Donahoe said. "It's not just about shuffling money."

The 11-year veteran was scheduled to make a base salary of $5.9 million this season, a figure that would balloon to $12 million in 2008.

"This is something I'm really excited about," Bledsoe said on a telephone conference call Tuesday afternoon. "At this point in my life, having a little extra money isn't going to make a big change in my life. This allows us to have stability, both personally and within the organization."

Bledsoe admitted he was hesitant to restructure the original deal, saying he was initially willing to risk being cut two months into the season if he wasn't performing.

But after realizing the specter of the $7 million bonus looming over the organization's head throughout the summer and into the fall, Bledsoe decided to seek out Donahoe.

"I know it would have been a distraction, one way or the other," Bledsoe said. "I've learned over my career that the more you can alleviate distractions the better off you are."

The renegotiation comes after Buffalo traded for a first-round pick in the NFL Draft on Saturday to select Tulane quarterback J.P. Losman, whom the team hopes to groom as Bledsoe's eventual successor.

Besides dealing away their first-round pick next year, the Bills also dealt two picks (a second- and fifth-rounder) in last weekend's draft to Dallas for the Cowboys' No. 22 pick.

"I'll do everything I can to teach him and help him along and help him develop as a quarterback," Bledsoe said about Losman. "There certainly won't be any information withheld from him by me."

Despite selecting Losman, the Bills maintained that Bledsoe would be their starter heading into next season.

"We still have great confidence in Drew, and we've told Drew that," Donahoe said. "But we have to prepare for tomorrow."

Bledsoe was supposed to be the team's quarterback for the long-term future when Buffalo acquired him two years ago in a trade with New England.

He was strong in his first season in Buffalo, setting 10 franchise passing records and helping the Bills to an 8-8 finish — a big turnaround for a team that won only three games in 2001.

His production tailed off miserably last season with the worst numbers in his 11-year career. The Bills offense finished 30th in the league, and Bledsoe took most of the blame for Buffalo's disappointing 6-10 finish.

"None of us were happy with how things went last year," Bledsoe said. "But I believe strongly and with confidence that we are going to be a very good football team this year that's going to be very hard for people to handle."

COURTESY BUFFALO BILLS

Former Patriots quarterback Drew Bledsoe will remain with the Buffalo Bills through the 2006 season after renegotiating his contract.

Cain inks pro deal

Former UM star signs with the Chicago Bears

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Former University of Massachusetts outside linebacker Jeremy Cain has signed a free agent contract with the National Football League's Chicago Bears, it was announced on Monday.

Cain becomes the first member of the 2003 Atlantic 10 champion Minuteman football team to sign a professional contract after helping lead UMass to a 28-19 record and a trip to the NCAA Division I-AA Playoffs during the past four years.

A native of Tamarac, Fla. and a graduate of St. Thomas Aquinas High School, Cain earned second team All-America honors from Don Hansen's National Weekly Football Gazette, along with being named a third team All-American by the Sports Network. He was also a first team All-Atlantic 10 selection, as well as a member of the All-East Region and All-New England first teams.

A Maroon and White tri-captain in 2004, Cain concluded the year ranked second on the team with 107 total tackles, including 73 solo stops. He also finished second on the squad with 14 tackles for loss, four quarterback sacks and 12 quarterback hurries in addition to recording three pass breakups, three forced fumbles, one blocked punt and an interception of quarterback Jeff Schwinn of Division I-A Kansas State.

In his four years in Amherst, No. 10 posted 363 total tackles, including 252 solo stops, along with 44 tackles for a loss and 15 sacks. He finished his career in November of last year ranked fourth on UMass' all-time solo tackles list, and fifth in total tackles.

Additionally, Cain was honored by the National Strength & Conditioning Association as an All-America Strength & Conditioning Athlete of the Year, which recognizes an individual's dedication to strength training and conditioning. He was nominated for the award by UMass strength and conditioning coach Bob Otrando.

"Jeremy Cain is dedicated to training 24 hours a day, seven days a week," Otrando said. "He does all the little things right, and with great focus.

"His dedication will be the reason he will be playing football on Sundays next year."

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Jeremy Cain, a 2003 UMass tri-captain and a second team All-America selection, signed a professional contract to play with the National Football League's Chicago Bears on Monday.

'Queer As Folk' comes back with unbashful gay pride

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

The battle for New England: UMass, Rhode Island set to clash

SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 129

Ways and Means presents yearly budget

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Staff

The yearly budget for the student activities trust fund was presented at last night's Student Government Association meeting, outlining the distribution of $1,383,885 to student organizations, agencies and business related financing on campus.

"I cannot stress to you how important this document is," Patrick Higgins, chair of the Ways and Means Committee, said during his presentation of the proposed budget for SGA next year. "The committee has put in countless hours. They have passed it unanimously."

Senators Raul Brens, Eduardo Bustamante, Aiysha Cooper, Gladys Franco, Linsay Lesser and Meredith Rice were voting members of the committee. Senator Michael Sheridan was deputy chair, and Senators Brian Roberts, Adrienne Girard and Josh Feldman were non-voting members. They signed the budget unanimously last Tuesday.

"Unanimously, they signed this budget as the best budget they could submit," Higgins said in his 27-minute presentation.

Higgins went through certain key points of the budget to help the Senators understand the 17-page packet they received last night. This budget is the plan for the $1,383,885 they expect to have from 17,085 students paying an $81 Student Activities Fee in addition to other revenue.

He highlighted several increases in the budget. The SGA will now be paying a graduate student to help with the computers within the SGA and its agencies. He or she "will systematically go through our computers and evaluate them," Higgins said.

There is also an increase for Capital Equipment Reserves to make sure that the computers and other technologies are up-to-date equipment.

Because of the availability of what Higgins called "one-time money" from this year's budget surplus, they allocated money for the Collegiate Readership Program.

"We have one-time money and we talked to students that liked [the program]," he said. He also said that the Ways and Means Committee will review it next year.

The final increase that Higgins pointed out was for increasing the funding to Registered Student Organizations by $40,000.

"As a rule we tried to make sure that each group could do something, get their name out on campus," Higgins said.

Overall, he broke down the spending for the Senators. Agencies got 43 percent of the budget, Student Governance got eight percent, RSOs received 13.8 percent, campus-wide programs 13.9 percent, Short Term Reserves 5.9 percent, and for Administrative Overhead, 15 percent of the budget will cover that "so that the RSOs don't have to see it," Higgins said.

Higgins estimates that even with increased RSO spending, the SGA will be financially strong until 2007.

The Senate will vote on it next week. Higgins pleaded with the Senators to ask him questions by visiting the SGA office or contacting him by phone or e-mail. He said he would make an appointment with anyone who asks to go through the budget line by line.

The Senate also discussed the ongoing election, the Pat Tillman editorial written by Rene Gonzalez in yesterday's Massachusetts Daily Collegian, and the Alcohol Task Force investigation made by Senator Tim Busiere.

The Senators passed 11 motions and failed just one.

Included in those motions was the Charter for the Office of ALANA Affairs. Last week, the Senate could not override President Jared Nokes' veto of the Charter. As promised, James Brennan, chair of

See SGA on page 3

Students speak out against violence

A group of about 75 students listen in front of the Campus Pond for a speak out, an event organized to allow victims of violence to share their stories, yesterday evening. The event is part of the "Take Back the Night" event continuing tonight.

By Michelle Rivera
Collegian Staff

About 75 students and community members came together last night to hear personal experiences and to support victims of sexual violence for the University of Massachusetts' second annual "Take Back the Night" event.

Last night's speak out, one of the two "Take Back the Night" events happening this week, was designed to give victims a voice and to raise awareness of violence against men and women. It was also for victims and supporters to publicly refuse to live in pain and fear of violence.

"This event showed that there is not one type of rape victim stereotype, and that there's not one kind of rape. If you're uncomfortable, you're violated," said freshman Jillian Croci.

The night began with a poem read by a victim of sexual abuse, Erika, who wishes that her last name not be used. The poem was entitled, "189 things a day," and it was about how, on average, a woman does 189 things a day to protect herself from becoming a victim of violence.

> "This event showed that there is not one type of rape victim stereotype, and that there's not one kind of rape. If you're uncomfortable, you're violated."
>
> -Jillian Croci

The guest speaker of the night was photojournalist Nobuko Oyabu, a rape survivor. Oyabu shared her experience with listeners, and spoke of how she overcame that experience and empowered herself. Oyabu said that by testifying against her perpetrator, she kept her responsibility of not allowing him to harm anyone else. Oyabu said that with being a photojournalist and artist, it's touching for her to see others understand her pain and have them open their hearts.

"You can combine your talents and past experiences and pain and make it something great," said Oyabu.

Throughout the night, many other sexual assault victims, both men and women, spoke out and shared their memories, struggles and empowerment.

One speaker, telling her story under conditions of anonymity, told the crowd that she wants to encourage victims to not feel guilty.

"I want to encourage women and say that it's okay to have sexual desire, and not have a man take that away from them," she said.

A male victim also shared his experience with sexual abuse. He was a victim of sexual abuse since the age of 8, and it continued to age 16. He told the crowd that he never spoke of his experience with anyone except his family and close friends.

Another speaker addressed the crowd, telling them that it was good to see so many women and men becoming empowered and becoming strong.

At the closing of the event, a

See SPEAK OUT on page 3

NPR newscaster encourages seeking adventure

By Amanda Bossi
Collegian Correspondent

"The last two times I came to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, my speeches had a purpose. This time I just made it up. It's my first foray into the world of self-help," joked National Public Radio's Corey Flintoff, who gave a lecture yesterday at Memorial Hall, titled "There's No Success Like Failure."

Flintoff is an evening newscaster for NPR, and delivers newscasts for NPR's program, "All Things Considered." He has been both a newscaster and a reporter with NPR's Washington, National and Foreign Desks since 1990.

"Adventure is the opposite of what happens when you leave college. If you have a choice between the next rung in the academic ladder or trying something new, be different and try something new," said Flintoff, who encouraged students to seek out adventure. He said that the worst piece of advice he ever received was to go to graduate school after college because he was unsure of what to do with his life.

Flintoff's jobs before working at NPR covered a wide range of fields. He worked as a novelist, a dog-musher and a commercial fisherman. He also worked as a skip tracer for a bill collection agency, locating people who fled town without paying their bills. As difficult as the job was, he liked digging up information and piecing together facts to find the person he was looking for. He said he also loved hearing the stories of the people he called.

"I didn't know it yet, but I was on my way to becoming a reporter," said Flintoff.

Flintoff moved to Alaska, after being devastated because his novel was rejected by numerous publishers. He said that although nobody welcomes failure, it's better to fail than not do what you truly want to do. He couldn't find a job in Alaska until one of his wife's colleagues suggested he check out the local radio station, Bethel, Alaska's bilingual English-Yup'ik Eskimo station. The next day, Flintoff was on the air.

"The great thing about Alaska is that critical jobs can be filled with people who have no expertise whatsoever," said Flintoff, which elicited laughs from the audience. He worked as a country western disc jockey at the station before he switched to reporting the police beat. He compared the stories he reported to those he heard as a skip tracer.

"If those stories were good, these ones were like maintining heroin," said Flintoff. "Behind every big reporter is a tragedy that helps them get their next big position."

According to Flintoff, it was his coverage of the Exxon Valdez oil spill that occurred at Prince William Sound in Alaska. His coverage won him a 1989 Corporation for Public Broadcasting Silver Award and helped him get work at NPR.

Flintoff said that he stayed in the news business for two reasons: "First of all, it's the only thing I can do, and secondly I love listening to the endless string of stories that come my way," he said.

Flintoff ended the lecture with a piece of advice he learned from a co-worker he had when he worked at the bill collection agency.

"When you can't be exactly what you want to be, maybe you can find a job that lets you do what you love," he said. "All I can tell you, though, is that whatever you heart's desire is, try that first."

Corey Flintoff, National Public Radio newscaster speaks in Memorial Hall yesterday afternoon.

Hobart hoedown?

University of Massachusetts and local authorities prepare for potential problems

By Morris Singer
Collegian Staff

Warm weather draws residents out of their homes to the quiet streets and lawns where neighbors relax as others stroll along Hobart Lane. There is a relaxed feel to the air, and the only sounds are of birds in the trees and of University of Massachusetts students lazily passing time in the afternoon sun with light-hearted conversation.

It's a week prior to the annual Hobart Hoedown, the celebration that last year turned ugly, resulting in 45 arrests and severe property damage. Yet, today, the drunken celebration seems distant from the peaceful atmosphere on Hobart Lane.

Despite the Lane's generally placid ambiance, many of those who have heard of the yearly celebration, or have experienced it first-hand, are gritting their teeth in anticipation of what this weekend might bring. Crowds of 2000 people are not uncommon at the Hoedown, public drunkenness is more frequent than respectful sobriety and middle-of-the-street bonfires can become as much a part of the setting as the roads on which they occur.

Some feel that the encroaching end of the semester warrants intense celebration, alcohol consumption and careless fun. Others worry that more violence would only bring a bad reputation to the University and the surrounding community.

UMass students have seen their share of riotous situations over the past year, including last year's Hoedown, several smaller disturbances in the fall and a February celebration of the Patriot's win in the Super Bowl.

The Hoedown, itself, has over a decade of troubled history and police intervention. Many are in agreement that last year's riot on North Pleasant Street, which came in conjunction with the 2003 Hoedown, was the worst violence in years.

Rioters last year threw glass bottles, rocks and lawn chairs at police officers, injuring 15 of them, and causing between $17,000 and $18,000 in damages to two Amherst Police Department cruisers. Information from APD indicated that a college-aged male sustained a stab wound during the evening. One male student was hit in the back of the head with an aluminum baseball bat and was taken away in an ambulance.

At one point, participants in the riot ignited a 40-foot pine tree at the entrance to Puffton Village Drive. They also disassembled a decorative stonewall, which they used as projectiles aimed at police officers. One car was overturned and a bus stop was burnt to the ground.

A number of students at the riot felt the action taken by police was unjustified or was too severe. Many indicated that they felt the police incited the riot. Others said that the police presence made it impossible to leave the scene, despite demands for their dispersal. Officers attempting to quell the riot beat students with clubs, sprayed them in the face with pepper spray, threatened them or cursed at them. One student who spoke to The Collegian said he felt he was arrested unjustly.

The situation took Amherst Police, working in conjunction with the UMass Police Department and the Massachusetts State Police, two hours to bring under control.

Dealing with disturbance

It's memories of this and of other past Hoedown events that worry long-time Hobart Lane resident Marcia Howard. Howard has lived on the street for 22 years, at the top of the small hill, where it is mostly private residents not affiliated with the university.

Howard complained of the parties, say-

See HOBART on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
CLARUS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
FEATURES EDITOR S. J. Port
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salsiker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merrett
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagnic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCES Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Riggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISER Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Amelia P. Lincoln
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ADAMS LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN SEMIWEEKLY SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

Daily Collegian

Gargano promises expulsion for destructive behavior

HOBART from page 1

ing they cause a blockage in the street, destruction of property and uncomfortable situations for the residents.

"Sometimes it's impossible to get back and forth to my own house," she said. "Kids are drunk and become verbally abusive when you try to get by. There's destruction of property. Lots of kids end up urinating all over the lawn."

The parties are the problem, Howard said. The way in which students have typically chosen to celebrate at this specific event that is troubling to her.

"I think that there are lots of ways to have parties and enjoy the spring that aren't violent and destructive and don't violate other people's right to freedom," she said.

Laure Van den Broeck, a resident just below the top of the street, who has been here for five months, said she's heard stories about the annual party and its related disturbances, including stone throwing and rioting.

"I should think that the police should prepare for it," she said.

What the town is doing

When asked about possible action the APD may have taken in preparation for the annual Hoedown event this year, Chief of Police Charles Scherpa calmly asserted no expectation of any problem.

"We expect that we'll give the students the benefit of the doubt that there won't be any rowdiness in town," he said last week. "I expect that there'll be some parties, but I don't expect that there'll be any type of rowdy atmosphere that developed last year."

His comments come at a time when many expect even more intense police action than occurred at the last Hoedown, including more officers and stricter rules.

Scherpa, in a composed and collected manner, denied on Friday the recent speculation, dismissing the items as "rumors" and "contingency plans."

"We have contingency plans if we need to and we don't expect to have to use any of them," he said. "They always involve area police departments, state police and all, but we don't expect to have to utilize any of that this year."

The chief backed away from discussing the nature of these plans, but did emphasize that the formulation of such strategy is a normal part of what the police force does on a regular basis.

"We will have our normal responses as always," he said, "and if things are escalated, then we have some other plans that we obviously have to have, regardless of what weekend it is."

"Nothing is different on other weekends," he continued.

However, a press release from the UMass News Office addressing work that area police departments have done specifically in preparation for the Hoedown indicated that APD and UMPD officers have trained jointly in learning how to manage large crowds.

Scherpa did concede that his department has purchased new equipment for use in controlling a riot, but said that the acquisition is an annual routine action the department takes.

"We update [our inventory] every year, depending on the technology and what's available," he said. "Have we bought anything new this year? Yes, we have. Have we added some things that we've had? Yes, we have."

Most students are likely not to participate in a riot, Scherpa said.

"I think [students] are educated enough to control their own emotions and to be able to police themselves," he said.

This represents a change in Scherpa's attitude toward students who participate in the Hoedown.

"Students seem to see this as a right of passage," Scherpa said of the riot, on a broadcast last year by Boston's WCVB-TV Channel 5.

"[The parties] happen every weekend and every evening in the streets of Amherst," he said in a press conference following last year's Hoedown. "Unfortunately we always have to break them up."

Scherpa also indicated in the conference that his department was looking into preventing the situation from becoming riotous in future years. Recently, however, he said that his department has no plans beyond a routine contingency strategy.

Scherpa's expectation that there will be no riot also stands in stark contrast to his opinion at last year's press conference.

"We have a history at Hobart Lane, and we know that if we let it get out of control, that it's disruptive," he said last May.

University police

The UMPD has prepared to deal with potential problems involving the Hoedown. This includes a $20,000 investment in riot-control equipment.

Because the Hoedown is an event that occurs off-campus, UMPD has placed a higher priority on maintaining a presence at University events Saturday, including the annual Spring Funk-o-Thon, which is expected to draw a crowd of 1,800 people. Also a priority is Orchard Hill Bowl Weekend, which will include events on both Friday and Saturday.

"If everything is okay on campus, we can and will be deferred to Hobart to protect University [property]," said Barbara O'Connor, Chief of Police at the UMPD, referring to University property located near Hobart Lane.

Disciplinary action

Michael Gargano, the vice chancellor for student affairs and campus life, has worked to prevent problems at the Hoedown by providing solutions through University disciplinary action.

Last year the University dealt with students who participated in the riot with suspensions, prosecution and other disciplinary actions. Students who participated in this and last semesters' disturbances faced immediate expulsion.

Gargano delivered a strong message about the consequences of participating in any way in a riotous situation this spring.

"Students who act out and endanger others ... are going to be dismissed from this University on the spot," he said. "They will find themselves in a real mess."

Gargano said he would consider even such actions as remaining at the scene of a riot, if one develops, as grounds for expulsion.

"Students cannot come back and say, 'I was in the wrong place at the wrong time,'" he said. "They've all had fair warnings."

For those who vandalize or destroy University property, Gargano had a more rigid statement:

"We'll sue everyone who is involved," he said.

According to Gargano, lawsuits will target not only individual students who engage in destructive behavior, but also their families. University students are most likely dependents of their parents, Gargano said, warranting litigation against the families of those involved.

"We're not going to have this kind of behavior — riotous behavior, endangering behavior, disrespectful behavior," he said.

The Code of Student Conduct

Gargano used the Code of Student Conduct as a justification of these policies. University policies, included in the Code, cover students in violation of the law or in violation of the Code, even when such violations occur outside of campus lines.

However, in Chapter IV of the Code, which refers to procedures pursuant to disciplinary actions, there is no mention of the same-day expulsions Gargano spoke of.

CSC Chapter IV, Paragraph B even suggests that students have 48 hours to request a judicial conference related to their charges. A designated University staff member may withdraw the charges during the conference.

According to the Code, the only way the University may act immediately is if the student withdraws from the school after charges are filed.

While the Code does indicate in Chapter VII that the Chancellor or the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs may impose restrictions immediately, including suspension, it refers to such restrictions as "interim."

According to the Code, students will meet with a designated University official prior to the imposition of such interim restrictions whenever reasonably possible, at which time the student will have the chance to tell his version of the facts. The official will then decide whether or not to impose the interim restrictions.

Nowhere in the Code is there any mention of the University's intent to litigate, nor is there mention that any litigation will include the families of those who are found responsible for the violations.

UMASS AMHERST
STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
Helping students protect their rights for over 30 years
Free Legal Advice,
Referrals, Representation and Counseling
for UMASS Students
Student & Worker Rights, Family & Criminal Law,
Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
Call 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256-0733
145 Main St. Northampton 586-8155

Rent One of Ours
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
POTTERS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
79 Sunderland Road North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

WELCOME TO Fabulous SOUTHWEST WEEK 2004
Monday, May 3rd
"VIVA LAS VEGAS"
Doors open at 11pm
Tuesday, May 4th
"HEY BIG SPENDER"
Casino Strip at the Pyramid 5pm 9pm
"A STAR IS BORN"
6pm
Wednesday, May 5th
"JAILHOUSE ROCK"
"AIN'T NOTHING BUT A HOUND DOG"
DC BBQ 1pm 7pm
Wednesday, May 5th
"A 'LIL LESS CONVERSATION"
10pm National Lampoon's Vegas Vacation
10:15pm Ocean's Eleven
All Wednesday events are in the SW Horseshoe
Thursday, May 6th
"WHAT HAPPENS IN VEGAS, STAYS IN VEGAS"
SISTER HAZEL
In Southwest Horseshoe 8pm
Friday, May 7th
"LEAVING LAS VEGAS"
On Southwest Pyramids 12pm 5pm
Note: No Backpacks, bottles or cans will be allowed at any event www.swagumass.com

Senate passes revised OAA charter

SGA from page 1

the Administrative Affairs Committee, had the Charter back for this week's meeting.

The Administrative Affairs Committee changed the Mission Statement of the Charter.

The debate settled, however, on the second major change to the Charter. The Committee had decided that the vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life should get to appoint the faculty and staff members to the board.

Senator Franco had not attended last Monday's meeting with the Committee and was angry about this change, which the Senate has debated several times.

"Apparently our voice doesn't count. I have been attending these meetings, I've been giving my opinions, and the committee just throws them out," she said.

The Senate settled on a compromise. The final version of the amendment said that the ALANA Caucus will appoint three faculty and staff members to the Board, but if they do not do so by May 1, then the Senate can make the choices.

Because that would give the Caucus only three days, for this year, the Senate agreed to give the Caucus until the first Senate meeting of next year.

In other motions, the Senate allocated a total of $3,035 from the financial reserves to Black Mass Communications for their Funk-o-Thon in the Curry Hicks Cage, and to the Asian American Student Association for their Asian Night in Bowker Auditorium.

This left $3,600 in the reserves with several groups coming to the Senate next week. The Senate voted against giving $1,992 to the Student Alumni Relations Society (STARS) for a trip to a convention. That money would have paid for eight students' registration fee. It lost in a vote of 18 for, 18 against, and one abstention.

From the remaining $2,400 in the Spring Events Fund, the Senate gave an emergency $2,285 for Southwest to have Sister Hazel perform.

The Senate also passed the Programming Board Charter and the process for space allocation in the Campus Center. The RSO Advocacy committee had been working on space allocation all year.

In one final motion, the Senate closed the loophole in the bylaws that allowed Nokes to not hear the last elections report during the Special Orders section of the agenda.

"This is to keep loopholes from impeding Senate business," Brennan said.

Students speak out

SPEAK OUT from page 1

candle light vigil was held where participants formed a circle and held a moment of silence to reflect.

Group organizers handed out pamphlets, and Every-woman's Center counselor advocates and educator advocates were marked with reflective arm bands, and were present to serve as anchored resources for anyone who needed them.

The second "Take Back the Night" event will take place tonight at 7 p.m. at the Campus Pond, where event participants will march and then gather together as its conclusion for a rally.

Both events have been organized by a small group of students who have been meeting every Wednesday since the beginning of the semester.

The events are co-sponsored by VOX — UMass, the Everywoman's Center, the women's studies department, Planned Parenthood, Sigma Pi Zeta, Earthfoods, Green-O, Sweets N More, Campus Center Catering Services, Coca-Cola, Yankee Candle Company and WMUA 91.1 FM.

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors

Beer:
Miller Lite & M.G.D. 30 pk cans...$18.49*
Molson Golden, Ice, Canadian 2/12 pk btl...$16.99*
Keystone 30 pk cans...$13.49*
Coors Light 20 pk btl...$12.99*
Millwaukee's Best 30 pk cans...$10.99*
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl...$10.99*
Molson XXX 12 pk btl...$10.99*
Corona 12 pk btl...$10.99*
Dogfish Head 6 pk btl...$6.99*

Wine:
Moet & Chandon 750 ml...$29.99
Casa Lapostolle Cuvee Alexandre Chardonnay 750 ml...$12.99
Beaulieu Vineyards Coastal Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 750 ml...$8.99
Chandon Fresco Brut & Extra Dry 750 ml...$8.99
Peachy Canyon Zinfandel 750 ml...$9.99
Papio Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1.5 lt...$7.99
Buckeley's Cabernet/Shiraz 750 ml...$7.99
Goats do Roam Red and White 750 ml...$6.99

Liquor:
Seagram's V.O. 1.75 lt...$24.99
Smirnoff & Smirnoff Twist 1.75 lt...$20.99
Crown Royal 750 ml...$19.99
Romana Sambuca 750 ml...$18.99
Jose Cuervo Tequila 750 ml...$16.99
Seagram's 7 1.75 lt...$15.99
UV Vodka 1.75 lt...$15.99
Rubinoff Vodka all flavors 1.75 lt...$9.99

*all beer prices plus deposit
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon. - Sat. 9am - 11pm
SALE 4/29 THROUGH 5/5
Now Open Sundays Noon to 11pm

TAKE A BOW
THE ONE YOU WANT.
THE WAY YOU WANT IT.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

BLACKOUT 04' PRESENTS...
EVERYTHING'S POLITICAL
GEO POLITICS... BUSH ...RACIAL PROFILING...IRAQ...UMASS POLICY... VIOLENCE...UNEQUALITY...
JOIN US IN AN EVENING OF SPOKEN WORD, POETRY, COMMUNITY AND MORE
Thursday, April 29TH, 04
7-10 PM
Top of Campus
Free Admission!
Refreshments
SPONSORED BY THE BLACK STUDENT UNION

Hey Seniors!
Don't have a clue how to look for a job?
Come to a Job Search Made Easy Workshop and find answers to your questions!
Today, Thursday, April 29
10:30 am
12 pm
1:30 pm
Tuesday, May 4
1 pm
3:30 pm
All of the above workshops are located in 104 Career Services.
CareerServices
For more information, go to www.umass.edu/careers or call us at 545-2224

GRAPHICS
the Collegian is hiring for next semester
College Street Writers
It's spring Time!
CAMPUS PARKING NOTICE
Come talk to Scott, Shannon, or Rachael or call 545-1864
105 Campus Center Basement
Freshmen and Sophomores are encouraged to apply

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

To our readers:

In yesterday's Editorial/Opinion section of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, a column titled "Pat Tillman is not a hero: he got what was coming to him" appeared. In the piece, graduate student Rene Gonzalez wrote about the death of former NFL player and Army Ranger Pat Tillman, who was killed during a skirmish in Afghanistan last Friday.

A flood of feedback has poured in, nearly all of which is harsh criticism of either Gonzalez's words or of The Collegian's decision to run the column. In fact, reader response has been so great that we would like to take this opportunity to respond to our readers.

Rene Gonzalez is a graduate student at the University of Massachusetts who occasionally submits columns to The Collegian Editorial/Opinion page. His views do not reflect the opinion of our editorial board or staff. Our decision whether or not to run a submission is not based on whether we agree with the opinion of the writer, but on the backbone of journalism: the First Amendment.

The Collegian, as a news organization, considers the First Amendment our most valued asset. Our decision to publish Gonzalez's column — an opinion piece written by a member of our campus community — is an exercise of our First Amendment rights.

One of the most important points that we at The Collegian want to stress to our readers is the nature of the Editorial/Opinion page. Not one columnist or student's opinion printed on our page represents that of the paper at large. Gonzalez's opinion is his own, and it runs in our pages as a voice on our campus. The Editorial/Opinion page is designed to give a wide variety of students a chance to speak through a large-scale medium. With that comes the possibility of discourse and disagreement, and that is an accepted reality for us.

We would also like to draw attention to the fact that Collegian columnists have commented on Tillman's death, and life, on a number of occasions in the last few days. Two columns have been published in praise of Tillman's life and actions, including one column that ran adjacent to Gonzalez's.

The opinion of Gonzalez, though it dissented from that of the other two columns, deserved its space within the debate. Through feedback on the Collegian Web site, phone calls and e-mails we have received, it has become very obvious to us at The Collegian that Gonzalez's opinion has caused a lot of controversy and anger. We cannot, however, compromise the mission of our publication for the sake of ensuring the constant happiness of our readership. Gonzalez has just as much right to voice his opinion as anyone else. We at The Collegian hope that our presentation of this issue proves that we are open to all opinions, not only the most popular.

We welcome all feedback on the issue, and hope that this represents growth in our relationship with you, the readers.

Sincerely,
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board

Foster's, it's not Australian for beer

Peter Lothian

As I begin to prepare for my trip home to Australia, I look back at my year at UMass — a slide show of good friends, great times and awesome memories that spin on a reel of New England adventures that I will always carry with me. From the Superbowl 'celebrations' and hockey chants, to Noam Chomsky's lecture; and from the power towers of Charlie's to the off campus "keggers," my time here has been a unique experience. Although as interesting as the cup configurations of Beirut (beer pong) and the rules of Asshole can be, the most fascinating aspect of collegiate subculture has been what Americans think of themselves.

In almost all my classes, lecturers ask their students how they think the outside world perceives Americans. I myself have been surveyed with questions as to what I think, as if I am some sort of expert on how the rest of the world perceives the U.S. I am fortunate enough to be on my fourth trip around the world, and have spent a majority of that time traveling with Americans both at home and abroad to put forward a valued opinion.

Whilst living in Washington D.C. I shared the horror of Sept. 11, and saw the shock wave it caused on the self-esteem of the American identity. As the dust settled around ground zero, many Americans began asking the probing question "Why do they hate us?"

Hollywood played on this in, among other instances, their Eurotrip commercials, assuming that the simimlity between the French, English and Germans was their joint hatred of Americans. It seems that overnight, a new wave of conservative Americans was born who are not only afraid of flying but more afraid of the outside world.

Before putting forward an answer, I'd like you to consider the following: I am from Australia. What images come to mind? Do you picture a tanned man hunting a crocodile whilst chugging a Foster's while surfing? An interesting image, but I would like to set the record straight about a lot of the questions I have been asked while in the U.S. I do not own, nor do I ride a kangaroo to school; I do not know Steve Irwin nor do I wrestle crocodiles; Vegemite CAN be made palatable; not everyone in Australia drives tractors; a dingo did not steal my baby; and most of all Foster's is not Australian for beer; in fact I can't name any Australian who drinks it.

With that said it is easy to see the integral role cultural stereotypes play in how we interact with each other in this brave new world of global interconnectedness. Just from watching the discovery channel or such culturally perverse movies such as "Crocodile Dundee" or "Priscilla: Queen of the Desert" the image you have of Australians is a distortion of the truth. For example, there are people in Australia like Steve Irwin — I've met them — however, for the most part, Australians live in cities near the beach and see kangaroos and crocodiles in the same place you do: in a zoo.

Foster's is not Australian for beer; in fact I can't name any Australian who drinks it.

If such a large misconception can come from these media sources, then what do you think the effect of CNN and MTV's broadcasts of certain war-mongering oil barons, or Jessica Simpson could be on the outside world's view of the U.S.? What skewed versions of Americans are these media painting?

In the last three years, I have spent an immense amount of time with Americans both at home and in the U.S. I have lived, traveled, bartended, lifeguarded, road tripped, laughed, and partied both at home and in remote corners of the world such as England, Southeast Asia, Spain, and Canada with Americans from all over the nation. I have seen Americans at home and abroad in some of the most extraordinary "you had to be there" moments. I consider many Americans great mates and have been made a part of the family at several amazing Christmas and Thanksgiving dinners. Because of these experiences, I can say with all certainty: the world does not hate Americans, it just doesn't know them.

The problem is that not everyone has had my experiences with Americans, and thus I urge this generation of Americans to get out into the world and show everyone the compassion and openness that the other exchange students and I have experienced here. Don't be afraid; take the risk we took by coming to the U.S. So study abroad, study at sea, learn another language, teach English in another country, but don't forget to get to know the locals. My best memories of my travels are laughing at dinner tables with people from remote corners of the world, there is no better feeling than to laugh and relax at a dinner table in a foreign country with your mates the locals. Don't be the person whose only trip outside the U.S. was to pass out on a beach in Cancun, Acapulco or Australia. Get out into the global village and make our world an amazing place.

Peter Lothian is a UMass exchange student, studying abroad from Australia.

Happy Birthday to Israel

Gilad Skolnick

Congratulations on turning 56 years old. Many would not have thought that you'd make it through such a difficult time, but you did. You've been made fun of, beat up, and teased. I applaud you on making it and I'm proud of you, but you should be proud of yourself too, you're now well educated and successful.

The United Nations in 1948 granted you independence, and since then after 2000 years of exile, Jews from all over the world have been able to return to you. They were able to escape persecution, death, discrimination, and racism all over the world by coming to you. Perhaps that's why over a hundred UMassians converged on the lawn outside the campus center this past Tuesday to celebrate your birthday.

With the largest number of hi-tech start-ups per capita in the world and having attracted venture capital at rates exceeding most European countries, you have proportionately the highest number of university graduates in the world according to ijpost.com.

You've gone to great lengths to help save human lives. I think perhaps too much at times. Last year you sent many of your own soldiers to go house by house to root out Palestinian terrorists in the city of Jenin, who were responsible for blowing up buses full of Israeli civilians. In that process dozens of young Israeli soldiers and several dozen Palestinian terrorists were killed according to CNN.com. You could have easily bombed the area with your air force, killed the necessary people and not lost one single Israeli life, but you didn't because you were afraid that Palestinian civilians might get hurt.

You've had to deal with Palestinian teenagers and children who have strapped on explosives and rusty nails in an effort to kill civilians. You've had to deal with Palestinian mothers who have blown themselves up in your buses and malls. You've had to deal with Palestinian terrorists who had no problem attacking you with rockets from schools and other densely populated areas where it would be hard for you to return fire. You've had quite a challenge fighting a side that does not value human life, especially innocent human life.

Your poorest segment of society, the most helpless, has been targeted time and time again. Those that can not afford any car and have to rely on public transportation to get to work or school are the ones who get blown up. They have no other way of arriving to work, they have to either starve or risk getting torn apart to shreds.

Hopefully in the nearby future there will be a Palestinian state side by side with Israel. But for that to happen, Israel needs to have a partner to negotiate with.

But hopefully soon we can celebrate the birthday of a Palestinian state too. Hopefully in the nearby future there will be a Palestinian state side by side with Israel. But for that to happen, Israel needs to have a partner to negotiate with. Not a partner who sees murdering college students as they eat in their cafeteria as a negotiating tool. Not a partner that supports terrorist groups such as Hamas who see blowing pregnant women to bits as legitimate. But a real partner, one that is willing to recognize Israel's right to exist and the right of Israelis to live. You need two for peace.

Right now Israel has no partner for peace; Israel has a dictator to negotiate with, who is known for supporting terrorists, is corrupt, and is known for notoriously lying. Yasser Arafat currently has been hoarding over a billion in aid money in his coffers according to a recent "60 Minutes" report.

I want to celebrate the independence of a Palestinian state next year; I want to celebrate a state that does not see murder as acceptable. The logic that it is justified to murder the innocent, who have done nothing, is the kind you hear from a patient in the criminally insane unit of a mental hospital.

In the 1967 Khartoum Resolutions, the Arab states established that there shall be absolutely no negotiations at all with Israel. In 2000 Arafat walked out of peace negotiations with Israel and refused to continue them. Instead he called for jihad, martyrs and bloodshed according to honestreporting.com. One doesn't have to be a poly-science major to understand that the leader of the Palestinians clearly in not interested in a Palestinian state or any sort of democracy, just since 1990 Israel has had six different prime ministers; since the 1960's the Palestinians have had just Arafat.

I'm more pro-Palestinian than the Palestinian's own leader, Arafat. I want there to be a Palestinian state, but Arafat has shown through his actions that the only kind of state that he's interested in is a constant state of terror.

What is Israel to do if it has no one to negotiate with? Hopefully next year when I wish Israel a happy fifty-seventh birthday, I'll be able to wish a happy birthday to a Palestinian state too.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

NARROW REPORTING

I am writing in response to the editorial in Tuesday's Collegian, titled "Another obstacle for same-sex marriage." The article commented on the recent meeting of the Massachusetts Justices of the Peace Association and highlighted the point that the chief legal counsel to the Governor announced that if a Justice feels that he or she cannot fulfill his or her oath of office (as in, perform a same-sex marriage), then that Justice should resign from his/her position. The opinion article then went on to say that this would result in a drastic shortage of Justices, which will then result in the inability of gay couples to get married.

Apparently, this is also "another way for [Gov. Mitt] Romney to do everything in his power to prevent the inevitable [same-sex marriage]." I feel that this assumption is entirely incorrect. How can this be a ploy of Romney's if this announcement is ensuring that the marriages occur (which he is trying to prevent)?

I am a friend of three different Justices here in the Amherst area, one of whom is my mother. My mother was at the meeting this Sunday and she told me that the press (and apparently The Collegian as well) only reported on that one statement from the entire meeting. The reporters neglected to report that there were only a handful of Justices who had expressed concerns with the new law. Even if these individuals are encouraged to resign, how can that be anything but a positive thing? Would Massachusetts want a Justice of the Peace to remain in his/her position if s/he refused to marry a couple based on their race? Of course not. So why should we be upset that we are encouraging Justices to resign if they refuse to follow this new marriage law on same-sex marriages?

The Collegian also failed to point out that there are two groups in favor of same-sex marriage that have Web sites where Massachusetts Justices can submit their names so that individuals are aware that they are 'same-sex marriage friendly.' Although all Justices will be required to perform these marriages, it is comforting that some of them would go out of their way to show that they support the new law.

Emily Katzman
UMass Student

A REVOLUTION HAS BEGUN

As I walked through the Student Union today, a sign grabbed my attention. The sign read "Issues, Not Race-Support Pat Higgins." I stood there in disbelief with a strange sense of anger and sadness. It was obvious this sign was directed at the campaign to change our University that has been led by Eduardo Bustamante. Bustamante has led his campaign with a platform of positive social change and justice for the people. He draws on the issues of diversity, instating a real democracy, and creating a cohesive community at UMass. Unlike other candidates, he faces the issues of race and diversity on campus head on.

Standing up for diversity is not playing the race card, it is embracing the diversity of our campus and our community. It is giving minorities a voice when they have deserved to have one for so long. It is at the core of creating a unified student body and University.

Through the efforts of Bustmante and the many students that support his cause, a revolution has begun. This revolution begs for social progress through the immediate efforts of students working together. It demands truth, honesty, and values in politics. It demands addressing the real issues of our campus and working together to create social change.

I urge you to stay active on campus and demand respect for your education and your campus community.

Nora Ritchie
UMass Student

A LACK OF SYMPATHY AND RESPECT

I cannot believe the things that were written in the "Pat Tillman is not a hero article." It is fine to express your opinion on not supporting the war, but do not go and say negative things about the people that are over there. Also, before writing this article, this "western mass. liberal, graduate student, journalist" should have done some background work. Tillman did not want to be seen as a hero. He turned down interviews, he stayed with the lower paying Cardinals out of loyalty, and he signed up for the war because, as Tillman said himself, "I really haven't done a damn thing in terms of laying my life on the line."

I heard many other people express their sadness and anger about this terrible article written with no sympathy at all, and I hope they have expressed their concerns as well. If this journalist wants to disrespect our soldiers and call them idiots and GI Joe's then he should go back to his country where they seem to call people laying on their lives on the line for their country, "idiots."

Megan Cayer
UMass Student

GOD BLESS PAT TILLMAN

Rene Gonzalez, author of "Pat Tillman is not a hero: he got what was coming to him," is responsible for the most disgusting, ignorant, and insulting articles I have ever read. I, as every single person I have discussed the Pat Tillman tragedy with, do believe that Pat Tillman was a hero. Do I think this because of a "knee jerk" reaction based on conditioning by "America is #1 propaganda bull?" No, I believe this because it is an irrefutable fact.

According to Rene, only he is immune to this propaganda because he lives "outside the American borders." Not only does this geographic distinction enable him to have an all-knowing understanding of the thought process of every single American citizen, but he also professes to understand the personal motivations of Pat Tillman himself and his reasons to enlist in the Army Rangers. According to Rene, it is clear that Pat Tillman left a $3.6 million contract, all the comforts and perks of being an NFL celebrity, friends and family, and oh yeah, not to mention a young wife and a newborn child, to go off and satiate his need to act out his "nationalist patriotic fantasies forged in years of exposure to Clint Eastwood and Rambo movies."

But of course Rene doesn't expect us to believe his theory just based on the fact he's from Puerto Rico and can think clearly unlike all of us brainwashed, zombiefied American flag toting morons. No, his evidence that Pat Tillman sacrificed his life to do a Rambo impersonation is "I could tell he was that type of macho guy from his scowling, beefy face on the CNN pictures."

It boggles the mind. He even decides to note that in his neighborhood in Puerto Rico, Tillman would have been called a "pendejo," an idiot. He also suggests that Tillman was an even bigger idiot because he wasn't forced to fight for his country; he wasn't forced out of governmental draft or educational or financial need. The fact that Tillman volunteered (just like the rest of the men and women in our armed forces) makes Tillman an even bigger idiot, as opposed to "Ramon or Tyrone" who would join the armed forces out of necessity.

Maybe if this were Rene's home country, he'd feel differently. Maybe if it were his country that was attacked in the fashion that ours was, he'd understand. But things being as they are, Rene feels comfortable criticizing this country for retaliating against a terrorist organization that murdered 3,000 people and labeling any of the "idiots" that fight for this cause and lay down their lives, as brainwashed, Clint Eastwood wannabes. He writes these things while sleeping under the blanket of protection that these very soldiers provide with her. And he writes these things out of a level of ignorance and bitterness that I find appalling.

If Pat Tillman is the measure of an "idiot" in Rene Gonzalez's Puerto Rican neighborhood, then he is the measure of a "hero" in my American neighborhood. God bless Pat Tillman, his family, and the rest of our troops.

Micheal J. Peardon
UMass Student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Funk-o-Thon' highlights Blackout 2004

By Monique Jemmott
Collegian Staff

The end of spring semester, often associated with final exam blues, and students becoming increasingly anxious for summer vacation, can now also be affiliated with a legacy in the African, Latino/a, Asian/ Pacific Islander, and Native American community.

The Black Mass Communication Project (BMCP), in collaboration with University Production and Concerts, The Cape Verdean Student Alliance, and the Black Student Union will bring Blackout 2004 to the campus this weekend. The event is expected to draw up to 5,000 attendees with an array of talent.

Blackout pulls together a series of events that have been Valley traditions for students of the ALANA community in the Five College area for nearly 30 years.

The weekend consists of four major events. The first is the 20th Annual Malcolm X Picnic, which takes place all day Saturday. The picnic fills the Southwest horseshoe with Five College alumni, students, and community members. The activities include a basketball tournament, a female flag-football game, outdoor vendors, as well as performances.

The picnic is followed by one of the largest parties in University of Massachusetts history — the "Funk-o-Thon." This event alone has been known to attract as many as 2,000 party-goers from the Valley as well as neighboring cities such as Hartford, Boston, and New York. This year the "Funk-o-Thon" celebrates its 25th anniversary. This year the event will change location from the Student Union Ballroom where it has been held since its inception to the Curry Hicks Cage athletic facility.

Following these events on Sunday afternoon is the annual Sugar Cane Festival, sponsored by the Cape Verdean Student Alliance. This event consists of a soccer game and barbecue and lasts all day on the UMass soccer field.

The weekend will conclude with the Spring Concert, put on by University Productions and Concerts. The show, which has brought acts such as the Roots, Ludacris, and 50 Cent in the past, will give UMass students a chance to see some of today's hottest acts in concert, free of charge. This year' performers will include J records recording star Busta Rhymes, underground hip-hop sensation Jurassic 5,and jam-band The Slip.

"We're making history here," stated Nicole Echemindea, vice president of BMCP, who has been responsible for such events as "Jeans and T-Shirts," and the West Indian Bash. "People only associate these large events such as this for people of color as only happening at black colleges. It's nice to know that we're building a legacy for ourselves. The groundwork has been laid by our predecessors and now it can go down in history as one nice neat package known as Blackout."

Music industry sues 477 computer users, including college students

By Ted Bridis
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The recording industry sued 477 more computer users Wednesday, including dozens of college students at schools in 11 states, accusing them of illegally sharing music across the Internet.

The Recording Industry Association of America, the trade group for the largest labels, praised efforts by colleges and universities to use technology and school policies to crack down on music piracy on their computer networks. But it said the most egregious offenders on campus deserved to be sued.

"There is also a complementary need for enforcement by copyright owners against the serious offenders to remind people that this activity is illegal," said the group's president, Cary Sherman.

The recording industry filed its latest complaints against "John Doe" defendants, identifying them only by their numeric Internet protocol addresses. It said lawyers will work through the courts to request subpoenas against the universities and some commercial Internet providers to learn the defendants' names.

Campus officials at Mansfield University in Pennsylvania warned students months ago about requests from the recording industry to crack down on copyright infringement on its computer networks.

It threatened to unplug the Internet connection for each student identified by the recording industry as illegally sharing music, until the student removed all software used to distribute songs online.

"Not everyone agrees that downloading and file-sharing is copyright infringement," wrote the school's technology director, Connie L. Beckman. "While this may be debatable, Mansfield University is required to comply with the law."

The latest filings brings the number of lawsuits filed by the recording industry to 2,454 since last summer. None of the cases has yet gone to trial, and 437 people so far have agreed to pay financial penalties of about $3,000 as settlements.

The trade group said the newest lawsuits targeted students at Mansfield; Brown University in Providence, Rhode Island; Emory University in Atlanta; Georgia Institute of Technology; Gonzaga University of Spokane, Wash.; Michigan State University; Princeton University in New Jersey; Sacred Heart University of Fairfield; Conn.; Texas A&M University; Trinity College of Hartford, Conn.; Trinity University of San Antonio; the University of Kansas; University of Minnesota and Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

'Queer As Folk' back with marriage in mind

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Gale Harold as Brian, left, and Randy Harrison as Justin embrace in this scene from Showtime's "Queer as Folk," in this undated publicity photo. The Showtime drama, in its fourth season, airs Sundays at 10 p.m. EDT.

By Lynn Elber
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Producers Ron Cowen and Daniel Lipman figure they have bragging rights when it comes to putting the "queer" into television.

Their Showtime drama "Queer As Folk" preceded "Queer Eye for the Straight Guy" by three years. Unlike Bravo's G-rated makeover show, Cowen and Lipman also brought steamy, unabashed gay sexuality to TV.

They're unabashedly proud of the show's impact.

"Now people are used to seeing gay personas, gay characters," Lipman said. "I think 'Queer As Folk' had a little something to do with people perceiving gay people in a way they hadn't before, and with gay people perceiving themselves."

In the fourth season (10 p.m. EDT Sunday) and with a significant change in the political and social climate, Cowen and Lipman are eager for viewers to take note of the show's immediacy.

"Gay people and gay issues certainly are in the spotlight now, in a way they have never been before," said Cowen, citing the growing controversy over gay marriage.

"I don't think 'Queer As Folk' has ever been more relevant than it is now," said Lipman, echoing his personal and professional partner. Their other credits include the groundbreaking AIDS movie "An Early Frost" and the NBC series "Sisters."

They have been stirred by the fight for same-sex marriage and the resistance to it, which they called an insult and threat to homosexuals. Their creative response is an emboldened show.

In an earlier season, two lesbian characters engaged in a sweet commitment ceremony; this year, the producers said, there will be a wedding. Gay bashing, which in the first season was greeted with a sense of helplessness, sparks a far different response this time out.

Justin, played by series co-star Randy Harrison, hears an impassioned call to arms at a community meeting and joins a vigilante group — the colorfully named Pink Posse — to target attackers.

"That speech is very important because it raises the question of how much are you willing to take before you stand up and say, 'I've had enough and I'm going to fight back,'" Cowen said. "It's certainly a question that needs to be asked, when is enough enough?"

He said he had enough when President Bush supported a constitutional ban on same-sex nuptials.

"It's creating second-class citizens, it's making gay people subhuman because they don't have the same rights as everyone else," Cowen said. "It opens the door for prejudice, perhaps even violence, because the president is saying gays are not the same as straight people."

The show was completed well before it started airing, making inclusion of the marriage issue seem prescient. But the producers credit their alertness to time spent in Canada, where the series films.

Same-sex marriage has been declared legal by provincial courts in three Canadian provinces which, together, represent more than half the country's 32 million people. Canadian Prime Minister Paul Martin promised to introduce a bill to legalize it.

"It certainly made an impression upon us as Americans living in a foreign country that gay people have certain rights we don't back home," Cowen said.

He and Lipman say they're grateful to have a forum in "Queer As Folk" and point out they never shied away from using it.

Cowen ticks off a list of issues they've tackled, including AIDS discrimination; relationships between HIV-negative and positive men; drug and steroid addiction and adoption.

The wide-ranging topicality may have been clouded early on by the show's sexuality, embodied by freewheeling stud Brian (Gale Harold), Cowen suggested.

"People were so shocked they didn't see the other aspects of the show. All they saw was Brian's behavior," he said. That included club carousing and a succession of one-night (or shorter) stands.

Cowen and Lipman contend the sex scenes were honest, not gratuitous. To them, it was a chance to finally give homosexual passion a bit of the screen space reserved for heterosexuals.

But they discovered that not all gays felt the same way.

"A lot of gay people feel it's dirty laundry and they don't want people to see it," Lipman said. "But sex is a big part of the gay community. To deny it ... is not real."

Others in the gay community embraced the depiction, he said, and he believes time will vindicate the approach. He likes to imagine the show in DVD collector boxes with a place on fans' shelves.

"I always felt 'Queer As Folk' would be a reflection of where gay people stood, where the issues were, where the gay community was at the turn of the 21st century," he said. "So we try to be as reflective of what's going on as possible."

'Eve' and her two friends take a stab at 'mama's boys'

Original Sin
Eve

Q: I just started dating this guy who wants to know my past experiences in detail. I am a very open and honest person, and I have no problem talking about my history with guys. But ever since I told him how many guys I have been with, he has been acting strange. But I keep reminding him that the past has passed, and we should look more in the future. Now I regret telling him. When is too much information too much? – J.C.

A: I think you need a serious wake up call. Never, ever, ever, tell a guy how many other guys you've had. Guys like to think they are your first. Seriously.

No one wants to feel like another number on your list. If they insist on knowing, answer lightly and half the number of real experiences if you must. I'm sure he feels inadequate and paranoid, and it might lead to future jealousy. Try and downplay what you have already said, and try not to repeat this mistake in the future. Guys prefer inexperienced girls. It just makes them feel important and worthy in your life. Some information is better left for coffee-talk with girlfriends only.

My two girlfriends and I have three things in common; we have all been heart-broken once, we are all dating various men, and we find humor in mama's boys. But I also think it is safe to say we may also have poor taste in the guys we like. And as hard as it is to admit, we can be pretty cruel when it comes to the guys we do not like. And those are the guys that probably deserve to be liked the most. So why do we insist on poking fun at deserving men when we all get together? Shouldn't we be flattered when the men in our lives get a little emotional?

My first girlfriend is presently dating one of the better looking guys on campus. He is notorious for his appeal, and has slept with almost every girl in his living vicinity. Except one. The more my girlfriend refuses him, the more docile he becomes. And the less she cares, the more he wants. Only until yesterday did I understand how much more he would like. And all we could do was laugh. Must I reiterate? Clichéd statements such as, "What are we?" and "I want to be exclusive" are reserved for women only. How could this reputable player suddenly become a mama's boy? And why do we laugh when a guy's feelings are involved? But then again, why do we cry when they don't?

My other girlfriend has no problem riding herself of an oversensitive type. Her last beau was finished after a week of incessant cuddling and adoration. And when I met him, all I could say was, "You are way too nice, get a backbone and be a man." All while he would gaze longingly into her eyes and tell her how beautiful she was. And when her last button had been pushed, all she could say was, "Are you serious? This will never work, please leave." And that was that. She has never had tolerance for mushy intimacies, nor will ever have time for Hallmark moments. But somehow she still happens to like the idea in theory. And at least she knows what she wants is not always what she needs in reality. So our only choice is to laugh.

As for myself, I can be a guys' harshest critic. And they have no idea. I will easily admit to spending most of my free time describing a ridiculous mama's boy situation. And I will easily admit that it may be the highlight of my day. Whether it is a plea to sleep over, a simple "when can I see you again" question, or even an "I miss you" comment, all tend to be ridiculed with my girlfriends the next day. But now I question; why do the guys that we care about not care? When will this viscous one-sided cycle end? Could three broken hearts be the evil root to our cynicism? Mama's boys should be a girl's treasure, not a topic of humorous conversation. Maybe it is not so funny after all. Maybe it is time we all start laughing at ourselves.

Eve is pen name for a love guru attending UMass who knows the ins and outs of every relationship. You can ask Eve for advice by e-mailing her at eve_originalsin@yahoo.com. "Original Sin with Eve" runs every Thursday in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Focus Testers Needed for a Playboy Themed Sim Game

PLAYBOY

THE MANSION

2 hour sessions at Cyberlore Studios in Northampton, MA
Food and beverages provided to participants.
Males and females needed.
If interested, please send:
• Name, e-mail and phone
• List of favorite games
To: focus@cyberlore.com

Where are YOU living next semester?

CHECK OUT PUFFTON VILLAGE!

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.

PUFFTON VILLAGE
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413-549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

STA Travel's Best of Summer

> This ain't your parents' summer vacation.

»Europe

The total trip: 7 countries. 11 days
$1,355

Special Student Airfare:

	Apr - Jun	Jun - Oct
London	$315	$527
Paris	$315	$527
Amsterdam	$315	$527

Cheap Sleeps:
London- St. Christopher's Village $28/night
Paris- Aloha Hostel $24/night
Rail:
Eurail Flexipass (10 days in 2 months) $488
Eurailpass (15 days) $614

»Australia (and New Zealand)

Oz Explorer: Sydney to Cairns your way
$1,259

Special Student Airfare:

	Apr - Jun	Jun - Oct
Auckland	$315	$527
Sydney	$315	$527
Melbourne	$315	$527

Cheap Sleeps:
Auckland- Central Backpackers $16/night
Sydney- Wake Up! Hostel $23/night
Melbourne- Base Hostel $26/night
Cairns- Gilligan's Hostel & Resort $20/night

»Adventure

"Best of Peru" 9 days of Inca & Machu Pichu
$1,595

Special Student Airfare:

	Apr - Jun	Jun - Oct
San Jose	$315	$527
Bangkok	$315	$527
Cape Town	$315	$527

Cheap Sleeps:
San Jose- Pangea Hostel $14/night
Bangkok- Wanglod Hostel $16/night
Cape Town- Ashanti Lodge $14/night
Santiago- La Casa Roja $8/night

Check out our "Best of Summer" and "Let's Go" brochures

BOOK YOUR TRIP NOW!
Room 224 Campus Center Way
1 Campus Center Way
University of Massachusetts
(413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
ONLINE • ON THE PHONE • ON CAMPUS • ON THE STREET

Olympics may be tainted by drug use competitors. Track and field's world governing body, the IAAF, is already on record saying it might reduce suspensions for any athletes who cooperate.

OLYMPICS from page 8

It's hard to imagine a more poisoned atmosphere than the one that hangs over those U.S. athletes competing for a place on the team.

"There's a lot of people out here every day giving their heart and soul, and so maybe the first reaction for most of us is a sigh of relief," Drummond said in a telephone interview Tuesday, during a break from training in Las Vegas.

"You think, 'Finally, something is being done, all that hard work is not in vain.'

"But then you think, track and field is like any other business and like a lot of Fortune 500 companies, there's plenty of conniving and back-stabbing going on."

Drummond just returned from the Penn Relays, where the American men and women teams swept all six relays in the "U.S. vs. the World" portion of the program. Despite all the talk of the BALCO investigation, he said the way U.S. athletes pulled together for the meet was encouraging.

"Once you put that uniform on and step out on the track, you realize all you've got is each other. All the comments, opinions and personal feelings get put aside because you don't have any other choice," he said.

"I don't know what any of them do when they leave the stadium, so I'm in no position to make judgments. Right now, we're just like everybody else, waiting around to see what's going to be uncovered.

"But somebody has got to pass you the baton or take it from your hands. And if we've got to start worrying about who you can trust and who you can't, it's going to make for a long summer."

HermanMiller AUTHORIZED DEALER
WHEC Vendor
LEXINGTON GROUP
Buyers & Sellers of Quality New & Used Office Furniture
♦ Design & Space Planning ♦ Installations
♦ Furniture Rental & Leasing ♦ Panel Systems New & Remanufactured
Eric Bascom 413.746.3064
eric@lexingtongroupinc.com
380 Union St., West Springfield, MA 01089

Trainer Zito set for Kentucky Derby

By Richard Rosenblatt
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Nick Zito's world revolves around showing up for the Kentucky Derby.

The trainer has won it twice — but not lately. He missed the last two Derbies, and there was a brief time a few weeks ago when it looked like he might be out of luck again.

Yes, it's been quite an ordeal for the New York trainer who fondly calls Louisville his second home, but Zito is back in the Derby business. He will saddle Grade 1 stakes winners The Cliff's Edge and Birdstone in Saturday's race, with either quite capable of winning.

"I have two horses with great credentials," Zito said Wednesday outside his barn at Churchill Downs. "If they get in the gate Saturday, I'm just going say, 'Hallelujah!' and go from there."

A full field of 20 horses was entered for the 1 1/4-mile Derby, with official odds and post position order to be determined later Wednesday at the draw.

It wasn't until The Cliff's Edge won the Blue Grass at Keeneland on April 10 that Zito knew he was headed back to the Derby. Before the race, Zito's two other Derby hopefuls — Eurosilver and Birdstone — came down with ailments and were pulled out of the Blue Grass.

But a healthy The Cliff's Edge saved the day with a rousing finish to beat Lion Heart by a half-length, and Birdstone has fully recovered from an elevated white blood cell count that jeopardized his Derby chances.

Eurosilver wasn't so lucky. The colt who was high on the list of most Derby polls developed a gland infection and probably won't race again until the fall.

Zito, 56, stayed optimistic despite the setbacks, but once The Cliff's Edge rebounded from two losses by taking the Blue Grass, the trainer couldn't hide his joy.

He blew kisses to the crowd. He bowed. He punched his right fist.

Kentucky Derby here we come.

"Nick was so excited," said Shane Sellers, who rides The Cliff's Edge.

Zito has saddled 12 Derby starters, winning with Strike the Gold in 1991 and Go for Gin in 1994. Add The Cliff's Edge and Birdstone to the list, and only three trainers have had more Derby starters.

"Both horses have come up great," Zito said, "and it's time to be here."

In 2003, Zito won the Kentucky Oaks the day before the Derby with Bird Town, a half-sister to Birdstone. Zito spent Derby day in Lexington and watched the race on TV. Two years ago, he turned handicapper and correctly picked War Emblem to win.

Now he can choose between his own horses.

The Cliff's Edge, named for Equibase chartcaller Cliff Guilliams, is a big, stout son of Gulch who was 2-for-2 at Churchill Downs last year — a 7 3/4-length win in the Iroquois and a three-quarter-length victory in the Kentucky Jockey Club.

With four wins, two seconds and third in eight starts, the colt has earned $835,258 for owner Robert LaPenta, who bought The Cliff's Edge for $200,000 at the Keeneland yearling sale.

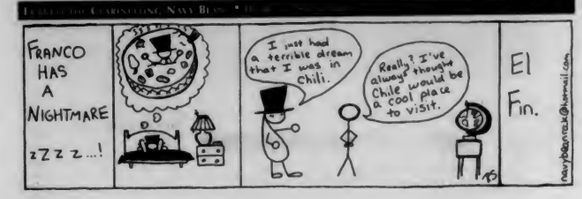
Bobby Frankel, who will send out Master David in search of his first Derby win, said The Cliff's Edge deserves to be the favorite. "If I was a betting man, that's who I'd bet on," Frankel said. "He ran so well here as a 2-year-old. That's a big edge."

In Birdstone, Zito has a small, still maturing colt — his third birthday is May 16 — whose sire, Grindstone, won the 1996 Derby. Owned by Saratoga socialite Marylou Whitney, Birdstone became a top Derby contender after winning the Champagne at Belmont Park last year.

But there have been bumps on the road recently. After winning an allowance race in his 3-year-old debut, Birdstone was fifth in the Lane's End at Turfway Park on March 20. The high white blood cell count was only a temporary setback; Birdstone was out for a morning gallop the day of the Blue Grass. Since then, the colt hasn't missed a beat, and Zito isn't worried about history that says the last horse to win the Derby without a race in April was Needles in 1956.

"I know I have two Grade 1 winners, one whose father won the Derby and his sister won the Oaks, and one Grade 1 winner who just won the Blue Grass and two stakes here," Zito said. "I couldn't ask for anything else."

Neither could Sellers, enjoying a comeback from a severe knee injury that sidelined him for nearly two years until 2002.

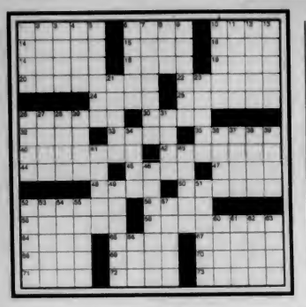


The Daily Collegian
Now Hiring Advertising Account Executives for Fall 2004

Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus CenterBasement, with your resume for more information.
All Majors & Classes Welcome to Apply

NEW ON TUESDAY
BIG FISH
THE COOLER
LOVE ACTUALLY
LOVE DON'T COST A THING
STUCK ON YOU
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Bruegger's
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

QUOTE FOR THE DAY



"Great minds discuss ideas; average minds discuss events; small minds discuss people."
-Eleanor Roosevelt

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Referee, literally
6 Food contests
10 Glance over
14 Improvise
15 Melville work
19 Cottonsell
20 Hardee's buys
21 Hardee's breakfast
22 Coating of frost
23 Secretary or clerk
27 Hardened to 34 Many smiles
35 Not a soul
36 One-celled animal
38 "Othello" pronoun
39 Were rivals
40 Not phony
43 Kids' toys
45 Distinguished
46 Eyelash
47 Tidbit
48 Tithe's break
49 Seafood choice
51 They give a hoot
52 Canyon phenomenon
60 Optician's prescriptions
62 Short jacket
63 Bird's lagan
64 Grownups
65 Pitch
66 "Cheers" regular
67 Non-AKC dog
68 Blender setting
69 Forest part
70 "Gloria"
71 Shrine
72 Gossiper
73 Singer Vikki
74 Father's pop

DOWN
1 Western author Grey
2 Gouda alternative
3 Object on radar
4 Stream
5 Sponge up
6 Dave Madonna
7 Concussion result
8 Pasture sound
9 Bush
10 Bush
11 Egypt's capital
12 With weapons
13 Strapped for cash
21 Hunger for 25 Secluded
26 Say so long
27 Play checkers
28 Eye, to Pierre
29 "Gone" author Ferber
31 Soprano Gluck
34 Write with acid
36 Computer screen graphic
37 Playing marbles
38 First name in mysteries
41 Backtalk
42 Ben Affleck pillow
43 More proficient
48 Turkey cooker
49 Type of dust or fog
51 So fly, as lime
52 African native
53 Dumpster surplus
54 Bowling
58 Granny of fiction
57 Out and-out
60 Popular fish
61 Certain decades
62 Richard of "Runaway Train"
63 Cheer
66 Corn neighbor

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
UPSTAIRS at the ABC
NO COVER CHARGE
The Tint
Amherst Jazz Orchestra

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Quesadilla
- Philly Steak Sandwich
- Tofu Fricassee (vegan)
- Black Bean Burger (vegan)

DINNER
- BBQ Chicken Quarter
- Baked Chicken Quarter
- Grilled Ham Steak
- Seitan Bourguignon (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
• High: 78
• Low: 50

FRIDAY
• High: 80
• Low: 52

SATURDAY
• High: 76
• Low: 52

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Matt Reid
COPY EDITOR
Erika Lovely
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Samantha Nielsen/ Russell Silva

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Everyone's not out to get you, they're just playing a joke. Chill out.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Improvise. Use what is available to get the job done.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Deal with the fact that you're not elite, stop trying.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't be lazy, get your butt out of bed.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Surprise! Someone's in love with you.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
If you went to UConn you'd love Okafor too.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Protect your cookies.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
I hope you remembered to vote, it's important.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Tomorrow will be a sweatpants kind of day.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You're looking lovely today, as every other day.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Just remember to use spell check.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Wallpaper your room, it needs a change.

Classifieds Sponsered by
WIFFLE ROCK
www.wifflerock.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Apartment for Rent

Mill Valley Estates now Renting 2 bedrm $1050/1100, 3 bedrm $1350/1400 No last months rent, Free Heat & Hot Water, 2 full baths, AC. On busline Mon-Fri 10-5pm 253-7377

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1& 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Employment

THE RECEPTIONISTS
Looking for a(n) seasonal/summer opportunity?
Property Housing, and all odds!

Lowell Area Driven Leader needed to be crew chief for one of the state's largest exterior house painting companies. Must be hard-working, Independent & have own car. Exp. preferred, but not necessary. Call Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Painters Wanted in Danvers area want a challenging Job outdoors w/good $$$? Seeking driven, Hardworking Individual w/own car to be a painting crew member. No exp. necessary Call: Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Employment

Hardworking individuals living around 93/95 belt South of I-90 for fulltime painter positions. Challenging job requires independence, own car. $10-$12 base rate. Call Will @ 617-699-8970

TEACH ENGLISH Overseas – Great adventure, great $$$. Training provided by InternationalTESOL College 1-866-837-6522 www.internationaltesol.com

Resort Real Estate Sales Assistant: World renowned multi-million dollar real estate development company seeks motivated and confident individual to market high-end real estate at The Greenbrier Resort in White Sulphur Spring, West Virginia. Ideal candidate is very comfortable speaking on the phone & interested in pursuing a career in luxury real estate. Immediate openings available. Please send resumes to Mitch Johnson- mjohnson@jbnc.com

Employment

ATTENTION LAX PLAYERS Play & Coach – Have fun – Make $$$ Top Boys Sports Camp in Maine looking for staff to instruct & coach LAX. Awesome Summer! Work with kids! Top salaries, FREE rm/bd/rtrvl allow. Apply online ASAP: www.campcobbossee.com

BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Summer teenage bicycling trips. USA, Canada, Europe. Salary plus expense paid. Student Hosteling Program, P.O. Box 419, Conway, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, www.bicycletrips.com.

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413)584-4746

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

Employment

Lifeguards for the summer season in private club on Cape Cod. Must have Lifeguard Training, CPR, and First Aid. Competitive wages, meals provided. Call for an appointment- Wianno Club, Osterville. 508-428-6981

SEEKING MYSTERIOUS SHOPPERS! Perfect for Students. Flexible Work from home or school. FT/PT. Make your own Hours. Call Toll Free 800-816-9590

Painters wanted greater Springfield area 1-413-695-2645 or 188-277-9787

Now hiring line cooks, dishwashers and door guys. Apply at Amherst Brewing Company

Students wanted for a summer painting job. $400 - $600/ week. Experience not needed but a plus. All hired will go through a paid training program. Call 888-277-9787 or go to COLLEGEPRO.COM. Work with friends.

Employment

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Furniture for Sale

3 Rms of furniture for sale Graduating in May Prices negotiable Call Lauren at 253-4993

House for Rent

Sunny Garden 4 Bedroom House near Amherst Center on Bus Route. Air condition, washer/dryer. Quiet back street. $1540.00/month 587-9574 or Richma.Keown@earthlink.net

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

Roommate Wanted

Female roommate wanted to share 2-bd apt in Sunderland. $418/mo. Includes heat, hot water, and cable. Available 6/1 or earlier. Call Lauren @ 860-604-6068.

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Summer Sublet

Want to live downtown this summer? 1 Bedroom, Above Newbury Comics Amherst Only 600/month, June-August. Call 549-9309

2 BR Apt for summer w/option to continue $820 or Best Offer Everything included Contact Angie_T_MV@yahoo.com or Jamie 617-435-0559

2 room in 3 bedroom house Fall option 253-9376

2 bedrooms, fully furnished apartment, 1 full bath. Available June 1st-September 1st. Call Rachel Szyman @ 781-264-1512

Travel

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included. Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe $169 one way. Book on-line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

Wanted

Compensation up to $7K+. Loving, couples seeking egg donors ASAP! Healthy women, 21+, non-smokers with proven academic achievement. View www.tinytreasuresagency.com for info or e-mail apply @ tinytreasures.com for applications. Toll Free 1-866-357-6868. Refer to ad #UMA-117.

Teams Wanted for Summer Wiffleball league in Worcester. $600 in prize money. Call 508-735-9133 or www.masswiff.com

EGG DONORS NEEDED: Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-29. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.robertnicholess.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A border war

UM to face Rhody in doubleheader

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

If anything, last weekend's trifecta of come-from-behind scenarios was a learning experience for the Massachusetts softball team.

"Even in the loss to Temple [in game 2] we had runners on second and third with one out, in both the sixth and seventh," coach Elaine Sortino said. "We always gave ourselves the opportunity to win. I think that's really important to create the opportunity, and as you come through those experiences, you get better at finishing. I thought we learned a lot."

But if the Minutewomen (24-13, 7-1 Atlantic 10) are to prevent another heartbreaking loss in today's doubleheader at home against the Rhode Island Rams, they'll need to cease catching up and continue setting the tone like they have been throughout most of the season.

"Hopefully, we'll stay ahead. The thing about tomorrow's game is, we want to go out and set the tone in the game, and create the gap on our end in terms of going out, scoring the runs first, and letting them worry about how they're going to get their runs on the board," Sortino said.

And with an offensive array like the Maroon and White currently holster, bats are the least of worries on the agenda. There are currently five batters on UMass' roster that can boast about hitting above .280, including two above .300.

Junior Hilary Puglia leads the team with a .347 average and 41 hits, and ranks second in runs batted in (24), while senior Aisha Franke will look to close out her career with another .300 season.

She is currently hitting .313 with a team-leading 22 runs, and ranks second on the team in hits (30) and stolen bases (eight).

As for power, look no further than stalwart KJ Kelley. After hitting what Sortino called "the longest home run I've ever seen in my career", a shot estimated to have gone as much as 290 feet, Kelley is just four homers away from tying the career record at UMass for home runs (26), set last season by All-American Brandi Cross.

The sophomore third baseman currently holds the single-season record for home runs with thirteen so far this season, but that number could extend itself once again. She also leads the Atlantic 10 in RBI (33).

The pressure to keep the Rams (11-27) at bay tomorrow will be dependent not on just putting bodies on the bases, but keeping opponents off those bags as well.

That first line of defense goes through the pitching, which has performed well under the variable weather conditions as of late. Junior Kelli Arnold (13-5) and sophomore Jenna Busa will be leading a staff of aces that have recorded a combined six shutouts on the season.

"[Kelli]'s got the ability to come at you in a lot of different ways, and she could throw any of three pitches for a strike at any given moment. I think she's really coming into her own this year," Sortino said.

And while the Rams boast no batters hitting above .270 and no pitchers with an ERA below 4.00, the Minutewomen certainly aren't overlooking any weaknesses.

"Nobody gets overlooked. Nobody gets looked at differently," Sortino said. "Every opponent is the same. You've still got to pitch the ball, you've got to hit the ball, and you got to catch it. Nobody's any different.

"I think URI is better than they look on paper. I thought they were pretty decent last year, so we're not looking by them. I think we got two good games on our hands tomorrow, and they're very important to the University of Massachusetts."

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Hilary Puglia currently leads UMass with a .347 batting average.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Pam Sulick and the Minutewomen are looking to bounce back from a pair of heartbreaking losses over the past week.

Nicklaus considering retirement

By Pete Iacobelli
Associated Press

TRAVELERS REST, S.C. — It turns out Jack Nicklaus might be finished with more than just the Masters.

He spoke Wednesday about giving up a game he once dominated, winning 73 PGA Tour events and 18 major titles.

"I'm about done playing golf," the 64-year-old Nicklaus said at the Nationwide Tour's BMW Charity Pro-Am at The Cliffs. He's competing here with his four sons: Jackie, Gary, Steve and Michael.

"I haven't made up my mind whether I'm going to play anymore this year after the Memorial tournament" in June, Nicklaus said.

At the Masters this month, the six-time champion said it was likely that he would not play at Augusta National in 2005. And that was before he shot consecutive 75s to miss the cut.

Nicklaus has struggled with arthritis, injuries and a faltering game the past few seasons.

"I know I can't compete at the level I used to compete," Nicklaus said. "If I go out and finish in the top 10, and that's a great week, then I know it's time to hang up your spikes."

Gary Player, 68, empathized with Nicklaus.

"It's hard spending all your time playing golf, like you did when you were a young man," said Player, here with his son Marc.

A year ago, the Golden Bear was the only Nicklaus around for the Nationwide event's final two rounds. He won the pro-am competition with son Steve and briefly scared the younger pros when he got to within five shots of the lead after 36 holes. Nicklaus left with a smile on his face, happy he was close to again playing successful, competitive golf.

Time and his own high standards have made it hard to maintain that momentum, Nicklaus said.

People continually ask him not to quit. "But I tell them, 'Well, you're not in my body,'" Nicklaus said.

A full day swinging clubs is more of a physical toll than ever before. "It takes me a while before it wants to work," he said. "If I'm not playing golf, it doesn't hurt too much. If I am playing golf, that's when it really hurts."

Nicklaus was on hand to present the Nationwide's 2003 player of the year award — named in his honor — to Zach Johnson, who claimed his first PGA Tour win this year at the BellSouth Classic.

Looking at the sculpture of a younger Nicklaus, he quipped: "I was that thin once?"

Johnson said Nicklaus was an idol to so many young players. "He was the man I looked up to in this game," Johnson said.

Nicklaus started strongly on the Champions Tour this year, finishing sixth at the Mastercard Classic with rounds of 68, 66 and 67. But he's only played two other Champion events, none since March.

"If you're not capable of winning, then you're just cluttering up the field. That's the way I look at it," Nicklaus said. "Then again, maybe my standards are a little higher."

His competitive fire still burns strongly. He recalled talking with Player after the 2002 Masters, when the South African was pleased with a 78 at a beefed up Augusta National.

"You're Gary Player," Nicklaus chided his friend. "You've won the tournament three times and you're proud to break 80?"

Then again, maybe Nicklaus just wants a break after so long in the spotlight. He returned to The Cliffs to play with his children, one of his life's great joys. Now, Nicklaus says he's just as happy to fish quietly with his wife, Barbara.

"I spent all my weekends the last 40 years in press rooms at golf courses," Nicklaus said. "Frankly, I just think it's time to ... do something else."

Minutemen look to snap losing skid against Boston College

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Losers of six in a row, the Massachusetts baseball team will return to Earl Lorden Field this afternoon for a non-conference game with Bay State rival Boston College (18-20).

The Minutemen (13-16 5-4 Atlantic 10) are coming off of a 7-3 loss to Quinnipiac in which they managed only a pair of infield singles against righthander Chris Gresh, and UMass coach Mike Stone is looking for his team to put together a more potent attack against the Eagles.

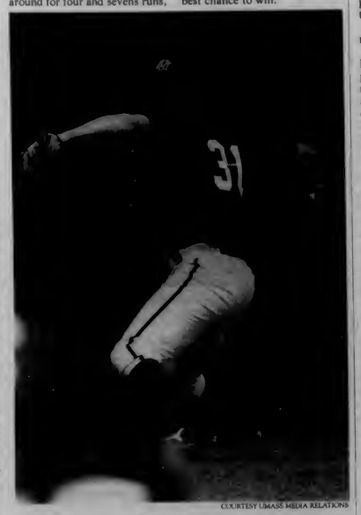
"We need to come out with a renewed sense of urgency and energy [today], and start swinging the bats like we're capable of," he said. "We need to be patient at the plate and get good pitches to hit, and when we do we can't miss them."

One thing the Maroon and White must do if it hopes to regain its offensive prowess is develop a rhythm at the plate, something they were not able to do against Gresh, who retired 20 of the final 21 batters he faced in Tuesday's loss.

Leading the charge in that department will again be junior rightfielder Jason Twomley, who has been hitting leadoff of late, and senior shortstop and tri-captain Mike Athas, who collected one of the two hits off of Gresh with a bunt single and has been UMass' most consistent hitter over the past two seasons.

"We need to start getting things going right from the top of the order," Stone said. "We have guys who can put the ball in play and get on base, but it just wasn't working like that for us [on Tuesday] and that needs to change if we want to be successful."

An addition that should work to help cure UMass' offensive ills is the return of senior infielder Cullan Maumus. An excellent handler of the bat in addition to being widely regarded as one of the Atlantic 10's premier bunters, Maumus broke his hand when he was hit by a pitch earlier this season at George Washington.



Maumus has two hits in ten at-bats since returning to action in the first game of a doubleheader this past Saturday, and also scored a pair of runs. He also collected the other hit off of Gresh on Tuesday, and could play a more substantial role in jumpstarting the Maroon and White's offensive attack as he works his way back into midseason form.

On the other hand, while the offense was problematic for the Minutemen on Tuesday, the pitching staff that was lauded as the team's greatest strength struggled mightily in a weekend sweep at the hands of Fordham.

Righthanders Eric Chown and Matt Torra were knocked around for four and sevens runs, respectively, on Saturday, while southpaw Keith Doherty was battered for seven earned runs in two-and-1/3 innings.

Because of this, Stone knows that while this afternoon's contest is a non-conference affair, he needs to find an arm who can give him a quality outing and eat innings after freshman righthander Devin Barnett walked five and surrendered five runs in four in innings against Quinnipiac.

"[Barnett] wasn't throwing strikes like he can, and we need our pitchers to do that," Stone said. "We're coming into the stretch drive here, and our pitchers need to be on top of their game and giving us the best chance to win."

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore righthander Matt Torra and the Maroon and White will look to get back on track against BC at Earl Lorden Field.

Despite testing, drugs may taint Olympics

By Jim Litke
Associated Press

This will be the cleanest team the United States has ever sent to the Olympics.

It won't ever be clean enough for some people.

"Winning the gold medal in the Olympics this year will make you dirty in the eyes of most Americans," U.S. sprinter Jon Drummond said. "At least that's what the polls I've read are saying.

"So you mean to tell me that I spent all of the past year — most of my adult life, really — training to win a gold medal, and if I do, popular opinion is going to be that I'm dirty?"

The short answer, unfortunately, is yes.

According to an Associated Press poll released Monday, 92 percent of Drummond's countrymen believe the use of steroids and other performance-enhancing drugs by Olympians is a problem. But public perception could turn out to be the least of their worries.

Track and field athletes can be tested anytime and anywhere, in or out of competition, for more substances than any other individual or team sport athletes in the world. Marion Jones' lawyer said she has been tested 160 times during her career, and Drummond, who at 35 is seven years older, passed that mark a long time ago. But even that isn't enough for some people.

A witch hunt has begun to find competitors those tests might have missed, any athletes still dumb — or clever — enough to have used performance-enhancing drugs, and ban them from the Summer Games in Athens. Some of the methods now being employed are questionable and getting dicier by the minute. The investigation has the potential to get nastier than anything since the files of the now-defunct East German sports machine were unearthed.

In what legal scholars called an almost unprecedented move, the Justice Department has acknowledged it complied with a subpoena from the Senate Commerce Committee and turned over documents obtained during a grand jury investigation into an alleged steroid-distribution ring at the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative (known as BALCO).

There's already some debate about whether the documents included grand jury testimony by dozens of elite athletes about steroid use, and whether the Commerce Committee can turn over that and other materials gathered during the investigation to the U.S. Olympic Committee or the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency.

What no one doubts is whether the USOC would use those documents to try and knock anybody off the team who admitted using steroids or other banned substances.

USOC leaders have pleaded with federal authorities for access to such evidence and USADA has the power to bring a drug case against an athlete in lieu of a positive drug test when the agency "has other reason to believe that a potential doping violation has occurred, such as admitted doping."

And things could get very treacherous for U.S. Olympians depending on how broadly USADA officials wield that power. Besides any admissions by athletes, the evidence collected by the grand jury could include documents and other communications between involved parties detailing the sale of performance-enhancing drugs. Some of it could include circumstantial or hearsay evidence.

According to a report in The New York Times, lawyers for BALCO founder Victor Conte, one of the four men charged in the case with distributing steroids and laundering money, have indicated a willingness to help Olympic officials if a deal for reduced charges could be reached with federal authorities. Additionally, five track and field athletes who have already tested positive for the "designer" steroid THG, or tetrahydrogestrinone, might also be tempted to roll over on fellow

See OLYMPICS on page 6

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, APRIL 30, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 130

Slightly Cheaper gears up for Spring concert
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Minutemen to face Syracuse Orangemen tomorrow
SPORTS, PAGE 10

IBM grants funds for new lab

By Sean Benson
Collegian Staff

IBM recently contributed $5 million worth of equipment and technology to the University of Massachusetts that will help build a Linux Lab on campus as well as provide software and technology that will improve the University's Information Technologies minor program.

Some of the equipment granted from IBM will include a Unix server, about 27 workstations with IBM and several other types of software. The Linux Lab, which will cost approximately $200,000, will be used for a curriculum on open source software that will give students strong skills in the Linux operating system. IBM will also provide software technology that will give students hands-on experience with Rational software and building software applications.

"When companies like IBM step up to the plate and recognize the link between strong academics, research, and the future workforce, we all win," said Charlie Schweik, assistant professor of Natural Resources and Conservation and the Center for Public Policy and Administration, in addition to being the principal investigator involved in the Linux Lab project.

The Linux Lab will be open to all students across campus, not just those in the IT minor program or engineering and computer science majors. It will give non-engineering students and faculty the opportunity to use state-of-the-art software and server technology to work in several diverse fields of study, including land-use modeling, bioinformatics, landscape architecture and social demographics. The lab is reportedly scheduled to open this fall in Machmer Hall.

The contribution from IBM is a step in the partnership between UMass and IBM that

See IBM on page 3

JOHN TLUMACKI/COLLEGIAN

Students participate last night in the second annual Take Back the Night event to raise awareness of sexual violence for the second night in a row. The students marched over the Southwest Residential Area, Fraternity Row and the Central Residential Area.

Community takes back the night

Participants work to increase awareness of sexual assault

By Michelle Rivera
Collegian Staff

About 75 students and community members marched and rallied last night against sexual violence for the University of Massachusetts' second night of Take Back the Night.

Last night was the final night of the second annual event. The event was designed to empower victims of sexual assault, and increase awareness of sexual violence and assault against men and women on campus and the community.

"I think tonight was important to empower all of the people on campus and also in the community, and to encourage everybody to become aware of sexual assault and sexual violence," said UMass University Without Walls freshman, Erika, who spoke under conditions that her last name not be used.

Participants gathering at 7 p.m. at the Student Union were greeted with music provided by WMUA before marching around areas on and around the UMass campus. The marchers covered the Southwest residential area, Fraternity Row and behind and in front of the Central Residential Area. The marchers chanted together, yelling phrases like, "Survivors unite. Take back the night," and "two, four, six, eight, no more date rape."

Many students in the Southwest and Central Residential Areas cheered and applauded the marchers, and a handful of people in their cars honked their horns in support. The march lasted about 45 minutes.

Invited guest speakers addressed the gatherers after and before the march.

The first speaker was LaWanza Lett-Brewington, the program director for Community Education. Brewington told the crowd that every woman should be able to safely walk anywhere, any time, any way.

The next speaker, Ann Ferguson, a professor of philosophy and women's studies at UMass, urged the crowd to bring about a culture of peace. Ferguson said that the march tonight was a great start. Ferguson sang a song at the conclusion of her speech.

Benjamin J. Ostiguy, a campus educator for violence against women and men for the Everywoman's Center, said that establishing a new masculinity is one of the steps for putting an end to sexual violence.

"We should express our genuine self, and we also need to internalize our manhood and sense of masculinity," he said.

The last speaker, Rebecca M. Lockwood, the associate director for the Rape Crisis Services and Violence Prevention Services, commended the number of men at the rally.

"One of the positive things is that there are so many men here tonight," she said.

Lockwood ended her speech with a poem called, "Let the Healing Begin."

Many students and community members found the march and rally to be an enlightening and beneficial experience.

"The crescendo of voices with people marching made this problem of violence against men and women seem fix-able and changeable," said UMass junior Stacy

See AWARENESS on page 2

Columnist criticized nationally

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — A University of Massachusetts graduate student who wrote a campus newspaper column saying former NFL player Pat Tillman was not a hero for being killed while fighting in Afghanistan was sharply criticized Thursday by the school's president.

UMass president Jack Wilson issued a statement saying Rene Gonzalez' comments in The Daily Collegian "are a disgusting, arrogant and intellectually immature attack on a human being who died in service to his country."

In his column, which ran Wednesday on the opinion page and was posted on the newspaper's Web site, Gonzalez called the former Arizona Cardinals safety a "G.I. Joe guy who got what was coming to him."

"That was not heroism," Gonzalez wrote. "It was prophetic idiocy."

His column, which ran next to a column praising Tillman as a hero, also criticizes America's military response to the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Tillman, the San Jose, Calif., native who gave up his NFL career to join the Army Rangers in 2002, was killed in combat April 22 in Afghanistan.

While recognizing Gonzalez' right to free speech, Wilson said the student owes Tillman a "debt of gratitude," and said he should apologize to Tillman's friends and family.

The state Senate on Thursday approved a resolution of condemnation, with one member, Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, calling Gonzalez a "nitwit."

Jared Nokes, president of the Student Government Association, also issued a statement condemning Gonzalez' column.

Gonzalez did not respond to telephone and e-mail messages left Thursday by The

See GONZALEZ on page 3

Link between Coca-Cola and Columbian deaths explored

By Sara-Megan Walsh
Collegian Staff

"Buying Coca-Cola, its no better then supporting murder," cried Emma Lang, a BDIC major and member of the Radical Student Union during a rally in protest of the University of Massachusetts' renewing of a contract with the Coca-Cola Co.

The Radical Student Union marched into the Whitmore Administration Building chanting: "Hey, Hey! Ho-ho! Coca-Cola has gotta go!" The rally was kicked off after a teach-in on Wednesday night about the alleged human rights violations committed by Coca-Cola.

Nearly 60 members of the UMass community attended the event. The teach-in featured five speakers from Ray Rogers, leader of the international Killer Coke campaign, to Kate Harris, UMass alumni and local activist.

"How many people realize when they buy a can of Coke it has repercussions?" Harris asked. Harris shared personal stories of her time spent in Colombia, where Coca-Cola is accused of hiring paramilitary personnel to kidnap, torture and assassinate union leaders attempting to negotiate for worker's rights in Coca-Cola's subsidiary bottlers and distributors.

"Coca-Cola bottling workers are being pressured at gunpoint to break-up the local unions," said Harris, speaking about the atmosphere of the negotiations.

The allegations of human rights abuses against Coca-Cola include possible failure to provide adequate healthcare for its workers in Africa and contamination of the water supplies in India.

"There have been a total of 179 human rights violations against Coca-Cola, including nine murders," stated Dan Kovlik, assistant general counsel to the US Steelworkers who helped the Colombian labor union, Sinaltrainal, file lawsuit against the company and its subsidiaries in Colombia. The lawsuits against Coca-Cola were dismissed from the courts in March 2003

See COKE on page 3

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Ian TreFethen, a senior psychology student and member of the Radical Student Union speaks yesterday about alleged human rights violations committed by the Coca-Cola Co.

SAMANTHA LOURANS/COLLEGIAN

Green thumb

Students yesterday study their plants during their Medicinal Herbs and Spices class.

Bush, Cheney questioned for hours in Oval Office by Sept. 11 commissioners

By Deb Riechmann
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney answered questions for over three hours yesterday from Sept. 11 commissioners trying to learn how followers of Osama bin Laden pulled off the worst terrorist attack in American history.

The 10 commissioners gathered around Bush and Cheney, who were seated on chairs near the fireplace in the Oval Office for an extraordinary behind-closed-doors meeting that was off-limits to all but White House counsel Alberto Gonzales and two members of his staff.

Lee H. Hamilton, Democratic vice chairman of the bipartisan panel, who had a previously scheduled appointment to attend, and commissioner Bob Kerrey, a former Democratic senator from Nebraska, were seen leaving the White House around noon.

Bush was to make an early afternoon statement about the session in the Rose Garden.

White House press secretary Scott McClellan called the meeting a "good opportunity for the president to sit down with members of the commission and talk with them about the seriousness with which we took the threat from al-Qaida, the steps we were taking to confront it, and how we have been responding to the attacks of Sept. 11."

"This is a private meeting," he said. "The discussion from this meeting will be reflected in their final report."

The White House initially opposed the creation of the panel investigating the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks that killed some 3,000 people in New York City, Washington and Pennsylvania. Bush and Cheney agreed to answer questions jointly after sparring with the commissioners for months over ground rules for the meeting.

In the question-and-answer session, Bush faced a familiar challenge: convincing Americans that he responded appropriately to an intelligence system that

See BUSH on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 29, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A border war

UM to face Rhody in doubleheader

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

If anything, last weekend's trifecta of come-from-behind scenarios was a learning experience for the Massachusetts softball team.

"Even in the loss to Temple [in game 2] we had runners on second and third with one out, in both the sixth and seventh," coach Elaine Sortino said. "We always gave ourselves the opportunity to win. I think that's really important to create the opportunity, and as you come through those experiences, you get better at finishing. I thought we learned a lot."

But if the Minutewomen (24-13, 7-1 Atlantic 10) are to prevent another heartbreaking loss in today's doubleheader at home against the Rhode Island Rams, they'll need to cease catching up and continue setting the tone like they have been throughout most of the season.

"Hopefully, we'll stay ahead. The thing about tomorrow's game is, we want to go out and set the tone in the game, and create the gap on our end in terms of going out, scoring the runs first, and letting them worry about how they're going to get their runs on the board," Sortino said.

And with an offensive array like the Maroon and White currently holster, bats are the least of worries on the agenda. There are currently five batters on UMass' roster that can boast about hitting above .280, including two above .300.

Junior Hilary Puglia leads the team with a .347 average and 41 hits, and ranks second in runs batted in (24), while senior Aisha Franke will look to close out her career with another .300 season.

She is currently hitting .313 with a team-leading 22 runs, and ranks second on the team in hits (30) and stolen bases (eight).

As for power, look no further than stalwart KJ Kelley. After hitting what Sortino called "the longest home run I've ever seen in my career", a shot estimated to have gone as much as 290 feet, Kelley is just four homers away from tying the career record at UMass for home runs (26), set last season by All-American Brandi Cross.

The sophomore third baseman currently holds the single-season record for home runs with thirteen so far this season, but that number could extend itself once again. She also leads the Atlantic 10 in RBI (33).

The pressure to keep the Rams (11-27) at bay tomorrow will be dependent not on just putting bodies on the bases, but keeping opponents off those bags as well.

That first line of defense goes through the pitching, which has performed well under the variable weather conditions as of late. Junior Kelli Arnold (13-5) and sophomore Jenna Busa will be leading a staff of aces that have recorded a combined six shutouts on the season.

"[Kelli]'s got the ability to come at you in a lot of different ways, and she could throw any of three pitches for a strike at any given moment. I think she's really coming into her own this year," Sortino said.

And while the Rams boast no batters hitting above .270 and no pitchers with an ERA below 4.00, the Minutewomen certainly aren't overlooking any weaknesses.

"Nobody gets overlooked. Nobody gets looked at differently," Sortino said. "Every opponent is the same. You've still got to pitch the ball, you've got to hit the ball, and you got to catch it. Nobody's any different.

"I think URI is better than they look on paper. I thought they were pretty decent last year, so we're not looking by them. I think we got two good games on our hands tomorrow, and they're very important to the University of Massachusetts."

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Hilary Puglia currently leads UMass with a .347 batting average.

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Pam Sulick and the Minutewomen are looking to bounce back from a pair of heartbreaking losses over the past week.

Nicklaus considering retirement

By Pete Iacobelli
Associated Press

TRAVELERS REST, S.C. — It turns out Jack Nicklaus might be finished with more than just the Masters.

He spoke Wednesday about giving up a game he once dominated, winning 73 PGA Tour events and 18 major titles.

"I'm about done playing golf," the 64-year-old Nicklaus said at the Nationwide Tour's BMW Charity Pro-Am at The Cliffs. He's competing here with his four sons: Jackie, Gary, Steve and Michael.

"I haven't made up my mind whether I'm going to play anymore this year after the Memorial tournament" in June, Nicklaus said.

At the Masters this month, the six-time champion said it was likely that he would not play at Augusta National in 2005. And that was before he shot consecutive 75s to miss the cut.

Nicklaus has struggled with arthritis, injuries and a faltering game the past few seasons.

"I know I can't compete at the level I used to compete," Nicklaus said. "If I go out and finish in the top 10, and that's a great week, then I know it's time to hang up your spikes."

Gary Player, 68, empathized with Nicklaus.

"It's hard spending all your time playing golf, like you did when you were a young man," said Player, here with his son Marc.

A year ago, the Golden Bear was the only Nicklaus around for the Nationwide event's final two rounds. He won the pro-am competition with son Steve and briefly scared the younger pros when he got to within five shots of the lead after 36 holes. Nicklaus left with a smile on his face, happy he was close to again playing successful, competitive golf.

Time and his own high standards have made it hard to maintain that momentum, Nicklaus said.

People continually ask him not to quit. "But I tell them, 'Well, you're not in my body,'" Nicklaus said.

A full day swinging clubs is more of a physical toll than ever before. "It takes me a while before it wants to work," he said. "If I'm not playing golf, it doesn't hurt too much. If I am playing golf, that's when it really hurts."

Nicklaus was on hand to present the Nationwide's 2003 player of the year award — named in his honor — to Zach Johnson, who claimed his first PGA Tour win this year at the BellSouth Classic.

Looking at the sculpture of a younger Nicklaus, he quipped: "I was that thin once?"

Johnson said Nicklaus was an idol to so many young players. "He was the man I looked up to in this game," Johnson said.

Nicklaus started strongly on the Champions Tour this year, finishing sixth at the Mastercard Classic with rounds of 68, 66 and 67. But he's only played two other Champion events, none since March.

"If you're not capable of winning, then you're just cluttering up the field. That's the way I look at it," Nicklaus said. "Then again, maybe my standards are a little higher."

His competitive fire still burns strongly. He recalled talking with Player after the 2002 Masters, when the South African was pleased with a 78 at a beefed up Augusta National.

"You're Gary Player," Nicklaus chided his friend. "You've won the tournament three times and you're proud to break 80?"

Then again, maybe Nicklaus just wants a break after so long in the spotlight. He returned to The Cliffs to play with his children, one of his life's great joys. Now, Nicklaus says he's just as happy to fish quietly with his wife, Barbara.

"I spent all my weekends the last 40 years in press rooms at golf courses," Nicklaus said. "Frankly, I just think it's time to ... do something else."

Minutemen look to snap losing skid against Boston College

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Losers of six in a row, the Massachusetts baseball team will return to Earl Lorden Field this afternoon for a non-conference game with Bay State rival Boston College (18-20).

The Minutemen (13-16 5-4 Atlantic 10) are coming off of a 7-3 loss to Quinnipiac in which they managed only a pair of infield singles against righthander Chris Gresh, and UMass coach Mike Stone is looking for his team to put together a more potent attack against the Eagles.

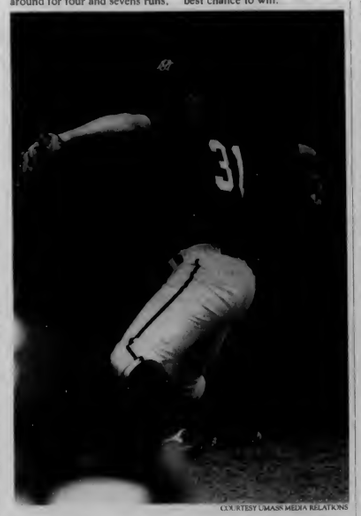
"We need to come out with a renewed sense of urgency and energy [today], and start swinging the bats like we're capable of," he said. "We need to be patient at the plate and get good pitches to hit, and when we do we can't miss them."

One thing the Maroon and White must do if it hopes to regain its offensive prowess is develop a rhythm at the plate, something they were not able to do against Gresh, who retired 20 of the final 21 batters he faced in Tuesday's loss.

Leading the charge in that department will again be junior rightfielder Jason Twomley, who has been hitting leadoff of late, and senior shortstop and tri-captain Mike Athas, who collected one of the two hits off of Gresh with a bunt single and has been UMass' most consistent hitter over the past two seasons.

"We need to start getting things going right from the top of the order," Stone said. "We have guys who can put the ball in play and get on base, but it just wasn't working like that for us [on Tuesday] and that needs to change if we want to be successful."

An addition that should work to help cure UMass' offensive ills is the return of senior infielder Cullan Maumus. An excellent handler of the bat in addition to being widely regarded as one of the Atlantic 10's premier bunters, Maumus broke his hand when he was hit by a pitch earlier this season at George Washington.



Maumus has two hits in ten at-bats since returning to action in the first game of a doubleheader this past Saturday, and has also scored a pair of runs. He also collected the other hit off of Gresh on Tuesday, and could play a more substantial role in jumpstarting the Maroon and White's offensive attack as he works his way back into mid-season form.

On the other hand, while the offense was problematic for the Minutemen on Tuesday, the pitching staff that was lauded as the team's greatest strength struggled mightily in a weekend sweep at the hands of Fordham.

Righthanders Eric Chown and Matt Torra were knocked around for four and sevens runs, respectively, on Saturday, while southpaw Keith Doherty was battered for seven earned runs in two-and-1/3 innings.

Because of this, Stone knows that while this afternoon's contest is a non-conference affair, he needs to find an arm who can give him a quality outing and eat innings after freshman righthander Devin Barnett walked five and surrendered five runs in four in innings against Quinnipiac.

"[Barnett] wasn't throwing strikes like he can, and we need our pitchers to do that," Stone said. "We're coming into the stretch drive here, and our pitchers need to be on top of their game and giving us the best chance to win."

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Sophomore righthander Matt Torra and the Maroon and White will look to get back on track against BC at Earl Lorden Field.

Despite testing, drugs may taint Olympics

By Jim Litke
Associated Press

This will be the cleanest team the United States has ever sent to the Olympics.

It won't ever be clean enough for some people.

"Winning the gold medal in the Olympics this year will make you dirty in the eyes of most Americans," U.S. sprinter Jon Drummond said. "At least that's what the polls I've read are saying.

"So you mean to tell me that I spent all of the past year — most of my adult life, really — training to win a gold medal, and if I do, popular opinion is going to be that I'm dirty?"

The short answer, unfortunately, is yes.

According to an Associated Press poll released Monday, 92 percent of Drummond's countrymen believe the use of steroids and other performance-enhancing drugs by Olympians is a problem. But public perception could turn out to be the least of their worries.

Track and field athletes can be tested anytime and anywhere, in or out of competition, for more substances than any other individual or team sport athletes in the world. Marion Jones' lawyer said she has been tested 160 times during her career, and Drummond, who at 35 is seven years older, passed that mark a long time ago. But even that isn't enough for some people.

A witch hunt has begun to find competitors those tests might have missed, any athletes still dumb — or clever — enough to have used performance-enhancing drugs, and ban them from the Summer Games in Athens. Some of the methods now being employed are questionable and getting dicier by the minute. The investigation has the potential to get nastier than anything since the files of the now-defunct East German sports machine were unearthed.

In what legal scholars called an almost unprecedented move, the Justice Department has acknowledged it complied with a subpoena from the Senate Commerce Committee and turned over documents obtained during a grand jury investigation into an alleged steroid-distribution ring at the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative (known as BALCO).

There's already some debate about whether the documents included grand jury testimony by dozens of elite athletes about steroid use, and whether the Commerce Committee can turn over that and other materials gathered during the investigation to the U.S. Olympic Committee or the U.S. Anti-Doping Agency.

What no one doubts is whether the USOC would use those documents to try and knock anybody off the team who admitted using steroids or other banned substances.

USOC leaders have pleaded with federal authorities for access to such evidence and USADA has the power to bring a drug case against an athlete in lieu of a positive drug test when the agency "has other reason to believe that a potential doping violation has occurred, such as admitted doping."

And things could get very treacherous for U.S. Olympians depending on how broadly USADA officials wield that power. Besides any admissions by athletes, the evidence collected by the grand jury could include documents and other communications between involved parties detailing the sale of performance-enhancing drugs. Some of it could include circumstantial or hearsay evidence.

According to a report in The New York Times, lawyers for BALCO founder Victor Conte, one of the four men charged in the case with distributing steroids and laundering money, have indicated a willingness to help Olympic officials if a deal for reduced charges could be reached with federal authorities. Additionally, five track and field athletes who have already tested positive for the "designer" steroid THG, or tetrahydrogestrinone, might also be tempted to roll over on fellow

See OLYMPICS on page 6

Slightly Cheaper gears up for Spring concert
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Minutemen to face Syracuse Orangemen tomorrow
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, APRIL 30, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 130

IBM grants funds for new lab

By Sean Benson
Collegian Staff

IBM recently contributed $5 million worth of equipment and technology to the University of Massachusetts that will help build a Linux Lab on campus as well as provide software and technology that will improve the University's Information Technologies minor program.

Some of the equipment granted from IBM will include a Unix server, about 27 workstations with IBM and several other types of software. The Linux Lab, which will cost approximately $200,000, will be used for a curriculum on open source software that will give students strong skills in the Linux operating system. IBM will also provide software technology that will give students hands-on experience with Rational software and building software applications.

"When companies like IBM step up to the plate and recognize the link between strong academics, research, and the future workforce, we all win," said Charlie Schweik, assistant professor of Natural Resources and Cons-ervation and the Center for Public Policy and Administration, in addition to being the principal investigator involved in the Linux Lab project.

The Linux Lab will be open to all students across campus, not just those in the IT minor program or engineering and computer science majors. It will give non-engineering students and faculty the opportunity to use state-of-the-art software and server technology to work in several diverse fields of study, including land-use modeling, bioinformatics, landscape architecture and social demographics. The lab is reportedly scheduled to open this fall in Machmer Hall.

The contribution from IBM is a step in the partnership between UMass and IBM that

See IBM on page 3

SHANNON LEE/COLLEGIAN

Students participate last night in the second annual Take Back the Night event to raise awareness of sexual violence for the second night in a row. The students marched over the Southwest Residential Area, Fraternity Row and the Central Residential Area.

Community takes back the night

Participants work to increase awareness of sexual assault

By Michelle Rivera
Collegian Staff

About 75 students and community members marched and rallied last night against sexual violence for the University of Massachusetts' second night of Take Back the Night.

Last night was the final night of the second annual event. The event was designed to empower victims of sexual assault, and increase awareness of sexual violence and assault against men and women on campus and the community.

"I think tonight was important to empower all of the people on campus and also in the community, and to encourage everybody to become aware of sexual assault and sexual violence," said UMass University Without Walls freshman, Erika, who spoke under conditions that her last name not be used.

Participants gathering at 7 p.m. at the Student Union were greeted with music provided by WMUA before marching around areas on and around the UMass campus. The marchers covered the Southwest residential area, Fraternity Row and behind and in front of the Central Residential Area. The marchers chanted together, yelling phrases like, "Survivors unite. Take back the night," and "two, four, six, eight, no more date rape."

Many students in the Southwest and Central Residential Areas cheered and applauded the marchers, and a handful of people in their cars honked their horns in support. The march lasted about 45 minutes.

Invited guest speakers addressed the gatherers after and before the march.

The first speaker was LaWaniza Lett-Brewington, the program director for Community Education. Brewington told the crowd that every woman should be able to safely walk anywhere, any time, any way.

The next speaker, Ann Ferguson, a professor of philosophy and women's studies at UMass, urged the crowd to bring about a culture of peace. Ferguson said that the march tonight was a great start. Ferguson sang a song at the conclusion of her speech.

Benjamin I. Ostiguy, a campus educator for violence against women and men for the Everywoman's Center, said that establishing a new masculinity is one of the steps for putting an end to sexual violence.

"We should express our genuine self, and we also need to internalize our manhood and sense of masculinity," he said.

The last speaker, Rebecca M. Lockwood, the associate director for the Rape Crisis Services and Violence Prevention Services, commended the number of men at the rally.

"One of the positive things is that there are so many men here tonight," she said.

Lockwood ended her speech with a poem called, "Let the Healing Begin."

Many students and community members found the march and rally to be an enlightening and beneficial experience.

"The crescendo of voices with people marching made this problem of violence against men and women seem fixable and changeable," said UMass junior Stacy

See AWARENESS on page 2

Columnist criticized nationally

AMHERST, Mass. (AP) — A University of Massachusetts graduate student who wrote a campus newspaper column saying former NFL player Pat Tillman was not a hero for being killed while fighting in Afghanistan was sharply criticized Thursday by the school's president.

UMass president Jack Wilson issued a statement saying Rene Gonzalez' comments in The Daily Collegian "are a disgusting, arrogant and intellectually immature attack on a human being who died in service to his country."

In his column, which ran Wednesday on the opinion page and was posted on the newspaper's Web site, Gonzalez called the former Arizona Cardinals safety a "G.I. Joe guy who got what was coming to him."

"That was not heroism," Gonzalez wrote. "It was prophetic idiocy."

His column, which ran next to a column praising Tillman as a hero, also criticizes America's military response to the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks.

Tillman, the San Jose, Calif., native who gave up his NFL career to join the Army Rangers in 2002, was killed in combat April 22 in Afghanistan.

While recognizing Gonzalez' right to free speech, Wilson said the student owes Tillman a "debt of gratitude," and said he should apologize to Tillman's friends and family.

The state Senate on Thursday approved a resolution of condemnation, with one member, Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, calling Gonzalez a "nitwit."

Jared Nokes, president of the Student Government Association, also issued a statement condemning Gonzalez' column.

Gonzalez did not respond to telephone and e-mail messages left Thursday by The

See GONZALEZ on page 3

Link between Coca-Cola and Columbian deaths explored

By Sara-Megan Walsh
Collegian Staff

"Buying Coca-Cola, its no better then supporting murder," cried Emma Lang, a BDIC major and member of the Radical Student Union during a rally in protest of the University of Massachusetts' renewing of a contract with the Coca-Cola Co.

The Radical Student Union marched into the Whitmore Administration Building chanting: "Hey, Hey! Ho-ho! Coca-Cola has gotta go!" The rally was kicked off after a teach-in on Wednesday night about the alleged human rights violations committed by Coca-Cola.

Nearly 60 members of the UMass community attended the event. The teach-in featured five speakers from Ray Rogers, leader of the international Killer Coke campaign, to Kate Harris, UMass alumni and local activist.

"How many people realize when they buy a can of Coke it has repercussions?" Harris asked. Harris shared personal stories of her time spent in Colombia, where Coca-Cola is accused of hiring paramilitary personnel to kidnap, torture and assassinate union leaders attempting to negotiate for worker's rights in Coca-Cola's subsidiary bottlers and distributors.

"Coca-Cola bottling workers are being pressured at gunpoint to break-up the local unions," said Harris, speaking about the atmosphere of the negotiations.

The allegations of human rights abuses against Coca-Cola include possible failure to provide adequate healthcare for its workers in Africa and contamination of the water supplies in India.

"There have been a total of 179 human rights violations against Coca-Cola, including nine murders," stated Dan Kovlik, assistant general counsel to the US Steelworkers who helped the Colombian labor union, Sinaltrainal, file lawsuit against the company and its subsidiaries in Colombia. The lawsuits against Coca-Cola were dismissed from the courts in March 2003

See COKE on page 3

AMITA PURI/COLLEGIAN

Ian TreFethen, a senior psychology student and member of the Radical Student Union speaks yesterday about alleged human rights violations committed by the Coca-Cola Co.

SAMANTHA LO/COLLEGIAN

Green thumb

Students yesterday study their plants during their Medicinal Herbs and Spices class.

Bush, Cheney questioned for hours in Oval Office by Sept. 11 commissioners

By Deb Riechmann
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush and Vice President Dick Cheney answered questions for over three hours yesterday from Sept. 11 commissioners trying to learn how followers of Osama bin Laden pulled off the worst terrorist attack in American history.

The 10 commissioners gathered around Bush and Cheney, who were seated on chairs near the fireplace in the Oval Office for an extraordinary behind-closed-doors meeting that was off-limits to all but White House counsel Alberto Gonzales and two members of his staff.

Lee H. Hamilton, Democratic vice chairman of the bipartisan panel, who had a previously scheduled appointment to attend, and commissioner Bob Kerrey, a former Democratic senator from Nebraska, were seen leaving the White House around noon.

Bush was to make an early afternoon statement about the session in the Rose Garden.

White House press secretary Scott McClellan called the meeting a "good opportunity for the president to sit down with members of the commission and talk with them about the seriousness with which we took the threat from al-Qaida, the steps we were taking to confront it, and how we have been responding to the attacks of Sept. 11."

"This is a private meeting," he said. "The discussion from this meeting will be reflected in their final report."

The White House initially opposed the creation of the panel investigating the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks that killed some 3,000 people in New York City, Washington and Pennsylvania. Bush and Cheney agreed to answer questions jointly after sparring with the commissioners for months over ground rules for the meeting.

In the question-and-answer session, Bush faced a familiar challenge: convincing Americans that he responded appropriately to an intelligence system that

See BUSH on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reed
FEATURES EDITOR S. J. Port
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salniker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldredge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merriet
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Legatic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCES Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jachynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kiggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADMITTING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Amelia P. Lincoln
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS PAPER SERVICE BUNDLED PUBLISHING. ADVERTISING REVENUE FUNDED. 1890 - THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. 1906 - RENAMED THE COLLEGE SIGNAL. 1921 - THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN. 1934 - 1937 - 1938. THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN. 1956 - PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AUDITED SINCE JANUARY 1998. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500. PUBLISHED 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

Bush, Cheney questioned

BUSH from page 1

CIA Director George Tenet said was "blinking red" with warnings of a terrorist strike. Except in this case, he had a very limited audience in a private setting.

The nation's top two elected officials were to be quizzed about why, for instance, the Bush administration didn't make terrorism a more urgent priority, especially after an Aug. 6, 2001, presidential daily brief that, among other things, warned of "patterns of suspicious activity in this country consistent with preparations for hijackings."

"Why wasn't it higher, given the threat levels in spring and summer 2001?" says former Indiana Rep. Timothy Roemer, a Democratic member of the commission. Why, Roemer wonders, didn't the Aug. 6 memo cause more people to man "battle stations" in the month before the attacks?

The Bush administration has said it did make terrorism a top priority, and that there was nothing in the memo that specified the type, time or place of an attack on America.

Community raises awareness of assault

AWARENESS from page 1

Slotnick.

Everywoman's Center counselor advocates and educator advocates were on hnd for the event wearing Take Back the Night T-shirts to serve as resources for anyone who needed them.

Take Back the Night first appeared in Europe in 1976, and has continued throughout the world as a sign of empowerment for women, men and children.

The event was organized by a small group of students who have been meeting every Wednesday since the beginning of the semester.

The events are co-sponsored by VOX - UMass, an existing group designed to educate the university community about reproductive health and rights, to translate increased awareness into pro-choice activism on campus and to serve as a coalition partner to state, national and international reproductive rights efforts, the Everywoman's Center, the women's studies department, Planned Parenthood, Sigma Psi Zeta, Earthfoods, Green-O, Sweets 'N More, Campus Center Catering Services, Coca-Cola, Yankee Candle Company and WMUA 91.1 FM.

Campus Perspectives

By Samantha Louras

What is your favorite part of spring?

freshman
English major

"I like the Red Sox, I'm obsessed. When the season starts, everything is better."
Caitlin O'Donoghue

freshman
History major

"Skateboarding."
Charles Perkowski

sophomore
Anthropology major

"The weather."
Trudy Smith

grad student
Hospitality and Tourism Management major

"Spring fever."
Kendra Porter

freshman
Theater major

"Being able to study outside in the sun."
Sarah Modr

junior
History and Philosophy major

"Baseball."
Dave Rednan

FREE
T-SHIRT & DVD
www.1-800-GO-GUARD.com/baldr

Be a Leader in the Army National Guard, and get the respect of soldiers who will look to you for leadership. You'll also get career training, money for college and opportunities to develop management skills – plus special training to prepare you for advanced positions. Most Guard members train part-time, so they're ready to respond if their community or the Nation needs them.

If you have at least 60 college credits and meet other requirements, you can apply to Officer Candidate School. The Guard offers flexible Officer programs that can help you stay in school or let you work full-time.

Graduate as an Army Guard Officer.

ARMY NATIONAL GUARD
YOU CAN

1-800-GO-GUARD Ext. 195 www.1-800-GO-GUARD.com/baldr

IBM grant makes new Linux computer lab a possibility was created in 1999. Last year, the University received a highly competitive IBM Shared University Research award, valued at $255,000, to help launch the Center for Collaborative Adaptive Sensing of the Atmosphere.

IBM from page 1

In the next ten years, researchers from UMass Amherst and four other universities involved with CASA hope to revolutionize the way the atmosphere is monitored. Mark Hanny, the vice president of Strategic Alliances at IBM as well as the IBM executive in charge of the UMass-IBM partnership, said CASA will allow testing of emerging technologies such as grid computing.

Hanny also said one of the reasons that IBM has established such a strong relationship with UMass is because of its students.

"One of the things we look for in a university is the best and brightest students, which can be found at UMass ... Some of the students in the programs we sponsor come to work for IBM and help us maintain our leadership, and at the same time they also go to work for our customers ... We currently employ about 400 UMass graduates, and that continues to grow every year."

UMass is one of the only schools in the country that has created the IT minor program. Hanny said the program is another reason for IBM's interest in UMass because it gives students the skills that IBM and its clients look for in employees.

"The economy is growing very strong right now, particularly in the US, and there is a strong demand for IT skills in the marketplace, and one of the things that we're looking for with UMass is to give students those skills," said Hanny.

"UMass has a strong relationship with IBM because their strengths and our strengths intersect at many points," said Marla Michel, UMass director of Industry Liaison and Economic Development. "The partnership is good for UMass students because the more we engage in with IBM the more opportunities students will have to work there when they graduate."

Hanny said IBM would work in the future to help UMass become more of an "on-demand campus." He said this means integrating technology to help people at UMass be able to do more things electronically, such as taking advantage of more wireless technology in the classroom.

"You will continue to see us make investments with other professors and we will continue to work with UMass in various research areas," said Hanny.

Coke human rights record examined

COKE from page 1

but Kovlik spoke about new possible legal action against Coca-Cola.

"Coca-Cola's record in India is scandalous and it doesn't stop going," said Amit Srivastara, speaker for the India Resource Center and Global Resistance. The primary problem in India has been the allegations of Coca-Cola contaminating not only the local water supplies but about the drinks it provides in the Indian market.

"Found in the drinks sold on the Indian markets, drinks were found to contain pesticides like DDT ... as 30 times higher than the levels allowed by the European Union or the United States," he claimed, speaking of results found when authorities decided to test the quality of Coca-Cola products distributed in the Indian market.

"After months of investigation, it has been shown that the Coca-Cola Co. is rife with murder," concluded Rogers. He tried to stress to students, "You're lending your name and logo to Coca-Cola as a market for their product."

It was this ideal, Rogers believed, that should prompt the students here to take action.

"First important thing in this campaign is making Coca-Cola take the right road even if by Low Road Morality — by [placing] social and economic pressure on them," he said.

Rogers and the Radical Student Union hope that UMass is willing to do its part in putting the economic pressure on Coca-Cola by preventing the administration from renewing the contract that expires this June. By losing its contract with UMass, Coca-Cola will be losing a multi-million dollar market.

At the end of the teach-in, graduate student Martina Robinson exclaimed, "Was no one paying attention? How were they allowed to do that?"

Not all members of the UMass community were as outraged as Robinson when hearing about the allegations against Coca-Cola. Many expressed sentiments about "all corporations doing it" and view the new bid Coca-Cola will have to submit to win the new contract eagerly.

"I think we can use it was a bargaining tool by using it to get money from [Coca-Cola]," said Lee Haripko, Jewish Campus Service Corps Fellow at Hillel House.

Lee Bouton, a sophomore majoring in criminal justice, shared similar thoughts with Haripko when he spoke for himself and a friend saying, "We support Coca-Cola. We support it because without them we wouldn't have money for our sports teams, the Mullins Center and other things."

Students still in favor of the contract with Coca-Cola and the administration have made campaigning and rallying against Coca-Cola hard for the Radical Student Union.

According to Ian Trefethen, senior psychology majors and member of Radical Student Union heavily involved in the Coca-Cola campaign said, "The RSU was systematically threatened with suspension just for handing out flyers."

Threat and opposition will not cause the members of the Radical Student Union to end their campaign against Coca-Cola here.

"We have left a note for the Chancellor telling him we're sorry he's not here, but we'll be back," promised Lang before protestors left the office of the Chancellor, as directed by UMass Police.

Gonzalez under fire

GONZALEZ from page 1

Associated Press.

In a response to the controversy generated by the column, the paper's editorial board ran a letter to readers in Thursday's edition saying Gonzalez's views do not reflect The Collegian's opinion.

"We do not hold back from printing news stories, columns or editorials that may upset our readership — instead, we seek to both inform and stir debate through our publication," the letter said. "Our decision to publish Gonzalez' column — an opinion piece written by a member of our campus community — is the only way for us to live up to this ideal."

— Associated Press

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
DC DESIGN

R&P
Liquors and Fine Wines
Huge selection of micros, imported beers, and wine!
505 West Street
Amherst, MA 01002
413-253-9742

THE WATERFRONT
WEDNESDAYS FEATURING:
$1 Draft
$1 Shooters
$2 Well Drinks
Hosted by DJ KT
Spinning hip-hop and reggae all night long!
No cover charge, 21+ only, 10-2am
FRIDAYS FEATURING:
New! Drink specials every week!
Hosted by: DJ Joe E Mark
No cover charge, 21+ only, 9-2 am
920 Main St.
Lower Rd. to Holyoke
413-532-2292
www.waterfronttavern.com
Every Wednesday and Friday Night is College Night!!!

REEF
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Cherry Hill Golf Course & The Harp "10th Hole" at Cherry Hill
Have teamed up to present the...
THE HARP
Friday Student Special!
Includes 9 Holes with food from the grill and DRAFT BEER or SODA
$15.00 per person- Noon-6pm every Friday
Carts Available
Great Food!
Great Beer!
Great Fun!
"A Course For Everyone"
No tee time necessary
• Just North of UMass Campus on Route 63- Montague Road
Call 256-4071 or 548-6900 for information
$1.00 OFF 9 Holes with Student I D any day, any time (1 coupon per person, not combineable)
$2.00 OFF 18 Holes with Student I D any day, any time (1 coupon per person, not combineable)

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, APRIL 30, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Maintaining order at Hobart top priority

It's become a staple part of the University of Massachusetts spring semester experience. Along with annual events such as Spring Concert, Orchard Hill Bowl Weekend and Southwest Week, the event known as "Hobart Hoedown," held on Hobart Lane, also has the ability to attract thousands of partygoers. But the hoedown is one event that does not receive approval from UMass administration, the UMass Police Department or the Amherst Police Department.

Excessive alcohol consumption, the feeling of having to party as the end of the semester approaches and the increase in temperatures are among the reasons people become rowdy on Hobart Lane during the annual hoedown. Last year may have been the wildest hoedown in history. A riot, which occurred in conjunction with the Hoedown, caused unnecessary violence and extensive damage to the area.

But revelers and bystanders of last year's event said they felt the police provoked the riot and caused the situation to erupt and ended with 45 arrests. Hopefully this year's Hoedown, expected to occur this weekend, turns out to be a quieter party.

It is not surprising that college students attend parties and engage in drinking. But disturbances that get out of hand are inexcusable. Lighting trees on fire and throwing lawn chairs and beer bottles, like at last year's Hoedown, are intolerable actions — no matter what the occasion.

It's also important for students who attend UMass to realize the reverberations that events like Hobart Hoedown can cause. Disturbances in the Southwest Residential Area, for instance, where only a small fraction of the University community engages in, hamper the school's reputation. Events such as these inflict unnecessary harm to the school's status as a top-tier public university.

It will be a great day indeed when disturbances do not overshadow the good of the University and when this institution can shed its unflattering nickname of "ZooMass."

Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life, has made stern messages about students who may engage in inappropriate action. He has threatened to expel any students who "act out and endanger others." Students should take these statements seriously. Being expelled just weeks before the school year comes to an end should remind students exactly what they will be putting on the line.

Restraint from police departments is also in order. Infuriating college partygoers will only turn any scene nasty. Caution and careful planning should be exercised to avoid a scene like last year's from reoccurring.

Police officers are in charge of the regulation and control of community members and events. Preventing and maintaining order is their top priority and no matter how much crowds act out, unleashing unrestrained aggression will only make matters worse.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

A PUERTO RICAN'S RESPONSE ON GONZALEZ'S COLUMN

When I read Rene Gonzalez's article, I was appalled and disappointed. Appalled because of such phrases like "That was not heroism. It was prophetic idiocy" and "It's hard to say that I have any sympathy for his death because i don't feel his 'service' was necessary." Disappointed because Gonzalez chose to include in his personal tirade that "in [his] neighborhood in Puerto Rico" Pat Tillman would have been called a "pendejo." I do not know what neighborhood in Puerto Rico Gonzalez grew up in but in my Puerto Rican neighborhood a person who dies because he chose to forgo a comfortable life to try to make a difference in the world, whether he agrees with that or not, would NEVER be called a "pendejo," which by the way, connotes a more negative implication than "idiot."

The situation in Iraq and Afghanistan has divided not only the country but the world as a whole. Whether one believes the fight is for good or evil the fact remains that both men and women are serving in a foreign land and dying in an effort to make a difference in the world. True, perhaps many of them enter the service to get an education and a better life, but they also believe, at some level, that what they are doing, is for the good of not only this nation but the world community.

My belief is that Tillman joined the Army out of a deep-rooted belief that he was making a change. That someone would take such a noble act, whether or not they believe it to be heroic, and profess to the world that Tillman was "a G.I. Joe' guy who got what was coming to him" makes my skin crawl. I have a friend, from MY neighborhood Puerto Rico who could live a very comfortable life, and yet, he aspires to enter the service of the U.S. armed forces, and I am certain it is not because of some "frat boy propaganda bull."

Again, I do not know what neighborhood Gonzalez comes from in Puerto Rico but I do know that the majority of Puerto Ricans on the island value the life and the sacrifices made by those who participate in trying to make the world a better place. Gonzalez need not agree with what the U.S. policy is in the Middle East, but that does not translate in to our service men and women being chastised as acting out "macho patriotic crap." Lucky for him, the "dreamy American thought process" gives him the right to express his own opinion. He should, however, abstain from parlaying his opinion as, in any way, related to Puerto Rican people.

Maite A. Garcia
UMass alum

EXPOSING THE TRUTH

As one who is sick and tired of everyone dancing around the Bush war dialogue, thank God for your writer who i learned from "Crossfire" correctly pegged Pat Tillman for what he is — someone who was probably cut down in Afghanistan because his judgment was clouded by his ego. Keep exposing what the majority of Americans are just plain afraid to admit is the truth.

Larry Walters
Orlando, FL

A REFRESHING VIEW

Today, i was reading a small free non-regionai paper, mainly distributed in this area at public transportation stations, called the Metro. I read a report on the article written by Rene Gonzalez, and to be quite honest was strangely refreshed to hear something contrary to all the reports I've heard regarding Pat Tillman. Once entering the school library here at the University of Pennsylvania, I saw a much more in-depth report on espn.com. it was after reading that report, I decided to send in this e-mail to The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Since Sept. 11, this country underwent a time where it was not "American" to say something contrary to what we heard from Washington, or to actually have a differing opinion than a gung-ho approach toward Iraq. It is not my opinion to agree with almost all of what Gonzalez wrote, but it is without reservation that we have to continue to support views of all kinds, as long as they are not hateful.

What Gonzalez said in fact actually does make sense to some people in our population, albeit a very small percentage, and it is important that the views of these small sub-cultures and all cultures within our society be heard, regardless of what we think of them. We cannot forget that the leaders of our country more than 200 years ago fought for these freedoms, the same way that Tillman fought to keep them alive for all of us in today's world, and in the meantime also helping to install these freedoms for those within the borders of Iraq.

Brendan Haslam
University of Pennsylvania student

APPRECIATION OF BALANCED COVERAGE

Although I think Rene Gonzalez's opinion on Pat Tillman is a bit extreme, I want to thank you for giving two different perspectives on the news. It's ridiculous to think a newspaper should be selective in what it prints. By showing opposing views, readers can come up with their own opinions instead of being told what to think (e.g. Fox News). Tillman believed in fighting for his country, and we should be glad there are people like him. At the same time, we can't overlook the sacrifice that noncelebrities have given. Poor Americans who join the Army to support their family and give the ultimate sacrifice are overlooked. They don't give up millions of dollars to fight for what they believe in, but they are every bit as heroic as Tillman.

Joe Cronin
UMass student

Bidding adieu to Brussels

World Perspectives

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz

The escalator from the ordinary platform at the St. Katherine metro stop in Brussels, Belgium ascends directly into what may best be described as a cozy enclave at the heart of the capital of Europe.

The first thing one notices as he or she rises is the gray stone towers atop an early gothic cathedral painted surreally upon a bright blue sky, or, at night, a sky that glows a mystical lavender, resulting from the convergence of obscured violet and cyan neon lights about a block behind the church.

A short moment later, the near entirety of the side of the cathedral, complete with primitive flying buttresses and relatively undersized windows no longer housing brilliantly colored depictions of biblical legends past, comes into plain view. By the crest of the ascent, one finds him or herself rather inconspicuously placed in front of a modestly fountained pool in the middle of a wide and peaceful cobblestone promenade running from the base of the Cathedrale Saint-Katherine approximately 200 yards back to the point where the former canal Drogenbos once intersected the landscape.

The Place Saint-Katherine is ringed by the finest, though sadly the most expensive, seafood restaurants in all of Brussels. Two blocks behind the cathedral is Boulevard Anspach, the principal avenue in the city center. Another block beyond that lays the Grand Place and Manneken-Pis statue, in all of their historic splendor and pride at the geographical and cultural center of Brussels.

The few blocks just off to the side of Place Saint-Katherine and sheltered from Anspach by the neo-baroque palace playing host to the stock market are known as Saint-Gery, and it is probably the coolest neighborhood in Bru-sels. Many a sunny day jaunt through the numerous hip open-air cafes lining the cobblestone streets and alleys has born witness to the tranquil mingling of French and Flemish upon the gentle breeze, sprinkled with a subtle flavoring of Spanish, Italian, German, English and Chinese for good measure. Indeed, many a sunny day jaunt has found itself abruptly halted at the mercy of the quaint café tables and the succulent promise of petit cappuccinos served in trendy, white mugs ...

In less than three weeks I will leave Brussels and return to Massachusetts to see my friends and family for the first time since August. I will bid adieu to the friends that I have made here and to the beloved room that I rent on the top floor of the building at the corner of Rue St. Katherine that overlooks both the cathedral and its breath-taking clock tower as well as Saint-Gery. I have made such a transition before: in fact, the best 11 months of my life were spent as an exchange student in Venezuela when I was a junior in high school with virtually no contact whatsoever with my life in the United States.

Yet even now I begin to reminisce nostalgically about my life over the past eight months or so, I can recognize just how special and unique an experience I have had here in Europe. I would like to take this opportunity to share with those readers at the University of Massachusetts who are contemplating the benefits and costs of taking a semester or year abroad, the wonder that is the study abroad experience, and to encourage those who have not as yet entertained such a notion to do so.

The experience of studying abroad is an invaluable one. The number of intangibles that one aquires and learns living in another culture is seemingly infinite.

The experience of studying abroad is an invaluable one. The number of intangibles that one acquires and learns living in another culture is seemingly infinite. Aside from approaching academic issues from novel perspectives in classes comprised of a demographic entirely different from that of UMass, even something as simple as strolling down the sidewalk in a foreign culture may prove a profoundly exhilarating and eye-opening experience.

Learning and assuming the nuances of diverse cultures is probably the most effective and stimulating manner of expanding one's horizons, and is an all-together highly fun activity. During the course of my two yearlong study abroad experiences, for example, I have relished the opportunity to learn to dance like a Venezuelan and offer a toast like a Belgian. These lessons have helped me grow and think in more ways than I can even conceive of.

Each new breakthrough in understanding a culture presents a vast new world of concepts, possibilities, and intriguing realities and reinvents the self in magical ways. Nowhere is this phenomenon more evident than in the realm of foreign language acquisition. Language frames the way we think and it is quite interesting, indeed, to observe how unique forms of expressing a notion entail distinct comprehensions of and attitudes about such an idea. I therefore find it refreshing that in Latin America one does not say, for example, "I can't play guitar," but rather "I don't know how to play guitar," thereby leaving open the possibility of learning to play.

I would like to assure my readers that the insecurities surrounding the decision to go abroad should not inhibit it. Myths of "anti-Americanism" and "anti-Semitism" are, in my experience, grossly over-exaggerated. The people that you will meet abroad realize that you are just one individual and not the government of your country. You may or may not find yourself in lively political and social debates, depending upon your desire to discuss politics and culture, but this is hardly anti-Americanism. The closest I have come to experiencing such prejudice was from a Danish girl that I met on a train who was living near an American military base in Germany. Since the soldiers enjoy coming into the city and getting drunk and into bar fights with the locals on the weekends, she wanted to vent a bit of frustration about such belligerent and ungracious cultural customs. Of course, this did not pertain to me and it was entirely justified, so I didn't mind.

In closing, I encourage you all to investigate the possibilities available to you through the university and other programs such as the Council on International Educational Exchange to augment your college experience. You all stand to gain immensely both as students and as people by stepping outside the prechartered study plan and making your life happen. I know that I need not lecture the UMass audience in the greatness of the college experience and I hope only that many of you will seize the precious opportunity you have and make it great.

Visit the UMass International Programs Office at www.umass.edu/ipo/ for more information.

Aaron Wodin-Schwartz is a Collegian columnist.

Innocent until proven guilty

Becky Martins

For many Americans, this principle symbolizes what our country's judicial system was built on. As United States citizens, we have the right to a fair trial. Hardly, are we denied the opportunity to defend our name and ourselves. Until substantial evidence is provided to prove someone's guilt, he or she is innocent. Yet, despite the heavy connotation of the phrase "Innocent until proven guilty," not everyone honors these words. Oftentimes, innocence is not assumed, but instead doubted until proven.

When we look to everyday life, we realize the truth behind this growing trend. In the media, we constantly hear of different public scandals, such as the Michael Jackson child molestation case. People are quick to make judgments and establish definite viewpoints on the matter, though no verdict has been reached in court. Granted, we may all make assumptions pertaining to someone's behavior, but to be fair, nothing is true until it is proven. In Jackson's case, regardless of our personal views of the man, no one has the right to stamp him with such a serious label as child molester unless sufficient evidence can back up the claim.

It is also not uncommon to face injustice in our everyday comings and goings. Recently, a family member of mine received word via mail that someone had been making fraudulent charges to her credit card account. Upset enough by such news, she assumed she would at least find support from her credit card company. But to her shock, upon calling them, she was met with nothing but suspicion and endless questions. The 30-year-old was treated as though she was responsible for all the ridiculous purchases made, despite her perfect credit history. It was not until she had become visibly upset that the company's representative backed down, listened to her side and realized what truly had occurred. Until this point, he had had no compassion for this fellow human being. It literally took the victim's distressed state to make him realize the company's accusations had very little factual basis, and thus, were not necessarily true. Luckily, a potentially devastating legal situation was avoided.

At the University of Massachusetts, many of the campus' legal procedures are carried out in a fair way. Students are informed of the consequences of certain actions, given warnings if they do something wrong, and then are punished accordingly if they continue violating school policy. Certain procedures must exist in an establishment if it wishes to maintain order and a safe environment for all. But despite the good intentions of this legal plan, there are flaws in the UMass system. Personally, I have witnessed injustices take place on two separate occasions to friends, whose names will not be mentioned. These individuals were forced to prove their innocence, though they were guilty of nothing in the first place. And not everything worked out for the best in the end.

One friend of mine had once pledged a sorority and as a gift, received an empty champagne bottle with Greek puffy paint letters on it. Because of its significance, she thought it would be cute to display it in her dorm room. Now, mind you, this was an empty wine bottle, which contents were never consumed on UMass property. With that said, you can understand her surprise when upon returning to school from Thanksgiving break, she found an alcohol warning in her mailbox. She didn't even drink in college, yet she was being accused for possessing what the notice called a "full" bottle of Merlot, supposedly discovered by an RA upon inspecting rooms. My friend was fully aware of the inaccuracy of this accusation, but how could she prove herself when the University already assumed her to be guilty? In the end, she was let off, simply because the RD she met with for her alcohol hearing was having a "good day."

Another case of unfair legal procedure occurred to a different acquaintance of mine. In her suite someone was throwing a party and, not wanting to get involved, she decided to stay in her room. The only thing she contributed to was signing in guests for the person hosting the get-together. Yet, when RAs entered the suite in response to complaints of rowdiness, everyone including my friend was found guilty of a list of university violations. The RAs had not personally witnessed everyone drinking, but everyone was written up on similar charges anyway. Essentially, based on their false assumptions, my friend who had purposely stayed out of tro...ble found herself knee-deep in the mess. And in the end, she was fined and forced to take alcohol-awareness classes, despite her innocence.

UMass does its best to crack down on underage drinking, noise violations, or anything else that could harm students. But the school must not always assume everyone is guilty as charged. Before students are blamed for something, the accusation should be examined a little more carefully. Students should be given the full opportunity to explain themselves.

The principle Innocent until proven guilty is something we should all recognize as important. Too often, people assume things of one another and form false opinions before knowing the truth. A lack of trust forms. Relations between any two parties, such as students and administration, remain shaky. Only when we do not have to prove our innocence and deny our guilt will things ever improve. Until then, there will always be future problems to deal with.

Becky Martins is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, APRIL 30, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

And the winner is...

Slightly Cheaper earns a spot on the Spring Concert bill

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

The weather is finally nice and spring is in the air, which of course means one thing: Spring Concert. This weekend brings one of the most anticipated events of the entire year and the student population at large is obviously excited about it. While the main bill, headlined by Busta Rhymes and featuring Jurassic 5 and The Slip, should prove to be more then enough entertainment. There is a fourth act that will be taking the stage at the Mullins on Sunday. Slightly Cheaper, a grossly over-exaggerated, The people that you will meet abroad realize that you are just one individual and not the government of your country. You may or may not find yourself in lively political and social debates, depending upon your desire to discuss politics and culture, but this is hardly anti-Americanism. The closest I have come to experiencing such prejudice was from a Danish girl that I met on a train who was living near an American military base in Germany. Since the soldiers enjoy coming into the city and getting drunk and into bar fights with the locals on the weekends, she wanted to vent a bit of frustration about such belligerent and ungracious cultural customs. Of course, this did not pertain to me and it was entirely justified, so I didn't mind.

Slightly Cheaper might not ring a bell yet but it is on its way up. The rock/reggae/jazz/dance/pop band formed this past January but has already played a handful of shows around the Western Massachusetts area. Earlier this week they won a battle of the bands contest. The prize was a spot on the Spring Concert bill, one that will have the band playing in front of a crowd larger than many established, major-label bands see.

Two of the four members, bassist Scott Dean and guitarist Jay Metcalf, have gone to UMass while the other members, singer Jen Nelson and drummer Troy, are from the Western Massachusetts area.

"I went to school with a friend of [Troy]'s and he introduced us," recalled Nelson in an interview following a short set the band played in the Campus Center earlier this week. " ... and then I used to work with Scott and the other band that [Jay] is in, the drummer is a friend of mine and he hooked us up."

The band's unique style, which blends many different genres to create an original sound, comes from the members' varied influences.

"I've been influenced as much by guitar, keyboards and vocals as I have been drummers," Troy said, "other instruments playing various lines inspire me to do things."

"I listened to a lot of Grateful Dead and I listened to a lot of Nirvana, and then I got into dance music, like jungle and drum-and-bass," Dean said, perhaps best exemplifying the diverse sound of Slightly Cheaper.

"I always wanted to sing just like Robert Plant," Nelson offered. The band also has a great respect of Radiohead and Nelson also notes that she wishes she could sing like Thom Yorke.

"We could open up our tunes [in a jam band-esque way]," Dean said, "but we try to structure, we try to keep them more organized, we're trying to go for a more ... "

"Prettier package," Nelson finished.

Slightly Cheaper is playing shows around the Western Massachusetts area constantly and are always working on their songs and honing their skills. For now though they have the imminent task of entertaining the thousands of clamoring students on Sunday. The band however isn't scared, rather they are very excited about the great opportunity they are being given.

"I'm wicked excited about playing through, like, bomb equipment," Nelson laughs.

"My drum set's falling apart," Troy jokes. Metcalf adds, "I don't own an electric guitar."

"I think Wade Boggs ate a chicken before every game," Troy said, referring to pre-show rituals. "I don't know if that's exactly how I'll prepare for the show."

However the band chooses to warm up, they will, no doubt, make sure they are well prepared. Slightly Cheaper will be initiating Sunday's festivities when they take the stage at 6 p.m. to introduce their imaginative blend of styles and genres to the largest audience they've ever seen.

Massachusetts gets in shape with Punk Rock

JOSH REYNOLDS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Instructor Hilken Mancini leads her Punk Rock Aerobics class in a move called "You be the Star Air Guitar" at the Middle East nightclub in Cambridge last week.

By Brooke Donald
Associated Press

CAMBRIDGE — It's three o'clock on a Saturday afternoon and the small crowd gathered in the dimly lit nightclub is pumped and sweaty.

But these clubgoers aren't in a mosh pit at a rock concert — they're working out, sweatin' to oldies that don't quite meet Richard Simmons' standards.

In Punk Rock Aerobics, exercisers jump, head-bang, kick and punch to hits by The Ramones, Sex Pistols and other indie-rock favorites. There's no gym, no mirrors, no dress code, and, "No more sucky classes full of brain-dead bimbos in spandex thongs," according to the Web site.

"At first I was skeptical," said Amy Monaghan of Boston. "But then you get moving and it's really fun."

Having fun while getting a workout is what Punk Rock Aerobics is all about, according to its creators.

"If you're having a hard time, that's OK, just keep moving. Who cares what you look like," co-founder Maura Jasper said.

The routines and moves, including "You Be the Star Air Guitar" (arms swing like a windmill) and "the skank" (marching aggressively in place), are loosely based on the punk ethic of simplicity and intensity.

"A lot of the songs have three chords, so we keep the routines to three moves per song," Jasper said. "It's easy, easy."

Jasper, a graphics designer and nanny, thought up Punk Rock Aerobics with friend and singer Hilken Mancini three years ago. Together, the women, both thirtysomethings from Boston and certified aerobics instructors, published a 208-page illustrated book outlining the program earlier this year.

"We realized we weren't looking or feeling great. We needed to get our heart rates up, have fun, not turn into blobs," Mancini said.

But their mental picture of aerobics classes — gym-bunny types, mirror-wrapped rooms and bouncy pop music — wasn't appealing.

"I just couldn't imagine going to one of those classes," Jasper said.

The women knew they weren't alone.

"I wouldn't say there is any one person we're trying to attract. It's the woman intimidated by a gym or the man who was the kid last picked for his junior high kickball team," Jasper said. "It's not a bunch of people with blue hair."

Today, Jasper and Mancini have a loyal following at their weekly sessions in Cambridge, and they've recently added another class across the Charles River in Boston's Allston neighborhood. There is a nominal $7 to $8 charge for a 90-minute workout.

About a dozen 30-somethings are gathered at the Middle East on this particular Saturday — and yes, one man does have blue hair.

The philosophy of the class is simple: keep moving, no matter what.

"It's sort of this fine line between choreography and chaos," Mancini said.

Dressed in shorts, knee socks and fitted T-shirts, the instructors tag-team the class, shouting out and demonstrating the moves. A boom box sits on the bar, blaring Blondie and other classic punk bands. Instead of free weights, spray-painted bricks rest in a pile on the floor awaiting the strength training segment of the workout.

Mancini and Jasper start and end the class with classic stretches given sassy names such as "Ripped T-shirt Stretch" or "Cat Scratch Stretch."

After an intense 45 minutes of knee lifts, lunges, jogging in place and jumping jacks, exercisers grab two bricks to use as dumbbells for weight training.

Good form is not lost on the women, who come closest to Jane Fonda-style aerobics teachers when they remind participants to "bend your knees, lift your chest, make sure you're breathing."

"They give me a great workout, they're hilarious and it's not intimidating," said Monaghan.

Franchising the routines to gyms, however, goes against the philosophy of the workout.

"We really embrace the attitude of doing it your own way," Jasper said. "That's really the spirit of the class."

Jasper and Mancini have traveled to New York City and London to teach classes in nightclubs and promote their book in record stores. They'll be in New York again in May, and plan on heading to the Pacific Northwest in June.

The next step for the MP3

Cigarette-lighter-sized device brings live music to listeners

By Lukas I. Aalpert
Associated Press

NEW YORK — There was the 78, the 45 and then the MP3 — all heralded as great innovations in music recording technology. Fast forward a bit and now, minutes after your favorite band sounds its last note, you can load a live recording onto a cigarette-lighter-sized hard drive hanging off your keychain.

Take it home, toss the digital files onto your computer and then e-mail it to all your friends with the message "Dude! These guys are awesome!"

Oh, how far we've come.

On May 21, the first of the interfaces — digital kiosks really — will be installed at Maxwell's, a small indie-rock club in Hoboken, N.J. At $10 a pop for the recording, and $20 for the reusable, keychain pen drive, let the downloading begin.

"This is a tool that allows fans to take home and share some of the best independent music from small live venues around the country," said Daniel Stein, CEO of Dimensional Associates, a private equity firm which owns eMusic Live, which created the machines.

For Scott Ambrose Reilly, president of eMusic Live, the idea is to let fans have a legal copy of the show, which gives smaller artists and their labels creative control over the quality of the recording and a commercial stake in its distribution.

It is not a one-time recording, and the fans can share the files with their friends, providing free word-of-mouth publicity for smaller bands.

For eMusic Live, the devices are just the next step for a service that they, and competitors Clear Channel already provide: burning CDs of live performances right after a show ends.

"What we were seeing is that a large number of people were taking their CDs home and ripping them to MP3s, so we thought it would benefit music fans to eliminate that middle step," Reilly said.

The technology is quite simple: The listener goes up to the touch-screen kiosk after the show and buys the pen drive with a credit card from a dispenser alongside the screen. Once that's done, the pen drive is inserted into a slot and the recording — in the form of MP3 files — are loaded onto the device's 128 MB hard drive.

A receipt for the transaction is then sent to your e-mail address.

"I can remember when I started the debate was whether the 45 or 33 would be more successful," said Richard Gottehrer, author of hits like "My Boyfriend's Back," and "I Want Candy," and chairman of The Orchard, an Internet-based marketing venture for smaller acts also owned by Dimensional Associates.

"Now the Napsters of the world are yesterday's news and this is the newer, legal, next step," he said.

Whether the technology will take off remains to be seen, but its creators are optimistic and hope to roll the machines into venues around the country soon.

As for fighting music piracy, Reilly said the technology would help, but wasn't its main focus.

"This is more about spreading the music around and less a fight about piracy and legislative issues," he said.

At a demo for the device at a sound studio on Tuesday, a New York-based band, Elysian Fields, performed three songs, which were quickly loaded onto the pen drives afterward.

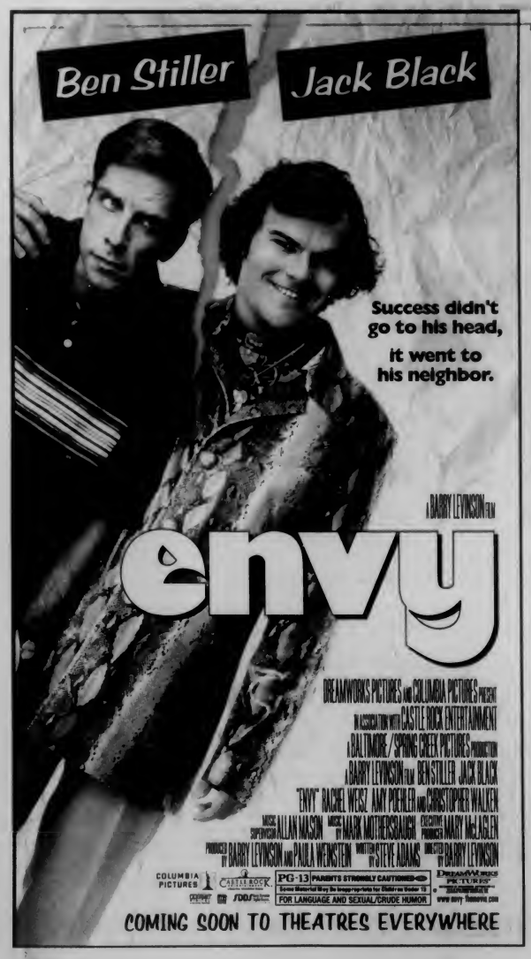
Once at home, the device was inserted into the USB port of a laptop and voila! singer Jennifer Charles' smoky, lilting lyrics and Oren Bloedow's reverbed-out, brooding guitar lines filled the living room.

Charles called the new technology "a beautiful thing."

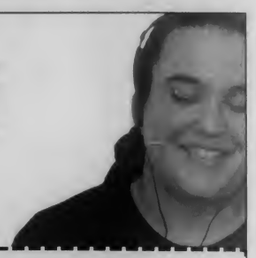
"I'm very excited to be a part of this incredible and sexy technology," she said between songs. "It makes us feel very James Bond. You can have your little pens — wow, beam me up Scotty."

An eMusicLive USB pen drive and live music kiosk pictured on Tuesday. Now, minutes after your favorite band sounds its last note, you can load a live recording of the show onto a cigarette-lighter-sized hard drive hanging off your key chain.

PLAN AHEAD FOR NEXT YEAR



Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments-1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.



NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Visit us today at www.dailycollegian.com

We will change your mind this summer with new course selections, expanded degree programs and accredited online learning.

Use this coupon to waive the registration fee for 6 or more credits!*

Only at UMass Amherst. Only this summer.

Call 413-545-2414 for a free course catalog, or visit us online at www.umass.edu/summer

UMassAmherst Continuing Education

Where summer is a state of mind.

*Savings Code: E8T147. May be applied when registering for six or more credits at one time during Summer Session I or II, 2004. Coupon has a singular value of $38.00; multiple coupons may not be applied to one registration. Must be presented at the time of registration and may not be applied retroactively. Not redeemable in cash or credit. Not valid if credit load falls below six. Other limitations apply.

Kentucky Derby jockeys will boast advertisements

By Bruce Schreiner
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — Kentucky Derby jockeys won the right to wear advertising patches for the first time in what could become a financial bonanza.

Two days before the country's premier horse race, U.S. District Judge John Heyburn II blocked a state rule barring such corporate sponsorship. He sided with jockeys who argued that the Kentucky Horse Racing Authority's regulation violated First Amendment rights.

Jockey Shane Sellers said letting corporate names take a ride with them could boost horse racing.

"Look what happened to NASCAR," said Sellers, one of the jockeys who sued for the right to wear ads. "All of a sudden, NASCAR is one of the biggest sports. It's because of the endorsements. We need change, but in the end, I think everybody is going to be happy."

While the judge's preliminary decision applied only to jockeys who sued — including Jerry Bailey and Sellers — the state racing authority and Churchill Downs later said all riders can wear ads.

"They certainly ought to have the same rights as golfers and tennis players," said Ronald Sheffer, a lawyer for the jockeys. "There was no reason really to deny them that right."

Ads could be lucrative for jockeys. Some were offered up to $30,000 to wear a logo during the Derby.

Jockey Alex Solis, who will ride Master David in the Derby, said he lined up an advertising deal.

"It's great for us," said Solis, a plaintiff in the case. "We're finally catching up with the 2000s and moving out of the 1800s."

One advertising expert said the decision could create a stampede of advertisers trying to get deals with jockeys.

"It's a tremendous opportunity (and) will give a renewed interest for the whole sport," said Peter Arnell, chairman and chief creative officer of Arnell Group in New York, which specializes in brand consultancy and advertising.

He predicted luxury goods companies would be especially attracted to the sport.

Jockeys said they'll look for tasteful ads.

Bailey, a two-time Derby winner who will ride Wimbledon on Saturday, said jockeys are "very sensitive to the traditions of our sport and our goal is not to offend anyone."

"Jockeys work very hard and risk our lives on a daily basis. We have earned the right to make additional income," he said.

Sellers and Bailey have said ads would be placed on the right pants leg, where the most TV exposure is possible.

William Street, chairman of the state authority, said the decision to wear ads shouldn't be left only to the jockeys.

"The horse's owner, who pays all bills, should be an active participant in the decision-making process on advertising worn by jockeys," Street said.

Churchill Downs laid out rules, including barring sponsors it deems "inappropriate" or "offensive," companies involved in gambling, or companies that compete with track sponsors.

The track said it would take "appropriate" action against any jockey violating the restrictions. It didn't specify penalties.

In a separate case, Heyburn ruled that all jockeys can wear a patch with the name of the 1,100-member Jockeys' Guild.

Several jockeys were fined $500 for wearing the guild patch during last year's Derby. They appealed the fine to a state court; that case is pending.

Heyburn said he would schedule another hearing within 30 days to decide whether to make Thursday's ruling final.

Attorneys for the state racing authority argued during a two-day hearing that letting jockeys wear ads could lead to corruption. They also argued that the presence of ads or other patches could hamper racing officials' ability to determine a winner in a tight finish or whether a foul was committed.

Other states, including New York, California and Florida, already let jockeys wear ads and the guild patch.

Gov. Ernie Fletcher said the legal fight was diverting attention from the race. Fletcher urged the racing authority to work with jockeys, owners and others to develop rules that "protect the integrity of horse racing" while allowing economic opportunity for everyone.

In his order, Heyburn said the free-speech rights of jockeys outweighed the state's concerns of limiting its regulatory power.

"The regulatory process can be repaired and its provisions amended, if need be," Heyburn wrote. "Once lost in a crucial moment, the First Amendment right, even as to commercial speech, is difficult to recapture."

Jockey Pat Day, not part of either lawsuit, said he wasn't opposed to jockeys wearing ads. He said some guidelines were needed to "keep us from turning into walking billboards."

Day said owners should get a share of income from the jockey ads.

"They're the ones who pay the bill," he said. "Not all the owners make a lot of money."

Tyson set to make yet another comeback

By Tim Dahlberg
Associated Press

Mike Tyson has a date, a trainer and an opponent of sorts for his first fight in more than a year. Unlike his last comeback, he also has a wide-open heavyweight division in front of him.

Tyson's manager, Shelly Finkel, said Thursday that the former champion probably will return to the ring July 31 against journeyman Kevin McBride. Finkel said negotiations were continuing over a site and possible pay-per-view broadcast.

"We should have something definite by next week," Finkel said. "There's a lot of anticipation for him to come back."

The fight would be the first for Tyson since Feb. 22, 2003, when he knocked out Clifford Etienne in 49 seconds in Memphis, Tenn.

That was supposed to be the first of a series of comeback bouts for Tyson, who was stopped by Lennox Lewis in the eighth round of his previous fight. But Tyson hasn't been in the ring since and until recently said he wasn't sure if he wanted to fight again.

With the heavyweight division lacking a big-name champion following the retirement of Lewis, however, the 37-year-old Tyson apparently has the itch.

"I'm totally confident about that," Finkel said, referring to Tyson's desire to fight.

The bout could be televised by Showtime, which has carried most of Tyson's fights since he was released from prison in 1995 after serving time for rape. Finkel said the fight would be promoted by K-1.

"We're in the negotiating process now," Showtime boxing executive Jay Larkin said. "But this is by no means an announcement."

Tyson has been a fixture in recent months at boxing cards and drew more applause than the main event boxers when he showed up earlier this month at Madison Square Garden for heavyweight title fights involving Chris Byrd and John Ruiz.

Byrd, Ruiz, Vitali Klitschko and Lamon Brewster all hold portions of the heavyweight title, though there is no dominant fighter in the division. That increases the attractiveness of Tyson, who still has a huge fan base despite his mediocre performances in recent years.

Tyson seemed reluctant to come back when Lewis was still fighting, perhaps because he had a rematch clause with the former champion who gave him a beating in their June 2002 fight. With Lewis gone, though, the road to the top suddenly got a lot easier.

"I think he can beat any of the four guys out there that are champions," said Freddie Roach, who trained Tyson for the Etienne fight. "He just needs to have discipline and get in shape."

Roach said he will train Tyson again, beginning next month in Phoenix. Tyson quit training a week before the Etienne fight because of a dispute with Showtime over the money he would be paid, though he said at the time he was ill. Roach said he didn't think he would have any problems over whether Tyson wants to train.

JULIE JACOBSON/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Former heavyweight champion Mike Tyson sits ringside during matches at Madison Square Garden in New York last Saturday.

Jury works to decide Williams' fate

SOMERVILLE, N.J. — Jurors in Jayson Williams' manslaughter trial told the judge Thursday they are in agreement on six of the eight charges against Williams and are split on two others. The judge told them to keep trying.

The development came on the afternoon of the second full day of deliberations in the case of the retired NBA star.

"Let me indicate to you that we are going to ask you to continue in your deliberations," Superior Court Judge Edward M. Coleman told the panel.

It was not specified which counts were still being debated. Among the charges Williams faces are aggravated manslaughter, the most serious with a potential sentence of 30 years; reckless manslaughter; assault; a weapons violation; and tampering with witnesses. The charges stem from the Feb. 14, 2002, killing of limousine service driver Costas "Gus" Christofi at Williams' mansion.

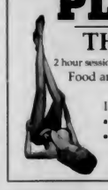
The note explaining the split was the sixth the jury had sent from the room where it had already spent over 15 hours considering the charges. Of the five notes sent on Tuesday and Wednesday, none focused on the top charge.

On Wednesday, jurors had testimony read back about what Williams said and did just after the shooting.

The panel also heard again about who allegedly told houseguests to lie to police about where they were when the shotgun Williams was handling went off in his bedroom.

Defense attorneys have argued the shooting was an accident and that a malfunction in the gun's firing mechanism caused the weapon to go off. Prosecutors contend Williams was handling the shotgun so recklessly that it amounted to a crime.

In all, the eight charges carry up to 55 years in prison.



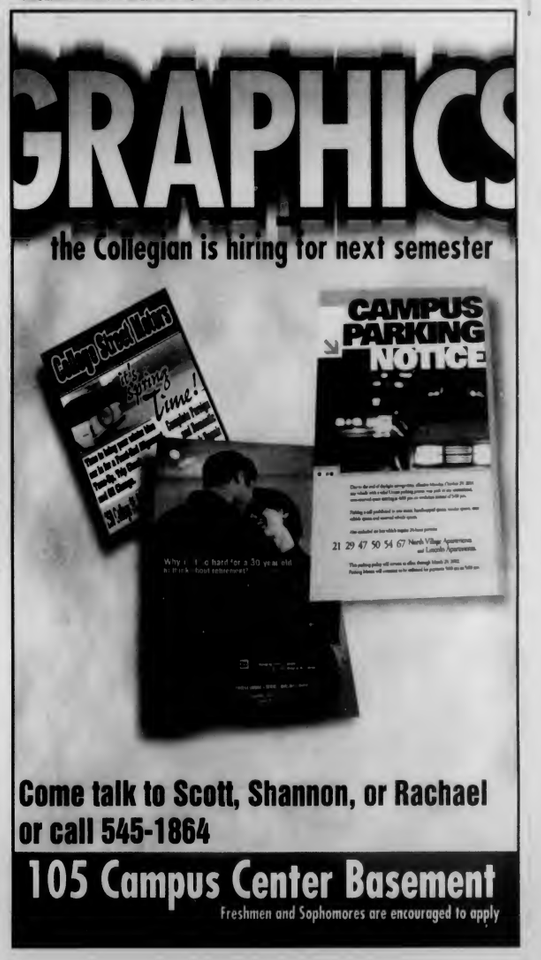
The shooting happened as the former New Jersey Nets player gave a tour of his mansion to friends and members of the Harlem Globetrotters.

To convict Williams, 36, on the manslaughter charge, the jury must unanimously find that he recklessly caused Christofi's death "under circumstances manifesting extreme indifference to human life."

Williams is also charged with trying to make the shooting look like a suicide by wiping down the shotgun and putting Christofi's hands on the gun. Prosecutors said he instructed his guests to lie to authorities.

Associated Press

Focus Testers Needed for a Playboy Themed Sim Game



PLAYBOY
THE MANSION
2 hour sessions at Cyberlore Studios in Northampton, MA
Food and beverages provided to participants.
Males and females needed.
If interested, please send:
• Name, e-mail and phone
• List of favorite games
To: focus@cyberlore.com

NEW THIS WEEK!
BIG FISH
THE COOLER
LOVE ACTUALLY
LOVE DON'T COST A THING
STUCK ON YOU
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Bruegger's
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Kim comes back with a bang for Sox

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Byung-Hyun Kim gave Fenway Park fans a reason to cheer him.

In his first outing since he made an obscene gesture when they booed him in last year's playoffs, Kim pitched five scoreless innings of one-hit ball coming off the disabled list Thursday.

"Maybe the fans that don't like me didn't show up," he said after the Boston Red Sox' third straight shutout, a 4-0 victory over the Tampa Bay Devils Rays in the opener of a day-night doubleheader.

Kim and three relievers limited the Devil Rays to three singles and Red Sox pitchers extended their scoreless streak to 32 innings, seven short of the team record set in 1916.

Boston relievers have pitched 30 1-3 straight shutout innings.

"Their confidence is high," manager Terry Francona said of his pitchers. "They are a good staff going through a great period."

Boston won its fifth straight game and has the best record in the majors at 14-6.

Kim (1-0) received loud ovations from the largest crowd at Fenway Park in 14 years when he took the mound in the first and when he left it in the fifth.

"I worry about a good start rather than how the fans are going to react," he said. "As time goes, I think I am going to have better stuff."

Last October, Kim raised his middle finger when fans booed him during introductions before the third game, and the first at Fenway, of the AL division series against Oakland.

Kim went on the disabled list in spring training with a strained right shoulder. In three rehabilitation appearances, he allowed no earned runs in 8 1-3 innings before being activated Thursday.

"He's pretty deceptive out there" with his sidearm delivery, Tampa Bay's Robert Fick said. "He seemed like he had good speed with his fastball."

Tim Wakefield pitched two innings, Mike Timlin went 1 1-3 innings and Alan Embree got the final two outs.

David Ortiz hit a two-run homer in the fifth and added two doubles as he extended his streak to nine games with an extra-base hit.

"As long as you produce for this pitching staff that we have we'll be fine," Ortiz said. "We have guys that can be the No. 1 starter on any other team."

Tampa Bay's only hits were two singles by Tino Martinez and one by Geoff Blum.

"We've been kept off balance a lot all year," Devil Rays manager Lou Piniella said.

It was the Devils Rays' seventh game with fewer than two runs. They've played 19.

Boston's shutout string began with five innings Saturday in a 3-2 win over the Yankees. The Red Sox beat New York again 2-0 on Sunday when Pedro Martinez pitched seven innings, and defeated Tampa Bay 6-0 Wednesday when Curt Schilling pitched 7 1-3.

The game was rescheduled after Tuesday night's rainout of the series opener. The attendance was 35,614, the most since 35,735 attended a game at Fenway on Sept. 18, 1990.

Kim left with a 2-0 lead on Ortiz's fifth homer of the year after Johnny Damon walked and was forced out at second by Bill Mueller in the fifth.

In the sixth, Brian Daubach doubled and scored on Mark Bellhorn's sacrifice fly off Victor Zambrano (3-2). Dave McCarty was hit by a pitch with the bases loaded in the seventh.

Kim had five starts in 49 appearances for Boston last year after being obtained from Arizona. He prefers to start and reclaimed the No. 5 spot in the rotation behind Martinez, Wakefield, Schilling and Derek Lowe, who was scheduled to pitch Thursday night's game against Damian Moss.

Kim, who allowed the tying run to reach base in the ninth inning of Boston's loss in the AL division series opener against Oakland, was jeered when the public-address announcer read his name last Oct. 4 before Game 3.

That's when he made his gesture. He apologized later but was left off the AL championship roster with a stiff shoulder.

ELISE AMENDOLA/AP/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Boston Red Sox starting pitcher Byung-Hyun Kim delivers to the Tampa Bay Devil Rays during first inning action at Fenway Park in Boston yesterday.

Ex-coach sues St. Bonaventure

By John Wawrow
Associated Press

Former Bonnies coach Jan van Breda Kolff is suing St. Bonaventure, saying he was wrongfully dismissed following last year's player eligibility scandal.

Van Breda Kolff's lawyer Lew Conner told The Associated Press on Thursday that a lawsuit was scheduled to be filed in U.S. Federal Court in Buffalo by the end of the day. He said van Breda Kolff is suing the school for breach of contract, libel, invasion of privacy and injurious falsehood.

The suit comes after van Breda Kolff — now an assistant coach with the NBA New Orleans Hornets — attempted to negotiate a resolution with the school over the approximately $1 million left on his contract when he was dismissed last April.

The dismissal came a month after the Bonnies men's basketball program was sanctioned by the Atlantic 10 Conference for using junior forward Jamil Terrell. Terrell was ruled ineligible because he failed to meet NCAA junior college transfer guidelines. Terrell earned a certificate in welding at a community college before transferring to St. Bonaventure.

A St. Bonaventure investigation found no direct evidence that van Breda Kolff knew of Terrell's status, but concluded he should have attempted to determine the player's eligibility considering he was aware of the questions raised.

St. Bonaventure's trustees based their decision to fire van Breda Kolff on the school investigation's conclusions.

Conner said van Breda Kolff has since been cleared of any wrongdoing after an NCAA investigation, last February, found he had committed no violations. St. Bonaventure spokesman Dave Ferguson said the school stands by its findings.

Minutewomen rip Rhode Island

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

In its head-to-head match-up against the University of Rhode Island, the Massachusetts softball team simply dominated.

"We did what we wanted to do. We got in the driver's seat, and just drove the bus," coach Elaine Sortino said. "We did exactly what we needed to do, established our rhythm, our tempo, took matters into our own hands. That's the way to do it."

The UMass bus went on to steamroll the Rams (14-30, 2-8 A-10) yesterday by counts of 8-0 and 5-0 respectively to extend the nation's longest home winning streak to 67. For the first time in three games, the Minutewomen (26-13, 9-1 A-10) weren't burdened with having to battle back from a deficit.

"We just had great groundball defense, turning in double plays ... that's us at our best. We've turned a lot of double plays this year; we've caught a lot of groundballs, and we've made the most out of them," Sortino said.

The Minutewomen started out the day by setting a tone that would remain unchanged throughout the doubleheader. In the top of the second, after Jenna Thurston walked both Jamie Cahalan and KC Budrewicz, Amanda Morin brought home Cahalan with a single to left. Morin and Budrewicz got extra bases on an overthrow at home.

After Aisha Franke singled home Budrewicz and stole second, Thurston walked Hilary Puglia to load up the bases. Pinch-hitting for Candice Molinari, Denise Denis came up clutch again, driving in two runs with a double that bounced off the fence.

"I brought in a hitter instead of a slapper, and we stayed with [Denis]. We needed somebody to drive the ball, and that's what Denise does," Sortino said. "The past six or seven games, she's come up and knocked some critical runs in. She broke the game open twice today, she's big."

KJ Kelley rounded out the scoring in the second with a two-run single. The Minutewomen picked up two more insurance runs in the fourth via a two-run homer by Hilary Puglia, her fifth of the year.

Kelli Arnold (14-5) pitched five innings in the win.

Game two saw more of the same, with sophomore ace Jenna Busa (12-7) finally picking up a win after several previous rough outings.

"The past few games have been kind of tough for me," Busa said. "I don't know if you would call it a slump, but things haven't been going my way. I stuck with it, just kept working hard, kept doing what I had to do, and today really feels like I can get it done big. Today really felt like me."

She celebrated her 20th birthday in grand fashion, hurling a complete game for a shutout, her sixth of the year.

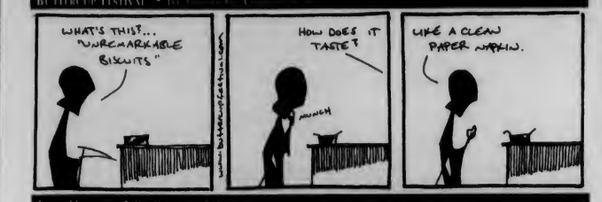
Meanwhile, the Minutewomen continued to rock the Rams on offense. After Denis slammed a double off the left-centerfield fence, Puglia raced home from second to beat out the tag for the first run of the game. UMass quickly made it 3-0 when Jamie Cahalan scored home Denis and Michea Hofness following another double, this time off right-center.

UMass added two more runs in the fifth on a solo home run by Denis and an RBI triple from Budrewicz.

For the Rams, it is the fourth straight time in which they have been shutout by UMass.

DUNKIN' DONUTS
Grand Openings
May 1st from 9 am - Noon
60 Union Street
EAST HAMPTON
FREE Giveaways!
Radio Appearance by Lazer 99.3
10 am - Noon
FREE Samples of Iced Lattes, Espresso and Cappuccino
May 1st from 9 am - Noon
110 Russell Street
HADLEY
Get Your Iced Latte Club Frequency Card!
Radio Appearance by WMAS 94.7
10 am - Noon

FREE Donut
with the purchase of a medium or large coffee
DUNKIN' DONUTS
Available only at Dunkin' Donuts, 60 Union Street in East Hampton and 110 Russell Street in Hadley. One coupon per customer per visit. May not be combined with any other coupon or promotion offer. Shop must retain coupon. Taxes not included. Coupon may not be reproduced or transferred. Void where prohibited, taxed or restricted by law. Cash Value 1/20¢. Expiration: 6/1/04.

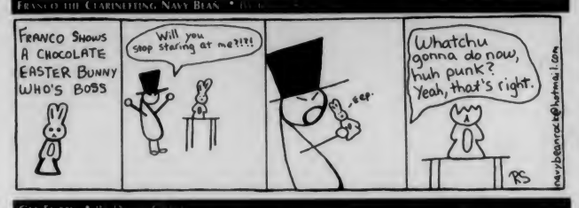


Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers.
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
549-RENT (7368)
73 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

HermanMiller AUTHORIZED DEALER
MHEC Vendor
LEXINGTON GROUP
Buyers & Sellers of Quality New & Used Office Furniture
Design & Space Planning
Furniture Rental & Leasing
Installations
Panel Systems New & Remanufactured
Eric Bascom 413.746.3064
eric@lexingtongroupinc.com
380 Union St., West Springfield, MA 01089

Change your mind this summer:

stay.
• Get the Gen Ed courses you need
• Enjoy smaller class sizes
• Keep on track for graduation
• Choose from over 200 courses and degree programs
• AND take 6 credits or more and we'll waive the registration fee!
Watch for our money-saving coupon in your mailbox.
umass.edu/contined
413-545-2414
UMassAmherst Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.



Buttercup Festival • By [illegible]

Fetal Hooper • [illegible]

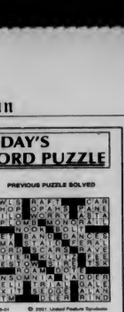
Franco the Clarinetting Navy Bean • By [illegible]

Get Fuzzy • By [illegible]

High Brow • By Aaron Lepp

Quote for the Day

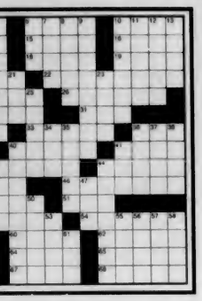
"Cherish all your happy moments: they make a fine cushion for old age."



-Christopher Morley

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Wear down
5 Tour de force
10 "Kon-Tiki" craft
14 Pitch-dividing eagle
15 Perry's predator
17 Burns alternative
18 Tang
19 Low-quality
20 Slot machine fruits
22 Type of bun
24 Entrance sheet
gofer
26 Type of salad
27 Sleep, savagely
31 Earn
32 Bonkers
33 Narcissist in tight, like a horse
38 Pup
39 Trebek of "Jeopardy!"
40 Noises
42 Tempestuous volcano
43 Legal matter
45 Boudoirware piece
46 Location of 41 Across
48 Catch cold
49 Mideast shopping area
51 Coal measure
52 The future
54 Swamp vapor
58 Pinched
60 Bridle system
62 Spring flower
63 Bus route
64 Movers
65 Mekka's speech
66 Reduced
67 Pieces of Czars
68 Throw a tantrum



DOWN
1 Entry
2 Score at

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

10-0-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

3 Old name for Tokyo
4 Tolkien Muppet
5 Ghostly meanings
6 Groundhog's mo.
7 Commentator Barnicle
8 Bit of mischief
9 Almost groom
10 Meal
11 Bakery enticement
12 Ceiling opposite
13 Hawaiian
21 007's occupation
23 Requires
25 "Sour grapes" corner
27 Queasy part
28 Cut short
29 Colorado Indians
30 Houston's st
34 Tint
36 Bay
37 Bird
39 Slightly open
40 Uproars
42 Wiggle
44 Musical notes
45 Polygraph
47 Dunk
48 Cancelled
49 Islands off Portugal
50 Computer sobr.
52 Kind of limb
56 Solemn
57 Cosmos
59 Cowboy competition
61 — Te Ata
63 Use a stopwatch
66 Distinctive time

Amherst Hairstylists
Caran's Place

Come in and get the attention you want!

- Students Always $15 shampoo & cut
- We specialize in Multi-Color Highlights using three to four complementing and blending colors
- Faze Haircolor consultation
- 1/2 price Facial Waxing on Wednesdays
- Walk-ins Welcome

253-1200
40 Main St.
Downtown Amherst
Mon-Fri 10-6
Sat 10-4
No checks-we accept debit cards

$2.00 OFF HAIRCUT
With this COUPON only

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells (vegetarian)
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
- Dill Salmon
- Chicken Marsala
- Forest Ragu (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast
For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 80
- Low: 52

SATURDAY
- High: 79
- Low: 54

SUNDAY
- High: 74
- Low: 48

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nikolas P. Markantonatos
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Samantha Louras
COPY EDITOR
Leah Wyner
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Irene Ros
PRODUCTION STAFF
Oliver Chong/ Diana Mogilevsky

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Admit it. You never fell out of love with Britney Spears.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Love handles are this spring's hottest accessory: if you've got 'em, then flaunt 'em!

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Eat chocolate. That is all.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
The time has come to roll down the windows and blast some Springsteen.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Eat some ice cream, go to the movies and indulge your inner teenybopper.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Always stretch before working out, your hamstrings will thank you.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Try on your skinny jeans. You won't be disappointed.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Update your look with a shopping spree.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Spend some time reading that good book you're always too busy for.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Don't let people get up in your grill. Stand up for yourself.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Oftentimes in life you're forced to do things you don't want to do. Just deal.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Things will all end up just fine. It will just take a little time.

Classifieds Sponsered by
WIFFLE ROCK
WWW.WIFFLEROCK.COM

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates now Renting 2 bedrm $1050/1100, 3 bedrm $1350/1400 No last months rent, Free Heat & Hot Water, 2 full baths, A.C. On busline Mon-Fri 10-5pm 253-7377

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Spa manager East Hampton Part-time nights and weekends $90/shift 413-695-3765

CANTONESE, JAPANESE, KOREAN, MANDARIN Earn $75 Individuals fluent in Cantonese, Japanese, Korean, and Mandarin needed to participate in a test development activity. Participants will provide responses to the Listening, Reading, Language Structures, Cultural Understanding, Language Acquisition, Speaking, and Writing sections of tests for these languages. Participation is by appointment May 3 – May 14. For more information call Pam Gigliotti, National Evaluation Systems, Inc. 256-0444.

Painters wanted greater Springfield area 1-413-695-2645 or 188-277-9787

EMPLOYMENT

FRENCH, GERMAN, HEBREW, ITALIAN, LATIN Earn $50 Individuals fluent in French, German, Hebrew, Italian, and Latin needed to participate in a test development activity. Participants will respond to approximately twenty-five multiple-choice questions, and provide responses to Writing and Speaking sections of tests for these languages. Participation is by appointment May 3 – May 14. For more information call Pam Gigliotti, National Evaluation Systems, Inc. 256-0444.

Lowell Area Driven Leader needed to be crew chief for one of the state's largest exterior house painting companies. Must be hardworking, Independent & have own car. Exp. preferred, but not necessary. Call Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

EMPLOYMENT

Resort Real Estate Sales Assistant: World renowned multi-million dollar real estate development company seeks motivated and confident individual to market high-end real estate at The Greenbrier Resort in White Sulphur Spring, West Virginia. Ideal candidate is very comfortable speaking on the phone & interested in pursuing a career in luxury real estate. Immediate openings available. Please send resumes to Mitch Johnson-mjohnson@gbrsc.com

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413)584-4746

EMPLOYMENT

Painters Wanted in Danvers area want a challenging Job outdoors w/good $$$? Seeking driven, Hardworking Individual w/own car to be a painting crew member. No exp. necessary Call: Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Students wanted for a summer painting job. $400 - $600/ week. Experience not needed but a plus. All hired will go through a paid training program. Call 888-277-9787 or go to COLLEGEPRO.COM. Work with friends.

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext 162

EMPLOYMENT

Hardworking individuals living around 93/95 belt South of I-90 for fulltime painter positions. Challenging job requires independence, own car. $10-$12 base rate. Call Will @ 617-699-8970

FURNITURE FOR SALE

3 Rms of furniture for sale Graduating in May Prices negotiable Call Lauren at 253-4993

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley 5 Bedroom Plus home, 2 baths w/ laundry hookup. Large yard, minutes from UMass. 549-4270

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female roommate wanted to share 2-bd apt in Sunderland. $418/mo. Includes heat, hot water, and cable. Available 6/1 or earlier. Call Lauren @ 860-604-6068.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SUMMER SUBLET

The Boulders 2 bedroom apt. available June 1st-August 15th fall option 413-478-3915

Want to live downtown this summer? 1 Bedroom, Above Newbury Comics Amherst Only 600/month, June-August. Call 549-9309

ROOMMATE WANTED

SUMMER SUBLET

2 BR Apt for summer w/option to continue $820 or Best Offer Everything included Contact Angie_T_MV@yahoo.com or Jamie 617-435-0559

2 bedrooms, fully furnished apartment, 1 full bath. Available June 1st-September 1st. Call Rachel Szyman @ 781-264-1512

WANTED

Compensation up to $7K+; loving, couples seeking egg donors ASAP! Healthy women, 21+, non-smokers with proven academic achievement. View www.tinytreasuresagency.com for info or e-mail apply @ tinytreasures.com for applications. Toll Free 1-866-357-6868. Refer to ad #UMA-117.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, APRIL 30, 2004

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen face Orangemen

COURTESY AMELIA F. LINCOLN

Senior midfielder Neil Lundberg has 18 goals and four assists this season for the Minutemen. UMass travels to Syracuse tomorrow to take on the Orangemen. Tip-off is slated for 1 p.m.

By Matt Brady
Collegian Staff

The Syracuse lacrosse team is shining up its rifles. Head Coach John Desko is peering though his sight. There is no getting around it, the Massachusetts Minutemen will have a target on their backs when they walk into the Carrier Dome for Saturday's 1 p.m. contest.

Forget the fact that the Orangemen (9-2) have beaten UMass (6-6, 1-1 ECAC) every time except one in the last 22 years. The plain and simple truth is that last year, the Maroon and White knocked off then-No. 7 Syracuse 14-13 in overtime, and 'Cuse is not likely to forget that fact anytime soon.

Of course, this year is a far different situation. Last year, the Minutemen were a top 10, one-loss team, while this year, they have struggled through a frustrating season that has seen them lose three games by two goals or fewer and post just a 2-4 record away from Garber Field.

And what may be the greatest difference between last year and this is the fact that this year's annual contest against the Orangemen will be held at the Carrier Dome, a place where the Minutemen have yet to win a game. Syracuse is undefeated at home this year with its last win coming over Albany 18-8.

The Maroon and White is coming off two heartbreaking losses on the road, against Yale and Georgetown, losing to the pair of longtime foes by a combined three goals. That recent setback has put a downer on what was an impressive four-game winning streak where Greg Canella's squad appeared to emerge from an early season funk.

Last week against the Hoyas, Canella got solid performances from attackmen Kevin Glenz and Sean Morris, with the former scoring four tallies and the latter scoring a goal and four assists, but it was not enough to overcome a 9-6 halftime deficit on the road, and Georgetown went on to a 12-10 victory.

Early in the game, it looked like the Minutemen might be able to put together their third straight victory over the Hoyas, with the Maroon and White jumping out to a 2-0 lead. But G-Town's four straight goals to close the first quarter gave it a lead it would never relinquish.

The Orangemen have gone 5-0 this season at the Carrier Dome, scoring an average of 17 goals in those five victories and winning their contests by at least four goals in each game. The No. 4 Orangemen's lone defeats on the season have come at the hands of top-ranked Johns Hopkins and No. 11 Rutgers on the road.

Syracuse is led by senior Mike Powell, who has followed in the legacy of his older brothers as one of the elite lacrosse players in both Syracuse's and all of college lacrosse's history. Powell has 57 points this season (30 goals, 27 assists), moving him up to 275 career points, fourth best in SU history. Fellow attack Brian Crockett is a distant second with 38 points, but has 28 goals to his credit. Goaltender Jay Pfeiffer has been somewhat inconsistent this season, with an 11.46 goals against average and a .522 save percentage.

The key matchup for the Minutemen could be in the faceoff department, where 'Cuse's top two, Geoff Keough and Jake Plunket have produced a .516 (142-275) winning percentage. Matching them for UMass will be sophomore Dane Collins, who has won 48.4 percent (105-217) of his faceoffs this season.

Baseball falls to B.C.

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

This was not a game Scott Ratliff deserved to lose.

Just over a week after flaming out in the first round of the 2004 Baseball Beanpot with a balk that scored the winning run for Northeastern, the beleaguered UMass (13-17, 5-7 A-10) closer made his return to the mound yesterday afternoon for the Massachusetts baseball team against Beanpot champion Boston College (19-20).

Working three-plus innings in one of his longest outings of the season, Ratliff pitched very well but faltered at a most inopportune time for the Minutemen in the top of the tenth inning.

With two outs and a runner on first, the southpaw surrendered an RBI double to left centerfield off the bat of Boston College left-fielder Jason Delaney, giving the Eagles a wild 12-11 win at Earl Lorden Field. The loss was the Maroon and White's seventh in a row.

UMass returns to action Saturday afternoon, when it travels to Kingston, RI for a three-game Atlantic 10 series with A-10 east division frontrunner Rhode Island. Saturday will feature a doubleheader, while the teams will play a single game on Sunday.

"It was just one of those days where as many runs as you got, it just wasn't enough," UMass head coach Mike Stone said. "We couldn't get anybody out for most of the game, and when we did we couldn't get the bats going.

"It was one of those frustrating games you don't like to lose."

Ryan Morgan was the winning pitcher and an offensive star for the Eagles, allowing just a hit and no runs in an inning of work while also posting a strikeout and hitting a tremendous two-run home run off the Mullins Center Practice Rink in the sixth. The win was Morgan's first on the season against two losses.

Ratliff, meanwhile, worked three-and-2/3 innings, allowing one hit and one run while striking out three and walking two. The loss was his third of the season as he falls to 0-3.

"I thought [Ratliff] pitched very well today," Stone said. "He really kept us in the ballgame with some big pitches. He had good control of his breaking ball and threw strikes when he needed to, and it's a shame [Delaney] got that big hit, because he didn't deserve the outcome."

Boston College got its offense going from the outset, as right-fielder Eric Wright took Jeremy Demers first pitch of the game over the right centerfield wall for a 1-0 Eagle lead.

Ryan Leahy, Ryan Morgan and Drew Locke then reached on a hit and a pair of walks, respectively, before Demers induced Delaney to ground into a double play that scored the second BC run.

The Minutemen got a pair back in the bottom of the first on a two-out, two-run single by senior tri-captain Matt Reynolds, and both teams posted single runs in the second before BC bounced back with three in the top of the third.

The Maroon and White responded with a pair of runs in both the third and the fourth to tie the score at seven, before an RBI single up the middle off the bat of first basemen Bill Rankin plated centerfielder Derek Durepo to give UMass an 8-7 edge in the bottom of the fifth.

The Eagles again overtook the Minutemen with two runs in the sixth and seventh, but UMass battled back for two runs in the seventh before Durepo tied the game at 11 with an RBI single to left center scoring Reynolds.

Minutewomen look to continue success against St. Bonaventure

By Jeff Howe
Collegian Staff

Drama.

This isn't Frankie from the "Real World: San Diego" drama. This is the whole season is riding on the final game of the year drama.

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (5-9, 3-3 A-10) earned two road wins last weekend in Philadelphia against St. Joseph's and La Salle, but they need another win this afternoon against St. Bonaventure (9-5, 3-2 A-10) in order to advance to the Atlantic 10 postseason.

The game will be played at 3 p.m. at Garber Field where UMass is 1-4 this season. The Bonnies are currently riding a three-game road losing streak and are 3-3 away from home on the year.

It has been a roller coaster ride for the Minutewomen all season long. They dropped six straight non-conference games in March before opening up the A-10 season with an upset win over Duquesne.

The girls lost their next three conference games before winning a pair last weekend setting up today's season-defining game.

To add to the drama, St. Bonaventure can also clinch a playoff birth with a victory today, and they will also be looking to avenge last season's 14-13 loss to the Minutewomen.

UMass assistant coach Karen Healy knows what to expect on the field today with both teams vying for a spot in the postseason.

"St. Bonaventure is very emotional. They don't think they will ever lose. Our team is more poised than they are, but [St. Bonaventure's] emotion will bring more emotion out of us," Healy said, who is in her second year as assistant coach.

The Bonnies offense will be a very complicated one to shut down as they have five players with at least 22 goals, and three players have tallied 40 or more points.

Individually, they are led by Kelly Chevez who has 29 goals and 34 assists for 63 points and Laura Spaulding who has scored 32 goals and nine assists for 41 points.

Healy said the Minutewomen have had a very strong week of practice while working on how to shut down an offense that focuses mainly on ball movement.

"They are a passing team. We need to shut down their cutters. They score a lot of goals on fast breaks, so we need to shut that down, too. I trust our defensive unit to handle their scorers," Healy said.

Following the two well-played victories last weekend, they have had an easier week at practice heading into today's match up.

"The girls did all of the small things right and came out on top [last weekend]. We were more disciplined the last two games than we have been. It's going to be very emotional. They were ready to play this game yesterday," Healy said.

UMass has been lead all season by seniors Tracey Drown and Hope Zellinger. Drown was named Honorable Mention National Player of the Week by InsideLacrosse.com on Wednesday for scoring 10 goals and two assists in the weekend's two victories.

Drown has scored 39 goals and notched 17 assists for 56 total points, and her stats have her climbing towards some of UMass' single season records. She currently lies in a tie for ninth place in goals scored, and she is tied for eighth in points scored.

Zellinger's 42 goals have her in a tie for third on the all-time single season list, and she is nine away from the top spot.

"Carrie [Bolduc] and I look at each other at the end of each game and say we're so grateful that Tracy is on the field. Hope is the same way. They've been positive all season. They provide senior leadership and are mature players," Healy said.

UMass can put a stamp on it today with a win over the Bonnies. Healy was very blunt with her team's objective today.

"If we win, we're in. This game is do or die. They don't have a second chance and they know that," Healy said.

UMASS

Weekend Schedule

Friday, April 30

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Women's Lacrosse	vs. St Bonaventure Amhers, Mass	3:00 p.m.

Saturday, May 1

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Baseball	at Rhode Island Kingston R.I.	12:00 p.m. & 2:30 p.m.
Softball	vs. Fordham Amherst, Mass	12:00 p.m. & 2:00 p.m.
Women's Rowing	at Syracuse Syracuse N.Y.	8:00 a.m.
Men's and Women's Track	at A-10's Richmond, VA	9:00 a.m.
Men's Lacrosse	at Syracuse Syracuse, N.Y.	1:00 p.m.

Sunday, May 2

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Baseball	at Rhode Island Kingston, R.I.	12:00 p.m.
Softball	vs. Quinnipiac Amherst, Mass	12:00 p.m. & 2:00 p.m.
Men's and Women's Track	at A-10's Richmond, VA	8:45 a.m.

Celtics hire Rivers as coach

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — The Boston Celtics named former NBA guard Doc Rivers as the 16th coach in team history on Thursday, charging him with the task of restoring order to the league's most successful franchise.

Celtics head of basketball operations Danny Ainge introduced Rivers at an afternoon news conference. He takes over for interim coach John Carroll, who was dismissed Monday after the Celtics were swept from the opening round of the NBA playoffs by the Indiana Pacers.

"Danny Ainge called me and asked me to coach the Boston Celtics," Rivers said. "If you like basketball I don't know how you could say no to that."

Ainge had said Monday he was in no hurry to hire a new coach, but he quickly reached an agreement with Rivers, who has served as a television commentator since being fired as head coach of the Orlando Magic early last season.

"This is the guy that we wanted to be our head coach," Ainge said. "That's why the search was so fast and short."

Rivers was fired by the Magic last Nov. 17 after the team started a league-worst 1-10. He went 171-168 in four-plus seasons with Orlando and was the NBA coach of the year in 2000 after leading the Magic to a 41-41 record with four undrafted starters.

"I've been with Larry Brown and Rick Carlisle, who are great coaches. But Doc Rivers is the best coach I've ever played for," said Celtics point guard Chucky Atkins, who played for Rivers in Orlando. "I am excited to have him here."

The 42-year-old Rivers joined ABC Sports as an analyst two days after he was fired. He'll keep his TV job through the NBA Finals, ABC said.

Rivers played 13 seasons for the Atlanta Hawks, Los Angeles Clippers, New York Knicks and San Antonio Spurs before retiring in 1996 to become a TV analyst for Turner Sports.

In Boston, Rivers faces a challenging task. The Celtics won their record 16th NBA title in 1986, but after 18 years and six coaches, the team is still looking for No. 17.

CHRIS O'MEARA/ASSOCIATED PRESS

The Boston Celtics have signed former Orlando Magic coach Doc Rivers to become the team's next head coach, according to media reports.

MAY

Explore the world of herbals at the 2004 HerbFest

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

UMass softball grabs 14th straight Atlantic 10 title

SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, MAY 3, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 131

Small crowds gather at Hobart

Police take preventative measures; 21 arrested

An unidentified individual is arrested by Amherst police officers outside Hobart Lane during a celebration late Saturday night into early Sunday morning.

By MORRIS SINGER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Numerous police patrolled the area near Hobart Lane this weekend and broke up crowds before a riotous atmosphere similar to that of last year's Hobart Hoedown could develop.

Between Saturday afternoon and 2:30 a.m., Sunday, Amherst Police Department officers arrested 21 persons, all but one for alcohol-related offenses, including violation of the open container bylaw, minor person in possession of alcohol and operating under the influence of alcohol. One person was arrested for a disorderly person offense, assault and battery and malicious destruction of property.

A statement from the APD noted that the number of arrests is typical for a weekend.

A police presence had accumulated by early afternoon, when not more than 50 guests had come to the area around Hobart Lane and Puffton Village Drive to celebrate.

The police continued to gather all day long, and by nightfall, officers stood at almost every street corner. Cruisers from either the APD or the Massachusetts State Police passed by on North Pleasant Street every few minutes.

APD officers patrolled Puffton Village Drive in the cruisers, on bicycles and on foot. Officers from APD also gathered on Hobart Lane, in addition to an ambulance and a paddy wagon from the Hampshire County Sheriff.

A private company provided security at the apartments on Hobart Lane.

Throughout most of the night, parties carried on relatively unbridled. However, police appeared to have a problem with people who gathered outside.

At about 12:30 a.m., Amherst Police moved onto Puffton Village Drive to break up a small crowd that had developed both at the bus stop and across the street.

"In about five minutes, 50 cops in full riot gear are going to come in here and start pelting everyone with pepper-ball," one officer shouted at a man outside of 22 Puffton Village Drive, whom he held by the sleeve of his shirt.

That moment never came but the comments did anger one of the residents of the apartment.

"It's almost like they're trying to prevent people from having anything to happen — anything at all — just in case it gets bad," said Joseph P. Gratta, a sophomore legal studies student who is living in the apartment.

Regardless of police presence, some residents were happy that a riot did not develop.

"[The police have] been a lot better than they were last year," said William J. Stofflet, Jr., a junior resource economics student.

Last year's Hobart Hoedown became a riot shortly before midnight after police broke up a large party on Hobart Lane. The displaced partygoers formed a crowd across the street at Puffton Village Drive, last year, and began to throw projectiles at police and start fires.

Police at last year's event fought back with mace and clubs, arrested 45 people and dispersed the crowd in about two hours.

Bustamante, Murphy win SGA elections

By MELISSA BLANKSTEEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Eduardo Bustamante won as Student Government Association President in last week's special elections with a 72 percent majority. His running mate Matt Murphy won the Student Trustee position with 70.9 percent.

"To sum it up, I'm really optimistic. I'm hopeful, and I'm really excited," Bustamante said.

Steve Hoeschele, chancellor of elections, said that 3,053 or one-sixth of the students voted last week. This is an increase from the 2,756 who voted in last month's election, in which Bustamante then received a 38.2 percent majority. Hoeschele also said that 82 graduate students voted for trustee; 78 of their votes went to Murphy. In March, only 26 voted in total.

Bustamante said he attributed the increase of student voters to a concern about the last elections, which encouraged students to talk.

"A big thank you to everyone who put in a lot of hard work. I have a real genuine hope to do things for the student body," Bustamante said. "...We are all working together."

All of the referendum questions passed except for number two, which asked students if they supported the elimination of the Commonwealth College honors program. Seventeen percent voted to eliminate it.

Question one passed with the largest majority of 78 percent voting in favor of the Collegiate Readership Program that brings the New York Times, USA Today and Boston Globe to campus.

There were some changes in the results of the Area Governor race. In this turn, Ahmed Nasef won Northeast, Aimee Falardeau won Southwest, Sanam Hakim won Orchard Hill, Stacy Bernadeau won Central, and Jane Nwasar won Sylvan. Dan McCool and Bill Surran tied for Commuter Governor.

Hoeschele said that this election process itself went smoother.

"The actual logistical end of it was a lot easier," Hoeschele said, despite it taking three days to count the results. He contributed the time to having five referendum questions on the ballot that were not there before.

He said he also had some "professional" help from the Dean of Students Office, Student Legal Services and the Campus Activities Center to help guarantee that there were two people at each polling station. He also said they did not help in counting the ballots.

Wiffleball champs head to Fenway

By ALISON HIGGINS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Eight seniors at the University of Massachusetts will head to Fenway Park tomorrow with hopes of winning the New England Championship Wiffleball Tournament, played on the famous Fenway baseball diamond.

UMass champion wiffleball team, Team Solid, will be accompanied by Melissa Vara, assistant director for Student and Young Alumni Programs; Professor David Bojanic, of the hospitality and tourism management department; and employees of the Coca-Cola Bottling Company of Greenfield. The team is scheduled to arrive at Fenway Park by 9 a.m. for the tournament, which will start at approximately 9:30 a.m. and go until about 3 or 4 p.m. according to Bojanic.

According to Joe Gringas, the cold drink key account manager for the Coca-Cola Bottling Company of Greenfield, the 10 schools competing at Fenway will be UMass Amherst, UMass Boston, Holy Cross, Endicott College, Boston College, Harvard University, Fairfield University, Sacred Heart University and Curry College.

All participants will receive complimentary T-shirts and prizes. The winners will receive a trophy, but Bojanic said the real draw is to be able to play on the field at Fenway Park.

The UMass preliminary wiffleball tournament, called "Wiffle Your Way to Fenway" was held on April 24. Team Solid, captained by Adam Facendola, a senior sport management major, dominated the on-campus competition, winning all four of their games and earning a trip to the regional championship at Fenway.

"It feels great [to be going to Fenway]," said Facendola. "It's such an honor to be going to one of the greatest stadiums in baseball ... we're [Team Solid] seniors, and to do something like this in our last month at school is amazing, it brought us even closer."

The tournament was open only to UMass Amherst students and each team needed to collect 100 Coca-Cola bottle caps as the entry fee, according to Vara.

The event is sponsored by Coca-Cola and facilitated by the Student Affairs and Campus Life Office. However, an event management class in the hotel and tourism management department under the direction of Bojanic put the details of the event together.

"This is the first year we did the tournament," explained Bojanic, "Coca-Cola's New England region developed the idea to sponsor a tournament at various colleges, and the winner at each college would compete at Fenway Park for an overall champion. The Student Affairs Office was contacted and had a short time period with which to get the tournament together. I teach an event class, and Melissa [Vara] and I talked about my class doing the event for Student Affairs."

The 24 students in the event management class enjoyed the opportunity to organize and run an actual event, according to Bojanic.

"Coca-Cola has plans to do it [the tournament] on an annual basis if it works out. The students' final project is to plan the event for next year starting earlier in the semester and improving on the success we had this year," he said. "The goal is to make the event bigger and better each year by attracting more teams, fans and providing more entertainment."

Team Solid formed in 2002 during the players' sophomore year at UMass.

"We were friends, and we used to play all intramural sports together. Sophomore year we won the Flag football tournament," said Adam Facendola.

The team consists of Facendola, and seniors Andy Sieurin, Brian Pinheiro, Matt Brown, Justin Diaco, Rick Gould, Joe DiRico and Rafael Gonzalez.

"We're all good athletes, we're very competitive ... we're solid!" said Facendola.

The eight friends play wiffleball almost every day, and planned to practice heavily this past weekend to gear up for tomorrow's championship. They attribute their victory to a great "team effort," in addition to outstanding performances by pitcher, Brian Pinheiro, and a two-run double, hit by Justin Diaco in the bottom of the fourth inning, which brought Team Solid out of a slight rut in the championship game.

To aspiring wiffleballers, Facendola advised to work on pitching.

"Great pitching combined with good defense wins games," he said. "Our pitcher [Pinheiro] led us to the championship. Without him and a team effort we wouldn't be going to Fenway. No one can hit him. No one can touch him."

Team Solid anticipates a win tomorrow.

"We want UMass to know we are for real," said Facendola. "We're solid. We know we can win and bring a championship back. It is such an honor to represent this whole campus."

Amherst College students mourn murder victims

By IKAIKA C. ARNADO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Approximately 370 Amherst College students, mostly dressed in black, laid down on Saturday in the Converse Hall Common on Boltwood Avenue within a rectangle of 123 erected crosses to memorialize the 370 young women killed in Ciudad Juarez, Mexico over the past 10 years.

The demonstration was followed by a two-hour symposium, in Converse Hall, which included speeches and stories of human rights activists and the parents of the murdered women. The lobby of Converse Hall included a traditional alter with pictures of some of the victims.

"The last body discovered, of an ...[assassinated] woman just 4 days ago," said Marcrina Cardenas de Alarcon the Legislative Coordinator of the Mexican Solidarity Network, in Spanish.

Many of the women murdered were workers at maquiladoras, which are foreign owned factories in Mexico. Lear Corporation, Zenith Corporation, and Sony Corporation are amongst some of these companies. According to the Amherst College Feminist Alliance, the maquiladoras do not provide security for the workers who are often exposed to dangerous environments.

According to information provided by the Amherst College Feminist Alliance, workers often arrive and leave work while it is dark, and most companies have little or no lighting or security outside their doors. Some women have been found dead across the street from their workplaces.

According to one of the speakers, the maquiladoras have the luxury of taking advantage of their work force.

"NAFTA [North American Free Trade

See CIUDAD JUAREZ on page 2

COLLEGIAN STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

'Gimmie some more'

Flipmode squad leader Busta Rhymes greets the Mullins Center crowd at the 2004 Spring Concert last night. See more photo coverage in Arts & Living, page 5.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
Features Editor S. J. Port
News Editor Ferron Salsbiter
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marry Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagatic
Finance Manager Greg Stanton
Human Resource Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kiggins
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Rachael Bruno
Graphics Adviser Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Amelia P. Lincoln
Assistant Sports Mike Marrelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. Before the College Signal in 1911, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1947. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1986. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT

MDC DESIGN

www.dailycollegian.com

Around the nation

Massachusetts

Roller coaster kills man

BOSTON (AP) — State safety officials have concluded an onsite inspection of a roller coaster that flung an amusement park enthusiast to his death at Six Flags New England, and plan to issue a report shortly on the accident.

Stanley J. Mordarsky, 55, of Bloomfield, Conn., tumbled from the Superman Ride of Steel roller coaster at about 3 p.m. Saturday as the ride neared the end of its run. Mordarsky, who had cerebral palsy, was pronounced dead at a Springfield hospital about 45 minutes later, according to the park.

Christine Cole, spokeswoman for the Executive Office of Public Safety, said state inspectors finished their work late Saturday night. A report on their findings and recommendations would be complete in the "very near future," she said, although there was no definite timeframe for its release.

"You never want to think that something like this will happen on an outing," she said.

Cole said inspectors looked at everything about the accident: the ride, the harness Mordarsky was wearing, the operator and other factors. Cole said the ride would remain closed until the park provided information that state safety officials requested, though she did not specify what that information was.

Illinois

Gas prices stifle consumers

CHICAGO (AP) — For financially pressed consumers, it's coming down to a choice between spending on gasoline or groceries, and gasoline is winning, a food industry analysis finds.

"Given the economic environment, it is not surprising that more shoppers are buying food today in discount stores and other low-price venues than ever before," said the report by the Food Marketing Institute, released at the organization's annual trade show in Chicago.

"High oil prices, both at the pump and for home heating, depress consumers' ability to spend more," the study said.

Around the world

Iraq

American hostage escapes after three weeks

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — In a daring escape, American hostage Thomas Hamill pried open the doors of the house where he was being held late Sunday morning and ran a half-mile to a military convoy that was passing by, officials and his wife said. Insurgents attacked U.S. forces across Iraq, killing 11 Americans.

Hamill, 43, of Macon, Miss., identified himself to the U.S. soldiers, and then led them back to his Iraqi captors, two of whom were captured.

Hamill, a truck driver for a Halliburton Corp. subsidiary, escaped more than three weeks after being abducted April 9 by gunmen who blasted the convoy he was driving on the outskirts of Baghdad. An American soldier abducted in the same attack remains missing, and at least four of Hamill's co-workers were killed.

ROGELIO SOLIS/ ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kellie Hamill, wife of Thomas Hamill, speaks with her children prior to attending services at Calvary Baptist Church in Macon, Miss., yesterday.

Israel

Likud Party rejects Ariel Sharon's plan

KEVIN FRAYER/ ASSOCIATED PRESS

An Israeli protester demonstrates against the referendum ballot at a Likud party voting in Jerusalem, yesterday.

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Ariel Sharon's Likud Party rejected his plan to pull out of the Gaza Strip and parts of the West Bank in a referendum yesterday, an embarrassing defeat for the premier.

The result, based on partial results, left the future of Sharon's "unilateral disengagement" from the Palestinians in doubt and his leadership in disarray. The outcome could precipitate a major political crisis — a Cabinet reshuffle, a split within the party or even early elections.

With half the ballots counted, opponents of the plan had 60 percent of the vote and supporters had 40 percent.

Families speak against murders

CIUDAD JUAREZ from page 1

Agreement] has facilitated these conditions putting everything in place where young female workers can be exploited," Cardenas de Alarcon said. According to one of the speakers, the global work force is expanding rapidly, and the majority of the workers are women.

"Over the past four years the global labor force has more than doubled and that doubling has been primary feminized," said Lucha Castro, a human rights attorney and member of Mujeres de Negro.

According to the speakers, the Mexican authorities are doing little to prevent the murders. According to the families of the murdered women, the police put the blame or accuse them of murdering their children.

"Two years after her death they are still persecuting us. Our telephone line was taped, they tried to accuse my husband of her death ... they haven't left the family alone. They tried to destroy the family in anyway they can," said Norma Ledesma in Spanish, the mother of Paloma Angelica, one of the victims of the Ciudad Juarez murders.

According to the families, many of the women murdered are never found.

"Some of us have found our daughters tortured, raped and mutilated, and thrown in the desert," said Hortensia Enriquez in Spanish, a parent of Ericha Nohemi, one of the victims of the Ciudad Juarez murders. "Others of us are still looking for our daughters."

Amherst College Feminist Alliance is urging the public to get involved in the campaign to stop these murders. They are asking the public to support Resolution HR 466, which give U.S. support to the women of Ciudad Juarez. They are also asking for an Amnesty International Action Plea which can be submitted electronically at http://takeaction.amnestyusa.org/a.jsp.

write for news!

Investigation starts over abuse in Iraq

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — A high-level Army investigation of prisoner interrogation techniques in Iraq has found no evidence that abuse by U.S. military police or intelligence officers is widespread, officials said yesterday.

The review continues, however, and the Army has not determined whether all six soldiers charged with abusing Iraqi prisoners will face a military trial.

The investigation, led by officials in the office of the Army's deputy chief of staff for intelligence, is looking broadly at interrogation methods in Iraq. It is not a criminal investigation of the cases that occurred last fall involving the Army Reserve's 372nd Military Police Company, officials said.

Among the most pressing questions is the extent of prisoner abuse and whether it is condoned or encouraged by U.S. military or civilian intelligence officials who have overseen the interrogations.

Brig. Gen. Janis Karpinski, the Army Reserve commander who oversaw the prison system until recently, said in weekend interviews with the New York Times and Washington Post that she knew nothing of the alleged abuse until it was reported. She suggested it may have been encouraged by military intelligence officers, who kept tight control of the cellblock where the abuse occurred.

"I think there are bad people masquerading as soldiers doing bad things to detainees," she said in an interview yesterday evening on ABC News. She said when she first saw the photos of abuse.

"I really had to take a couple of seconds because I thought that I might really get sick from it."

Most nurses spend their entire careers in the same hospital. In the United States Air Force, it's unlikely you'll even spend it in the same state or country. You'll have the opportunity to practice nursing in as many as 20 different fields in a variety of nursing environments. And you'll feel a greater sense of shared responsibility when you have the opportunity to actually lead your team. Sound like the kind of career you'd like to have? Then call 1-800-423-USAF.

AIRFORCE.COM • 1-800-423-USAF

Hit the books, then hit the beach!

Looking to get ahead in your course work? Short on credits and need to catch up? Or just looking for something satisfying to do this Summer? A MassBay Summer Session course is the way to go!

- Day and evening classes start May 24th
- Affordable resident cost is $136 per credit
- 5- or 10-week courses
- A great way to earn college credits quickly
- Credits are transferable to your school! (When you are a university or college student, or incoming college freshman)
- Wellesley, Framingham, and Ashland

Call MassBay today at 781-239-2703 or go to www.massbay.edu

Don't sweat it.
Check out MassBay's Summer Session Courses in:
Business
EMT
English
Health
History
Lab Sciences (such as Anatomy & Physiology, Biology, Microbiology)
Math
Social Sciences
and other transferable courses!

Classes meet Monday-Thursday so there's plenty of time left for other Summer activities.

To register or obtain additional information, call 781-239-2703.

MassBay Community College
Start here. Go anywhere.

NEW ON TUESDAY:
LAST SAMURAI
CALENDAR GIRLS
CHASING LIBERTY
ELEPHANT
GIRL WITH A PEARL EARRING
PETER PAN
TRIPLETS OF BELLEVILLE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Bruegger's
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

UMass Amherst Alumni Association

Graduating Seniors Join Now for Only $20 (Regularly $40)

Automatically entered for $1000 cash drawing TWICE!

Sign-up at the Textbook Annex between (May 3-21) or the Campus Center Commencement Ball Ticket Sales (April 26-May 14)

Stay connected Join Now!

Great Benefits Include:
•Discount Insurance Products
•Career Support & Networking
•Online Alumni Directory
•And many more...
For more info log onto (www.UmassAlumni.com) Or call 1-800-456-UMASS

Our address is:
Alumni Relations
Memorial Hall
University of Massachusetts
134 Hicks Way
Amherst, MA 01003-9270

WANTS YOU!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Monday, May 3 2004 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Bustamante must unite SGA, campus

Eduardo Bustamante has been elected, again, as the president of the Student Government Association. The wide margin of victory speaks volumes to the apparent leadership abilities he possesses.

However, even though the road to his presidency has already been arduous, the battle has only begun. The challenges for Bustamante will be difficult, as will getting past the "unconstitutional elections" that prevented him from taking office back in March.

Even before the debacle took place last month, the condition of the Student Government Association was tumultuous. It is imperative that Bustamante forgets about the lengthy and difficult election process, and gets to the real issues facing the SGA.

For starters, Bustamante must do his best to unite the campus. Partisan politics have done a lot to systematically divide the United States government on a national level, and the division growing at UMass is a microcosm of this fact. Take, for example, the outcry that resulted last September from then-SGA Senate Speaker Jared Nokes' decision not to recognize the appointed ALANA caucus seats. Bustamante, being an active senator of the ALANA caucus himself, must be fully aware of the rift between members of ALANA caucus and their conservative counterparts, and do everything in his power to change it.

Another important step in Bustamante's immediate future will be to give himself more of an identity around campus. His outspoken nature has allowed him to make many of his views clear, but doubts still remain about the ability he has to head the SGA. Once the new Executive Cabinet has been appointed, some of these doubts will be put to rest. Bustamante must choose his cabinet members carefully. His cabinet will reflect his upcoming tenure, and he must be careful not to let his political involvement in ALANA caucus get in the way of his ability to choose the best cabinet members possible.

Overall, Bustamante faces the same challenges now that he did when he was "elected" last month. He has the ability to lead the SGA, and the campus as a whole, in the right direction. The question is, now that he has won a seemingly constitutional election and the position of president is his, can he deliver? Can he take his grassroots campaign and turn his words into action? The early stages of his tenure as president will be crucial, as he will have to put any and all doubts about his leadership ability to rest as quickly as possible.

Bustamante would be well advised to put this whole election debacle behind him. It would be in his best interest, and in the best interest of the Student Government Association, to start over and begin to worry about the issues that matter. The student body has spoken, more than once, and it is now time to let those elected to do the jobs they were chosen to do.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

A good time to keep quiet

Mark Ostroff

To my readers: Regarding my last column, "Ghosts of Liberation," some new evidence has come to light showing how "better off" Iraqis are. See for yourself at www.albasrah.net/images/iraqi-pow/iraqi-pow. Viewer discretion is strongly advised.

Last week, a national controversy began at the University of Massachusetts when the majority of people who read the column by Rene Gonzalez were outraged at what he had to say.

A shockwave spread from this campus all the way to California, resulting in threats and ethnic attacks. I'd like to touch on it before this story loses its marketability in the media and people jump to the wrong conclusions about Gonzalez, Pat Tillman and even the war Tillman gave his life fighting in.

Gonzalez's column was, no doubt, heavy-handed and reactionary. But people have to understand that Gonzalez, like many people, has a different paradigm when it comes to the War on Terror. And, like every American, he is entitled to it.

But Gonzalez doesn't know Pat Tillman, and what he has to understand is that when people are staring in the face of tragedy, it's not a good time to try to give someone a "wake up call."

I'll have to get a little personal now, but here's what I mean:

I have a cousin my age who passed away earlier this year. He reenlisted in the military to join Operation Iraqi Freedom. At about 4 a.m. on the morning he was to ship out, he was found dead in his bed from what the coroner found to be a mixture of alcohol and heroin. On what was supposed to be a weekend of family, friends, beer and football, I found myself sitting in a funeral parlor, picking a casket to bury my cousin in.

His mother couldn't accept the fact that her son was gone, especially from something as foolish as drugs. In a panic, she tried to do whatever she could to "cover up" the nature of his death and refused to show anyone the coroner reports. She even requested that my cousin receive a military funeral.

Now obviously, how he died was a completely ludicrous contradiction to what a military funeral is for, but still, I kept my mouth shut. I went along with it and asked the funeral director to see what he could do about an honor guard at my cousin's funeral. I even made sure he was buried in a "military-standard" casket.

[The U.S. media government] only want you to know heroic icons, flying flags and 'enemies within.' What [Rene] Gonzalez should have known is that these 'peddlers of crisis' just love to use statements like those in last week's column to build animosity toward the skeptics ...

The moral of this story is that sometimes people are not ready for that "reality check." Can you imagine the unnecessary pain I would have caused if I tried to give my family a "wake up call" and threw it in their face that on mere technicality, my cousin was not worthy of a military funeral? So, I did the noble thing: I kept quiet.

When we talk about a man like Pat Tillman, the same idea applies, only on a far more massive scale. Even if we see that our involvement in Afghanistan was illegitimate, the last thing that a man's parents — or even his thousands of fans — want to hear is that his death was "prophetic idiocy."

I also doubt the reason why Tillman went to Afghanistan was because of some macho concept of American military supremacy. Couldn't it simply be his sense of disgust for those who would kill 3,000 innocent civilians on a quiet morning in September?

Tillman probably didn't know the history of American foreign policy, but it doesn't make him a macho wannabe-Rambo. That's like saying firefighters ran into the crumbling World Trade Center because they watched "Backdraft" too many times. It would take much more than some "America is #1" arrogance for anyone to drop a $3.25 million contract and pick up a gun. However, there is some truth to the paradigm that many people do not know, nor are they ready to know, about the historical causes of Sept. 11, 2001. It's not as simple as a bunch of random Islamic fundamentalists that woke up one morning and decided they hated America. It may give us a sense of moral superiority in a time when we need it most, but it's far from the truth.

The media and our government have a part in this mass ignorance of "why they hate us" and they will continue to profit from this to no end. They don't want America to know about the deals the oil executives made with the Taliban within months of Sept. 11, or perhaps, how many pounds of Afghani and Turkish heroin was shipped to the United States via the CIA to support the Taliban.

They only want you to know heroic icons, flying flags and "enemies within." What Gonzalez should have known is that these "peddlers of crisis" just love to use statements like those in last week's column to build animosity toward the skeptics — those nameless, faceless "liberals" that hacks like Joe McCarthy, Michael Savage and Bill O'Reilly build careers off of by yelling about.

In the end, make your own decision about the War on Terror. Don't let the government or the media make it for you. Nothing good has ever come out of it.

As for Pat Tillman, rest in peace, Ranger.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist.

New law reflects sexism

Johnny Donaldson

In Georgia, a new law has been passed that bars women from getting a piercing on their genitals. According to foxnews.com, the state senate passed a bill, 160-zero without debate, which would disallow any kind of mutilation to a woman's genital area, regardless if an adult woman made the decision as a free choice. The consequence of violating the law is a jail sentence of two to 20 years. The law does not apply to genital piercings for men, only women.

As reported by the Associated Press, Bill Heath, R-Bremen, who sponsored the amendment, said when he first heard about vaginal piercings: "What? I've never seen such a thing. I, uh, I wouldn't approve of anyone doing it. I don't think that's an appropriate thing to be doing."

I'm curious to find out why exactly it matters that Heath thinks female genital piercings are inappropriate and why an individual's decision on how to adorn their bodies should be made into a prohibitive law.

For me, this new attack on individuality works on more than one level of outrage. There's the obvious — that a group of politicians elected to represent our best interests would have the gall to place a ban on personal expression. But there's also the dismaying fact that the law isn't geared toward making this act illegal for both sexes. What angers me more is that it bans only women.

Look around you. This so-called modern age — an age of enlightened "liberal" attitudes and mores, an age where freedoms are more easily available and taboos are busted one at a time — it doesn't really exist. We live in a world where puritanical values — under the guise of reclaiming "decency" and "morality" — are encroaching on our lives and where sexism is still rampant, albeit in a form so subtle and inconspicuous that sometimes we play right into its hand.

Let's delve into the little subject of morality and decency, shall we? Who's right is it to decide what is moral and decent? Who makes the decisions that judge our lifestyles as right or wrong? And why do we allow them? If we do not understand something, than why do we make attempts to destroy it?

We live in a world where puritanical values ... are encroaching on our lives and where sexism is still rampant, albeit in a form so subtle and inconspicuous that sometimes we play right into its hand.

Heath does not understand the act of a young woman, someone capable of making her own decisions, going to get her clitoris or labia pierced. Therefore, he must take offense to it, and therefore he must outlaw it. Sadly, every one of his cohorts in the Georgia senate agreed and banned it. Heath calls female genital piercing "inappropriate." Who's he to declaim the appropriateness of that? Heath can't fathom doing it himself and therefore can't believe that any "respectable" woman would engage in such an "immoral" act But morality shouldn't be judged by what you pierce, the music you like, whom you marry or what kind of sex you like having — or how much of it you have. Morality is based on how you treat people, not on your own personal preferences.

But what's even more astounding, more dismaying and more terrible is the misogynistic slant of this ruling. It's the kind of low-key sexism that has infected this country ever since the new fundamentalist conservatives have taken office. The current Republican administrations on abortion rights, this current ruling in Georgia — it's a slow process designed to subjugate women and "free" them of the basic rights they've accrued over the years since Suffragettes fought for women's right to vote. These "men" — and I use the term rather loosely — see a need to tell women how to treat their bodies and their lives.

Obviously, our current political "heroes" see the male species as superior sex worthy of bullying and bossing the "inferior" females around. They see a patriarchal need to swoop in and make personal judgments for the women that surround them, to say what body parts they can have pierced and when they can have babies.

It's a sexism that has been informed by the media — this I have elaborated on in the past — by claiming it as sexual liberation, and informed by the politicos who are making decisions out of what is "morally responsible." The only ones being "morally irresponsible" are the politicians like Heath, who employ decency as a cover for chauvinist supreme rule.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian columnist.

The hard bites of reality

World Perspectives

Leah Vitale

These past two weeks in Jerusalem have been extremely emotional and intense. This is because there were three very important Israeli holidays — Yom Hashoa (Holocaust Remembrance Day), Yom Hazikaron (Memorial Day for Israel's fallen soldiers) and Yom Ha'atzmaut (Israel Independence Day). Throughout this period, I have experienced innumerable moments of such great intensity, that the resonance which they left within me will surely carry on for years to come.

On Yom Hashoa, the sentiment in the country is grim. As you walk down the street, it is as though there is a thin sheet of grey hovering above the surface, but subtle enough that you can still carry on with your regular daily life. It was doing just this, when I came across my first encounter with the true impact of the holiday. Per usual, I was running late to school; between the 10-15 minute walk, the security checks, and my usual detour through the botanical gardens, my journey rarely gets me to school right on time.

This day however, I was blessed with a unique opportunity by being tardy. My university was holding a special ceremony in honor of the day and as I reached the entrance of the building, I was startled by a loud siren. I continued to walk, but as I looked around, I noticed that everyone around me stopped dead in their tracks. The most baffling sight was a girl yapping away on her cell phone, and how she immediately ended the conversation once she heard the siren. I couldn't believe the sincerity and sorrow that all the students around me shared. It was as though they were each being affected personally. I couldn't imagine any holiday earning such respect back home.

Slowly, I shut my eyes, and really reflected on the sound of the siren. I couldn't help but hear the sound of crying children. It was then that I felt a small piece of what the holiday really signifies. Such was my first understanding of the nature of Israel. The beauty that I am able to presently partake from did not come easy, rather, as the result of the suffering of millions of Jews worldwide.

My next experience with this string of important holidays was on Yom Hazikaron. My friend and I decided to attend a ceremony at the Western Wall honoring all the Israeli Soldiers, both that have passed and those who are alive and fighting today. We attempted entering the area through the Arab Shuk (market), thinking it'd be less full, but little did we know that there would be people out the entrance waiting to get in. The security was impeccable and by the time we got in, we'd missed almost half the ceremony. I soon realized that it wasn't the ceremony itself, which would move me anyway.

As I entered, I stood at the top of the stairs overlooking the Western Wall, in front of which were hundreds of soldiers. As I walked down the stairs, one eye on the ceremony and the other on the soldiers sitting on the stairs, one stair caught my eye in particular. On it sat three girls, all in army fatigues, probably about 18 years old. The girl on the end, however, grabbed my attention even more than the other two. I pulled out my camera and snapped a shot of her — a dreadlocked, thin, morose, tired, young child.

I couldn't stop staring at her — she was such a baby. What on one hand shook me so rigorously didn't even faze her. She sat there with her head smushed into her hand waiting for the procession to end, like an elementary school student waiting for the bell to ring dismissing her from class. Only the M-16 standing upright between her legs separated her from that young child.

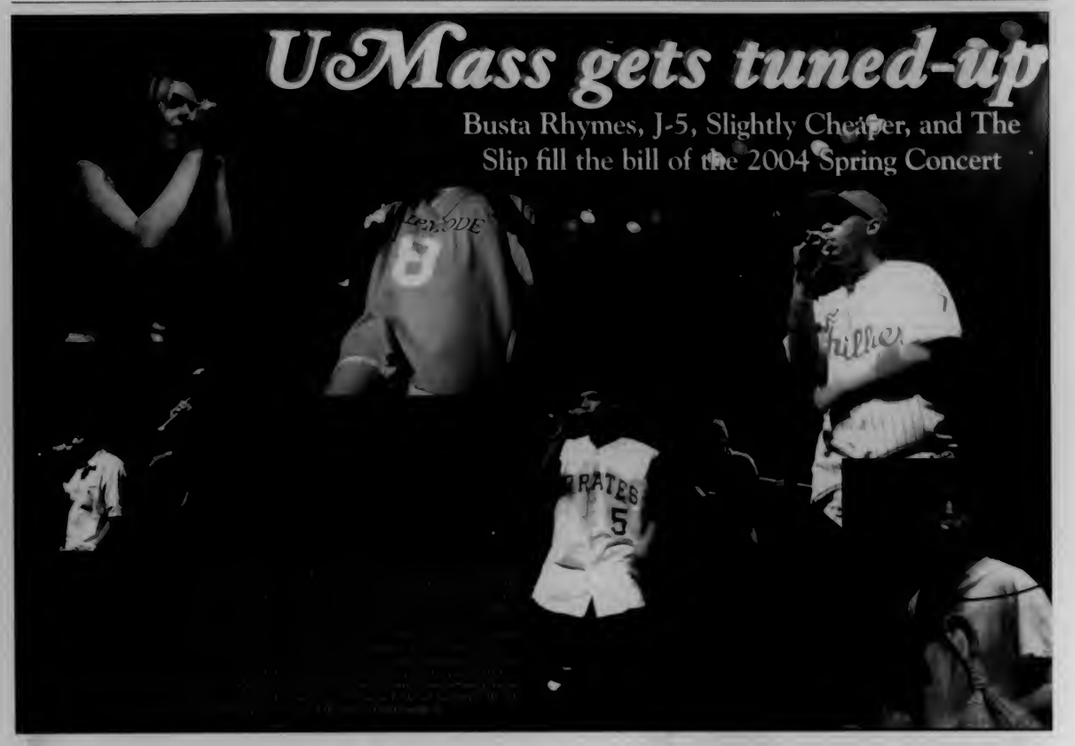
Upon witnessing this scene, I came to another realization about the Jewish State. It does not exist nonchalantly. On the contrary, the gravest sacrifices are made to this day in order to preserve its Jewish character. The juxtaposition of the sea of green army uniforms against the bone colored ancient bricks of the Kotel Wall brought this idea forth with the utmost precision.

Lastly, and likely the most startling experience I had was on Yom Ha'atzmaut. My friend and I decided to go into town to celebrate the independence of the country we love so dearly. We pulled a cab over, as usual from our dorms and the driver, happened to be an Arab. As we approached the outskirts of downtown, we saw strobe lights and what looked like a checkpoint.

Surely, there would be increased security on a day the Arabs refer to as the "The Naqba" or "The Catastrophe," but the extent to which that security would exist, I was not expecting in the least. As our driver pulled up, an Israeli police women stood in front of the cab and motioning with her hand shouted "tistovev" (turn around in Hebrew). I thought to myself, "maybe this entrance is just blocked off," but our driver seemed to be getting a little uneasy. I rolled down my window and asked another policeman what the problem was. He responded "ein knisa l...aravim" (there is no entrance for ... stutter ... Arabs.) He lowered his voice when uttering the last word. To a student from the 'PC-practically enforced by law' town of Amherst, an answer as blatant as that one, took me aback.

Our driver, perplexed, shouted "aflayah, aflayah!" (discrimination! discrimination!), but anger was not the emotion he seemed to really be feeling. He looked embarrassed, ashamed and frustrated. I could understand too; after all, he was just trying to make an honest living, and here he was being refused entry to the completion of his job. I reassured him that he did nothing wrong and apologized, but the feeling in my gut was so unsettling, I had a very difficult time enjoying the rest of the night.

The worst part is, although it was blatant discrimination, I feel as though it is justified. What other choice does the Israeli security have? No, not all Arabs are terrorists, but to this day, all the terrorists have been Arabs. Does the country act humanely and run the risk of accumulating more fatalities, or discriminate and ensure the safety of its citizens? The line is very fine, and drawing it seems lose-lose no matter what. Such awareness only heightens in my mind how pressing a need for a resolution to this conflict is.



Angry, defensive and frustrated, I continued to walk toward the center of town. Ironically, there was a bus parked horizontally cutting across the street. It was at this sight that I remembered why such security exists. I felt a wave of calm seeing it fully in tact. I felt safe. Unfortunately folks, this evil is just dangin' necessary.

Leah Vitale is a Collegian columnist on exchange in Israel.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MAY 3, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass gets tuned-up

Busta Rhymes, J-5, Slightly Cheaper, and The Slip fill the bill of the 2004 Spring Concert

Not a film worthy of 'Envy'ing

Black and Stiller make for a blah combination

BRIAN HAMELIN/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Nick Vanderpark (Jack Black) and Tim Dingman (Ben Stiller) are neighbors, best friends and co-workers until their equal footing is tripped up when Nick strikes it rich in DreamWorks Pictures and Columbia Pictures comedy "Envy."

By Tammi Munn
Collegian Staff

Ben Stiller and Jack Black have the reputation of being absolutely hysterical in their separate movie endeavors. It seems like an amazing idea to pair up these two to create a deliriously funny flick. Too bad director Barry Levinson's "Envy" had to go and spoil that whole idea.

The film is so awful that it is hard to find even one good thing to say about it. It is only possible to mention each agonizing element that led to the overall disappointment of the film. The plot is severely simple in that all it consists of is two average Joes who are best friends; one makes it big; the other is envious of his friend's new lifestyle.

How could they possibly make a 99-minute movie on that? There is an easy answer; they couldn't, not without severely dragging out each scene at an irritatingly geriatric pace.

Tim (Ben Stiller) and his friend and neighbor, Nick (Jack Black), carpool together to their factory jobs everyday. Nick is always dreaming of crazy inventions and finally stumbles on one that will make him some cash, "Vapoorizer." It is an invention that makes animal droppings disappear with one spray from an aerosol can.

Tim tries to encourage his friend to ditch the ridiculous idea, but onward it goes and Nick and his family get rich from their "Vapoorizer" profits. They build a mansion where their old middle class house stood and they buy a horse, a carousel and everything else they think rich people should have. Tim and his family become envious of all Nick has acquired, but they maintain their good friendship.

Nick is rarely seen in the middle of the film, appearing only here and there with his frivolous new purchases. A very depressed Tim and the downfall of his life are the main focus for a good portion of the film. He wants to knock Nick off of his high horse and he plots to bring Nick's social scale back down to its previous middle class level. This, of course, backfires in his face.

The film tries to show a "money can't buy happiness" theme, but then it contradicts itself. It is really difficult to find an overall point to the film.

Maybe it is that Stiller and Black look awkward in this type of familial role. They have wives and children and are supposed to be everyday people. Stiller and Black can do nothing to make their characters even slightly entertaining and they are so far away from their stupidly funny roles that they are famous for. It is no wonder that the film's release date has had numerous postponements. Maybe it should have gone right to DVD.

"Envy" is a movie that has serious situations with a failing attempt to add the comedic power of Ben Stiller and Jack Black. The jokes are forced and the most appalling situations are supposed to be comedic. Supposedly the task of disposing of a dead horse is hysterical. It is chock full of "shake your head and wonder why" situations.

Certainly, past Stiller and Black movies have the reputation to have "potty humor" jokes. "Envy" tries to outdo the wit of those past films, but goes a few notches too far. Nothing can save the film from its downward plummet to the land of the worst films ever.

'Envy'
Directed by Barry Levinson
Starring Ben Stiller Jack Black
Dreamworks
Not Yet Rated
99 mins.
Grade D

Local herbal experience

HerbFest explores the world of healing

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

HerbFest 2004
Tomorrow
Student Union Ballroom
11:30 a.m.-2 p.m.
Free

Most associate the coming of spring with the return of life of the green leafy and sweet scented flora we have come to know and love. But, how well do you really know your favorite buds and blossoms?

Professor Lyle Craker of the plant and soils department of the University of Massachusetts has a class that explores the world of everyday plants and herbs from a more than a taxological point of view.

"I try to teach the students about the medicinal uses of these plants, as well as their historical usages and some of the mythology that has sprouted off of them," Craker said.

The class is Medicinal Herbs and Spices, a course offered annually at UMass in which students explore the various uses for herbs, within and beyond the kitchen. Capping off this eccentric course in herbology is the annual HerbFest, where students display projects that elaborate on specific aspects of what they have learned from the course.

"We see a little bit of everything from herbal bath salts and various teas to the more elaborate projects that include uses of very rare herbs or even some of the holistic applications of them," said Craker.

This year's HerbFest promises to uphold the history of the event for pushing the limits of peoples' understanding of herbs and their uses.

The event will be held in the Student Union Ballroom from 11:30 a.m.-2 p.m. and is free and open to the public. As these projects are a large part of the student's final course grade they promise to be both informational and entertaining. Many of the booths will include free samples of products ranging from

See HERBFEST on page 5

SAM LOUKAS/COLLEGIAN

Students in the class are required to identify plants by smell as well as by their appearance.

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Over-filling the Hill

As part of this past Saturday's "Fill the Hill" celebration the student band Systematics performed in the Orchard Hill Residential Area.

MondayMay3

Art

The Augusta Savage Gallery will hold an opening reception for Bachelor in Fine Arts majors Matthew Stinson and Sydney Celeste Janey. Their artwork will consist of various black and white photography and prints. The reception is free and open to the public and will run from 5-7 p.m. Stinson's "Transpiration" and Janey's "Reaching" will be on display through May 7.

Music

The University of Massachusetts Vocal Jazz Ensemble will perform, "Jazz: A Family Affair," at 8 p.m. in Bezanson Recital Hall. Professor Catherine Jensen-Hole has scheduled a special performance from guest artists Beata Hlavenkova and Dominique Gagne. The performance will include songs such as, "April in Paris," arranged by Kerry Marsh and "This is All I Ask," written by Gordon Jenkins. Tickets are $5-$10 and are on sale now and are available through the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 413-545-2511.

TuesdayMay4

Art

The Landscape and Regional Planning Department at the University of Massachusetts is celebrating, "100 Years of Landscape Architecture." To celebrate this centennial, six students and Professor Joseph S. R. Volpehave constructed a multimedia exhibit titled, "The Intimate Expanse." The art piece is on display in the UMass University Gallery located in the Fine Arts Center. The exhibit is free and open to the public and will be on display through May 14.

ThursdayMay6

Music

The University of Massachusetts Chapel Jazz Ensemble under the direction of David Sporny will perform at the top of the Campus Center. The show will begin at 8 p.m. and tickets are available through the Fine Arts Center Box Office at 413-545-2511 and are $5-$10.

FridayMay7

Open Mic

The Student Union Crafts Center of the University of Massachusetts will host an open mic night. Participants are welcome to share any original works of literature, comedy, or art. This event is entirely free and open to the public. The event will, with weather permitting, be held outside of the Student Union. In the case of rain the event will be moved into the Craft Center. Performers are asked to sign up at 7 p.m. and performances will begin at 7:30 p.m. For more information about the open mic night, call 545-2086.

SundayMay9

Performance

As part of the Stonewall Center's 2004 "Spring Queer Arts Festival," K. T. Kilborn will perform her show titled, "Underground Transit." The show will be held at 7 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union and is free and open to the public.

For more information about the Stonewall Center or about the "Spring Queer Arts Festival," call 413-545-4824.

Music

Local artists, Jive-O-Matic will conduct their debut performance with a special Mother's Day show at the Silk City Tap Room in Florance. Having released their first album "Skipped and Stripped" last November to good reviews, the band has abstained from public performances until now. The show will begin at 9 p.m. and is free and open to the public. The Silk City Tap Room is located at 99 Main Street in Florance.

Music

The UMass Pops Orchestra will hold its "First Annual Gala Pops Concert." The show will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium at 7:30 and tickets are $15.

Lanfranco Marcelletti, Jr., conductor said, "We're starting our own Boston pops-style gala tradition. Drink and dine at your table. Listen to light classics and dance to waltzes, tangos and ragtime music." The event will feature guest soloists, retired professors Horace Clarence Boyer and Paulina Stark. Boyer will perform his signature repertoire — gospel music from the piano — and Stark will sing favorite selections by Jerome Kern, Rogers and Hammerstein and Cole Porter. The First Annual UMass Amherst Pops Gala is co-sponsored by WFCR, 88.5 FM, Public Radio for Western New England, Valley Advocate and WHMP.

weekly pinup

MUSIC

Professor Eduardo Leandro will direct the UMass Percussion Ensemble in a performance titled, "Araporgas." The show will begin at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets are $5-$10 and are available at FAC Box Office at 413-545-2511.

Learning all about herbs

HERBFEST from page 4

herbal tea infusions to natural lip balms and more.

"Every week the students take part in a lab that looks at a different aspect of the herbal industry ranging in scope from cosmetics, aromatics and especially the edible," Craker said. "All the projects serve as both learning experiences as well as they are fun."

True, the students in Craker's class do learn extensive amounts about the herbal industry, but they also learn basic greenhouse management techniques as well as they develop skills useful in plant identification.

Each student grows their own flat of herbs as part of the class, these the weekly projects as well as the experience are what they each take away from Craker's class.

So if you have an herb garden of your own that you would like to know more about or you would like to know what you can do with those pesky dandelions that pop up every year, besides throw them away, stop on in to the 2004 HerbFest.

SAM LOUKAS/COLLEGIAN

Students spend some class time tending to their own herbs.

SouthWest Week events

Sister Hazel to top off the week's events

TuesdayMay4

"Hey Big Spender" and "A Star is Born"

From 5-9 p.m. there will be a "casino strip" in the pyramids of Southwest. Accompanying this event at 6 p.m. will be the "UMass Idol" competition.

WednesdayMay5

"Jailhouse Rock," "Ain't Nothing but a Hound Dog" and "A 'Lil Less Conversation"

The Southwest Week battle of the bands will be held from 3:30-8 p.m. in the horseshoe. From 4-7 p.m. the "DC BBQ" will be held. The winner of the battle of the bands will go on to perform as the opening act for Sister Hazel on Thursday night.

Also there will be a free double feature screening of "National Lampoon's Vegas Vacation" and "Oceans Eleven." The screening will begin at 8:30 p.m. with the second film slated to start at 10:15 p.m.

FridayMay7

"Leaving Los Vegas"

From noon to 5 p.m. in the pyramids there will be a drunk-driving car demonstration. The Red Cross Blood Mobile Drive will also be in attendance for those who wish to donate blood.

• • •

Margaret Cho was scheduled to perform as part of the week's events but because of an illness, Monday's show has been postponed indefinitely.

For more information about Southwest Week or about the Southwest AreaGovernment, visit their Web site at www.swagumass.com.

The Big Event

'What Happens in Vegas Stays in Vegas'

Recording artists Sister Hazel will perform in the Southwest Horseshoe as the headliner of the Southwest Week cncert. The concert will start at 8 p.m. and is open to the public.

Wanna Play Ultimate Frisbee?

Think you can get a team of 6-8 players?

Then make sure to register for the 1st annual Ultimate Chill Disc Tournament!

Grab your neighbors, grab your friends, and grab your club, brothers and sisters!

Register with us on the Campus Center Concourse the week of May 3rd -7th
Or
Simply drop this registration form off at the Resource Room in the Student Union across from the Cape Cod Lounge.

Ultimate Chill Disc Tournament
Tuesday May 11th
4 – 8pm
Free T-shirts and Prizes for everyone!!!!

Sponsored by: Student Activities Center/Student Affairs and Campus Life
Campus Center and Auxiliary Services.

The BIG Chill

Ultimate Chill-Disc Tournament Registration Form

Captains Name: _____ Student ID#: _____

Captains E-mail: _____ Phone #: _____

Team Members

Name	Student ID
Captain: _____	_____
1: _____	_____
2: _____	_____
3: _____	_____
4: _____	_____
5: _____	_____
6: _____	_____
7: _____	_____

Please note that there may be up to 8 people on a team, however, only 6 will play at a time. YOU NEED A MINIMUM OF 6. All ages are welcome to play.

When is your team available to play?

☐ 4 – 5:30pm

☐ 5:30 – 7:00pm

☐ Either time

Check in is 20 minutes prior to start, please allow time for this.

Games are 25 minutes long.

Please complete this form and return it to the Resource Room in the Student Union (across from the Cape Cod Lounge) by 5/7/04.

Spurs take first game

San Antonio uses late run to edge LA

By T.A. Badger
Associated Press

SAN ANTONIO (AP) — Poise down the stretch came only from Tim Duncan and the defending NBA champions. Precision was the quality the Los Angeles Lakers lacked.

The San Antonio Spurs forced the Lakers into 10 fourth-quarter turnovers and held Los Angeles without a field goal for a six-minute span, using a late 10-0 run to cement an 88-78 victory Sunday in Game 1 of their second-round series.

Lakers	78
Spurs	88

The Lakers succeeded in getting Duncan out of the paint, but he still scored 12 of his 30 points in the fourth quarter to help the Spurs overcome their 9-for-21 free throw shooting. The win was the Spurs' 16th straight since late March.

Game 2 in the best-of-seven series is Wednesday night. Duncan drew double-teams almost every time he got the ball in the second half, causing him trouble both posting up and driving. So he moved his game outside, hitting three straight jumpers late in the fourth quarter as part of the 10-0 run.

The spurt ended with a dunk by Manu Ginobili off a pass from Duncan, putting the Spurs ahead 83-71.

San Antonio limited the Lakers to only 13 points in the fourth quarter.

Tony Parker added 20 points and nine assists for San Antonio, while Ginobili had 11.

Kobe Bryant led the Lakers with 31 points, 18 of them in the second half. Shaquille O'Neal scored 19 points and had a game-high 13 rebounds, and Karl Malone scored 10.

After trailing 41-33 at the break, O'Neal and Bryant got their inside-outside game into a good rhythm as the Lakers opened the third quarter with a 13-4 run to take the lead. Bryant scored 12 in the quarter, and the Lakers led by as many as seven.

With Los Angeles neutralizing Duncan by double-teaming him on every touch, Parker took over the offensive burden by driving inside against slower defenders or pulling up for jumpers, finishing with 13 points in the third.

Both teams struggled to score in the game's opening minutes, together missing 14 of their first 20 shots.

A short jump hook by O'Neal with 4:59 in the first gave the Lakers a 12-5 lead, but the Spurs finished the quarter with a 16-2 run.

Ginobili started the burst with a 3-pointer from the top of the arc, and Parker capped it by dribbling around Bryant and Malone before heaving a 31-footer at the buzzer to make the score 21-14.

Los Angeles trimmed the lead to 27-23 early in the second on a driving layup by Derek Fisher, but the Lakers followed with another five-minute span without a field goal.

Bryant ended the drought with a 3-pointer to pull Los Angeles to 34-29, but Duncan answered with a pair of midrange jumpers and Devin Brown made a 3-pointer with 28 seconds left to give San Antonio its biggest lead of the half, 41-31.

Notes: O'Neal's postseason free throw struggles continued as he missed 10 of 13 attempts. Duncan was only 4-for-11 on foul shots and committed seven turnovers.

Powell's six gives SU a rout

MEN'S LAX from page 8

enough sustained offense to turn the tables.

"They shot the ball really well, they had a lot of emotion going in," Cannella said of Syracuse. "They took advantage of their opportunities. When you play a good team, when you play Syracuse in the dome, you need to play even or with a lead early. We played hard, but 12-6 is a tough chore going into the fourth."

Sean Lindsey added a hat trick, and Brian Crockett, Mike McDonald, Brett Bucktooth, and Alex Zink each scored a pair in the rout.

It was the worst loss of the season for the Minutemen, edging by two goals the 10-5 defeat at the hands of Brown on March 20. Still, for Cannella, there's reason to be positive, as the Orangemen were the cream of the crop on UMass's schedule.

"Regardless of what the score is, when you lose a game the guys are disappointed," Cannella said. "That just happened to be the best team we played this year. There's nothing you can say. I think our guys have worked really hard all year, and you do a lot of planning and prep, but it didn't work out the way you wanted.

"That doesn't give you any excuse to hang your head and not get out there as an individual and work extra hard. Hopefully the team can understand that, and take that into consideration, continue to work hard. I think they will."

The present isn't too attractive for the Minutemen, on a three-game losing streak dating back to an April 17 defeat at Yale, they have slid from the 6-4 record they had after a four-game mid-season winning streak, and a chance at the NCAA tournament is becoming less and less probable.

However, the future isn't so bleak. In a season filled with key injuries — Jeff Zywicki's season-ending back problems, Sean Morris's early bout with mononucleosis, and assorted other man-games sacrificed to injury — youth has gained a premium. Freshman Brett Garber's four points on Saturday was just the latest in a number of strong performances by underclassmen such as Matt Tundo, who has 17 goals and three assists in 12 games this season, and Brian Jacovina, who has found a knack for making his four goals this year important ones.

The Minutemen finish off the regular season against No. 11 Rutgers on Saturday at Garber Field.

Lefty is lurking

Mickelson in contention at HP Classic

By Mary Foster
Associated Press

Phil Mickelson (-15) watches a drive during yesterday's third round of the HP Classic in Louisiana.

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Playing in his first tournament since winning the Masters, Phil Mickelson moved into position to make it two in a row on Sunday at the HP Classic.

Mickelson shot a 69 in the third round to move into a tie for second with Charles Howell III , two strokes behind leader Joe Ogilvie.

Ogilvie shot a 66 on Sunday for a 17-under 199.

The final round was pushed back to Monday because of rain delays in the first two rounds.

Mickelson began the day in a six-way tie for third at 12-under, and moved to 14-under on the front nine before a bogey on No. 9.

He offset that miscue with birdies on 11, 14 and 15, to move within a stroke of Ogilvie. But a bogey on 18 dropped him two off the lead and left him at 15-under 201.

Ogilvie, looking for his first PGA Tour victory, had six birdies and no bogeys on the round. He had his best finish last week in the Shell Houston Open, finishing tied for 19th, but has made eight of 11 cuts this season.

Second-round leader Danny Ellis shot an 10-over 82 to fall way off the pace after opening rounds of 63 and 66. He was at 5-under.

Howell shot a 1-under 71 in the harsher conditions on Sunday after rounds of 66 and 64. Justin Rose and Hidemichi Tanaka were a three strokes back at 14-under 202.

A group of six players, including Vijay Singh, former champion K.J Choi and Guy Boros, who shot a third-round 63, were tied with a 13-under 203.

The $5.1 million tournament was delayed during the first and second rounds because of bad weather. Friday, heavy rain prevented any play.

The weather remained threatening Sunday morning, but the course was dry enough to allow play to resume and 77 players finished their round.

Players had described the course at English Turn as defenseless in the first and second rounds when the rain softened it and there was no wind. On Sunday it got tougher as a brisk north wind caused problems and scores rose.

Organizers planned to send golfers off two tees Monday morning to complete the tournament.

Minutewomen go 4-for-4

SOFTBALL from page 8

really tight as a team."

Nonetheless, the Minutewomen and the Rams (32-21-1, 7-5 A-10) were entangled in a classic pitchers' duel to open up the day. Fordham's Sara Kinney (15-12) and UMass' Kelli Arnold (16-5) both pitched complete games. Between the two hurlers, they allowed just four hits while striking out a total of nine batters.

The only run of the day came in the bottom of the first inning. With Hilary Puglia on third base, KJ Kelley pop-flied out to left field, and Puglia raced home to beat the tag.

"I would have liked to have hit the ball. I just didn't think we went through the ball and were really aggressive with [Fordham] at all," Sortino said. "But on the other side, I thought we pitched a really good game, and I thought our defense was outstanding."

Once the cameras were turned off and the TV vans headed out of town on Route 116, the foes engaged in a barn-burner that saw 20 runs scored on 17 hits.

UMass tallied the first run of the game when Kelley smacked a line drive to left, scoring Puglia to make it 1-0, but the Rams rallied right back in the very next frame. Jenna Busa gave up a single to Samantha Crocker that scored Krystie Henry from second to tie the game up at one apiece. Busa allowed two more runs in the inning to put the Minutewomen in a deficit for the fourth time in two weeks.

The Minutewomen fought right back in the bottom of the second with four more runs to recapture the lead. Pam Sulick led off the inning with a single, and KC Budrewicz followed up with a successful bunt. After hitting Kristi Stefanoni to load up the bases, pitcher Jamie Giguere walked Puglia, scoring pinch-runner Michea Holness.

Then came the straw that broke the camel's back. Denise Denis came up in the clutch once again, this time hitting a double to right center that brought all three runners home. Denis tried to turn it into a triple, but was caught out at third sliding head-first, earning a mild injury that she shook off, and returned in the next inning.

"[Denis] just continues to do what she does best," Sortino said. "She's a good hitter, she's really come into a rhythm in terms of her patience, she's really managing her pitch count well. She's come up with some big hits in the gap for us."

Busa (13-7) was relieved of her pitching duties in the third inning after giving up three more runs to lose the lead for the second time in the game.

"[Jenna] wasn't locating any of her pitches," Sortino said. "She threw them really, really hard, but the ball wasn't going where it needed to go, and I felt like there needed to be a change."

Down 6-5, the Maroon and White retook the lead for good in the bottom of the third off hits from Sulick, Budrewicz and Stefanoni.

The Minutewomen carried a two-run lead into the fifth, and mercyruled the Rams by tallying six runs to end the game at 14-6.

On Sunday, the duo of aces Busa and Barb LaFogg were dominant on the mound against the Quinnipiac Bobcats (21-24).

After giving up six runs Saturday, Busa was in peak form in game one, tossing a shutout, her seventh of the year, in the 5-0 win. She struck out nine and gave up just three hits in a brilliant day on the mound. Puglia raced home on an error, and Jamie Cahalan scored Candice Molinari to put the Minutewomen up 2-0 in the fourth. They would never look back after that point, gathering up one insurance run in the fifth and two more scores in the sixth to seal the shutout.

Barb LaFogg made her first career start a memorable one in the 3-0 win in Game 2. LaFogg was perfect through 4-1/3 innings, and finished with a one-hit shutout.

DAILY COLLEGIAN
DAILY COLLEGIAN

Art Department Day at the UStore
10%* off Art Supplies
Tuesday, May 4th
Enter for your chance to win:
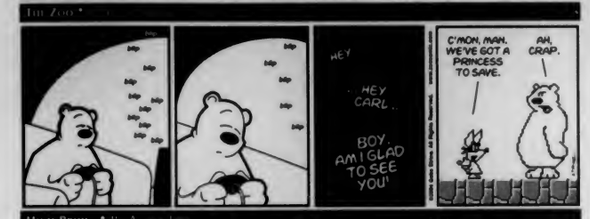
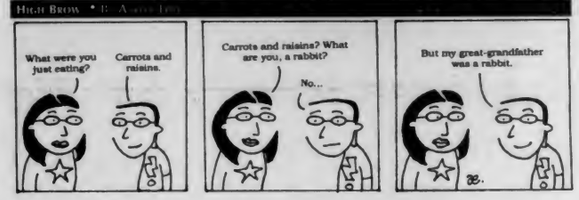
- Digital Camera
- Canvas Boards
- Sketchbooks
- Oil Sets

UMASS AMHERST
University Store and Textbook Annex
Phone: (413)545-2619
Fax: (413)545-4396



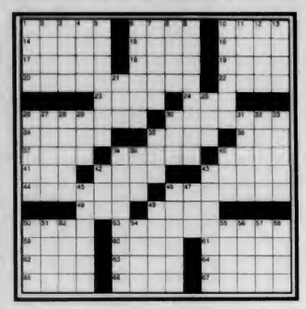
HermanMiller AUTHORIZED DEALER
LEXINGTON GROUP
Buyers & Sellers of Quality New & Used Office Furniture
Design & Space Planning · Installation
Furniture Rental & Leasing · Panel Systems New & Remanufactured
Fax: 788-0789 746-3064
380 Union St., West Springfield, MA 01089



This summer, change your life: change your mind.
We will change your mind this summer with new course selections, expanded degree programs and accredited online learning.
Use this coupon to waive the registration fee for 6 or more credits!*
Only at UMass Amherst. Only this summer.
Call 413-545-2414 for a free course catalog, or visit us online at www.umass.edu/summer
UMassAmherst Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.
*Savings Code: EBT149. May be applied when registering for six or more credits at one time during Summer Session I or II, 2004. Coupon has a singular value of $35.00; multiple coupons may not be applied to one registration. Must be presented at the time of registration and may not be applied retroactively. Not redeemable in cash or credit. Not valid if credit load falls below six. Other limitations apply.

"If you don't learn to laugh at troubles, you won't have anything to laugh at when you grow old."
-Edward W. Howe
QUOTE FOR THE DAY

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 Dirt
6 Practice boxing
10 — ate her order
14 Mail for Porter
15 Engage 16 PDQ's kin
17 Yellowish pink
18 Tiny bit of cheese
19 Ernest Hemingway
20 Baseball lead
22 Comedian Danny
23 Feeds shouts
24 Mediocre grade
25 Pure heroine
30 Exulted (in)
34 Signs of the times
35 "How've ya —?"
36 Invasion's Fennies
37 Boathouse gear
38 Chimneys
40 Volcano's output
41 Greek letter
42 Leather
43 Step in Onon
45 "Ain't it —!"
46 Most profound
48 Sense of humor
49 — long syne
50 Blouse part
53 Indoor antenna
56 Like eggs
60 Micky Dirk's foe
61 Seaweeds
62 Respiratory organ
63 Complicated
64 Braid
66 March 15, in Rome
68 Leered at 69 Nobleman

DOWN
1 Balletic
2 Frankenstein's golfer
3 Petty of "Tarik Ginn"
4 Snare
5 Fortunes
6 Forms
7 Bothersome people
8 Domain
9 Uses again
10 Green Bay player
11 On the briny
12 Female
13 Fencing sword
21 Golfer's place
25 Loving time
26 Hearth
27 Commuter city
28 "Great blue" bird
29 Goes somewhere
30 "Wow!"
31 Picture
32 Roof overhangs
33 Handed out as cards
35 Hobo
38 TOK: a g
39 Bathrooms
40 Medium plant
42 "Most Wanted" org.
43 Bureaucrat's delight
45 Resides
48 Added to a sound track
47 Subpoena fan
49 Supersite
50 Bowler
51 Roman poet
52 Garden green
54 Memorial hello
55 Ms. Fitzgerald
57 Trash receptacles
57 Trash's need
58 Mounts game

AMHERST HAIRSTYLISTS
Caren's Place
Come in and get the attention you want!
- Students Always $15 shampoo & cut
- We specialize in MULTI-COLOR HIGHLIGHTS using three to four complementing and blending colors
- FREE Haircolor consultation
- 1/2 price Facial Waxing on Wednesdays
- Walk-ins Welcome

Mon-Fri 10-6
Sat 10-4
253-1200
40 Main St.
Downtown Amherst
No checks-we accept debit cards
$2.00 OFF HAIRCUT
With this COUPON only

DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Meatball Sub
- Chicken Fajita
- Chili Nacho Boat
- Vegetable Chili Nachos (vegan)

DINNER
- Veal Parmesan
- Savory Baked Chicken
- Roast Vegetable Wrap (vegan)
- Southern 6-Bean Stew (vegan)

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

MONDAY
- High: 65
- Low: 44

TUESDAY
- High: 62
- Low: 38

WEDNESDAY
- High: 64
- Low: 43

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Scott Eldridge II
COPY EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Samantha Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Glen Straub/ Diana Mogilevsky

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Smiles always bring out the best in a face.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Don't stand in the rain with an umbrella. It's better to get wet.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Teamwork is the best way to get things done. Go team!

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Tie-dye your bed sheets. It will spice things up in your bedroom.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Sitting through meetings may not be fun, but they're necessary.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Taking the bus is not only convenient, but can also prevent drunk driving.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Deer like Bambi may be sweet, but Jagermeister is nasty.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Don't get pedicures; feet are gross.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Don't forget to buy a card for your friend's birthday that's coming up.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Don't be an optimist or a pessimist. Be a realist.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Do everything in your power to meet Tom Brady; he is beautiful.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
The time is right to be adventurous. Ask that hottie on a safari.

Classifieds Sponsored by
WIFFLE ROCK
WWW.WIFFLEROCK.COM

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates now Renting 2 bedrm $1050/1100, 4 bedrm $2100 available 6/1/04 No last months rent, Free Heat & Hot Water, 2 full baths, AC. On busline Mon-Fri 10-5pm 253-7377

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Center of town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms; hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

EMPLOYMENT

Spa manager East Hampton Part-time nights and weekends $90/shift 413-695-3765

EMPLOYMENT

THE RED LION INN Looking for an awesome summer experience? [illegible] On Property Housing available! [illegible] MASS Call Us or Click Us Today!

PART-TIME POSITIONS 20+ hours/wk; Set your own schedule. Conduct surveys over the phone at our Hadley location – NO SALES! Evngs/wknds; hlth/dent/401(k), PVTA accessible. Email myjvsan@nicklmarktingsinc.com or apply in person, First Floor 100 Venture Way, Hadley, MA (888)423-5381

Children's fitness camp holding 33rd summer session on Hampshire College campus June 16-Aug 7. Seeking Counselors & Instructors in Nutrition, Health, Rock climbing, Drama, Dance, Photography, Martial Arts, Aerobics & all sports. Call now for the summer of a lifetime! 413-232-8518 www.campkingsmont.com

EMPLOYMENT

ATTENTION LAX PLAYERS Play & Coach – Have fun – Make $$$ Top Boys Sports Camp in Maine looking for staff to instruct & coach LAX. Awesome Summer! Work with kids! Top salaries, FREE rm/bd/trvl allow. Apply online ASAP: www.camp-cobbossee.com

Painters Wanted in Danvers area want a challenging Job outdoors w/good $$$? Seeking driven, Hardworking Individual w/own car to be a painting crew member. No exp. necessary Call: Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Nurse, Nurse assistant for busy Summer camp on Hampshire College campus June 20-Aug 7. 413-232-8518 www.campkingsmont.com

Play sports! Have fun! Save Money! Sports Camp in Maine. Coaches needed: Tennis, Basketball, Baseball, Water-sports, Ropes Course, Golf, Archery, and more. Work Outdoors and Have a Great Summer! Call Free: (888) 844-8080 or Apply: www.campcedar.com

EMPLOYMENT

CANTONESE, JAPANESE, KOREAN, MANDARIN Earn $75 Individuals fluent in Cantonese, Japanese, Korean, and Mandarin needed to participate in a test development activity. Participants will provide responses to the Listening, Reading, Language Structures, Cultural Understanding, Language Acquisition, Speaking, and Writing sections of tests for these languages. Participation is by appointment May 3 – May 14. For more information call Pam Gigliotti, National Evaluation Systems, Inc. 256-0444.

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413)584-4746

Hardworking individuals living around 91/95 belt South of I-90 for fulltime painter positions. Challenging job requires independence, own car. $10-$12 base rate. Call Will @ 617-699-8970

EMPLOYMENT

FRENCH, GERMAN, HEBREW, ITALIAN, LATIN Earn $50 Individuals fluent in French, German, Hebrew, Italian, and Latin needed to participate in a test development activity. Participants will respond to approximately twenty-five multiple-choice questions, and provide responses to Writing and Speaking sections of tests for these languages. Participation is by appointment May 3 – May 14. For more information call Pam Gigliotti, National Evaluation Systems, Inc. 256-0444.

Lowell Area Driven Leader needed to be crew chief for one of the state's largest exterior house painting companies. Must be hard-working, Independent & have own car. Exp. preferred, but not necessary. Call Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Painters wanted greater Springfield area 1-413-695-2645 or 188-277-9787

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Students wanted for a summer painting job. $400-$600 /week. Experience not needed but a plus. All hired will go through a paid training program Call 888-277-9787 or go to COLLEGE-PRO.COM Work with friends

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

FURNITURE FOR SALE

3 Rms of furniture for sale Graduating in May Prices negotiable Call Lauren at 253-4993

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley 5 Bedroom Plus home, 2 baths w/ laundry hookup. Large yard, minutes from UMass. 549-4270

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female roommate wanted to share 2-bd apt in Sunderland. $418/mo. Includes heat, hot water, and cable. Available 6/1 or earlier. Call Lauren @ 860-604-6068.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SUMMER SUBLET

3 or 4 bedroom (flexible) in Belchertown House- Huge (11 acre) backyard. Fall lease option $1200 (negotiable) come see! Aaron 978-460-1756

The Boulders 2 bedroom apt. available June 1st- August 15th fall option 413-478-3915

Live downtown this summer! Large 4BR 2-floor apt next to Amherst HS. Washer & dryer included. 5 min. to bus stop & town. ONLY $362.50 per room + utilities. Available 6/1 thru 8/15. Contact Rob: agraff@student.umass.edu/978-808-7322

SUMMER SUBLET

Want to live downtown this summer? 1 Bedroom, Above Newbury Comics Amherst Only 600/month, June-August. Call 549-9309

2 BR Apt for summer w/option to continue $820 or Best Offer Everything included Contact Angie_T_MV@yahoo.com or Jamie 617-435-0559

2 bedrooms, fully furnished apartment, 1 full bath. Available June 1st- September 1st. Call Rachel Styman @ 781-264-1512

WANTED

Summer House Rental 413-232-8518

Compensation up to $7K+; loving, couples seeking egg donors ASAP! Healthy women, 21+, non-smokers with proven academic achievement. View www.tinytreasuresagency.com for info or e-mail apply @ tinytreasures.com for applications. Toll Free 1-866-357-6868. Refer to ad #UMA-117.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MAY 3, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The neverending story

UM softball clinches 14th straight title

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

For a squad that doesn't care about numbers, the Massachusetts softball team is good at posting impressive ones.

Saturday, the Minutewomen's diligent efforts paid off when they downed Fordham in their doubleheader, 1-0 and 14-6 respectively, to clinch their 14th consecutive Atlantic 10 regular season title.

The conference-clinching sweep was part of a substantial weekend in which the Minutewomen (30-13, 11-1 A-10) not only went a perfect 4-for-4 against the Rams and Quinnipiac, but also clinched their eighth-straight 30-win season and extended the nation's longest home winning streak to 71.

The Maroon and White will head into the A-10 tournament as the No. 1 seed. Much like other statistics, UMass coach Elaine Sortino finds this number to be insignificant.

"It doesn't matter. There's going to be four teams there, and somebody's going to win it," she said. "It's nice to win the regular season, we enjoyed that yesterday, but this [A-10 Tournament] is a whole new ball game. It's about playing good ball for three days, and that's what we've got to look forward to."

The cameras were rolling in Game 1, the first-ever televised game in history between two A-10 foes, and the defense went on to steal the show in a game that saw just one run scored, by UMass in the first inning.

"I think a lot of [the lack of offense] had to do with the TV," Sortino said. "We've never had an experience like that before, and I think we're

See SOFTBALL on page 6

COURTESY KAREN WINFIELD

Senior Jamie Cahalan (24) scores the Minutemen's 14th run in Saturday's Game 2 romp over Fordham. The run gave the Minutewomen a mercy rule victory, a sweep of the doubleheader, and clinched UMass's 14th Atlantic 10 regular season title. UMass took both ends of Sunday's doubleheader against Quinnipiac.

Orange crush

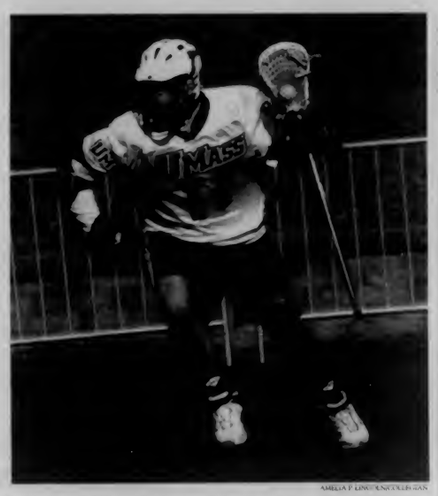
Minutemen fall to Syracuse in rout

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

When it rains on the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team this season, it pours — even indoors.

Led by senior Mike Powell's six goals, the Syracuse Orangemen dispatched UMass 17-10 at the Carrier Dome in Syracuse, N.Y. Saturday. The Minutemen fall to 7-8 on the season, while the No. 4 Orangemen improve to 10-2.

UMass	10
Syracuse	17



Powell's half-dozen was a career-high, although it was a missed shot that made all the noise. With the game well in hand, Powell completed his much-touted "move," though it led to no goal, and ended up being more of a show-off move than a tactical one. Powell jogged in from the left wing, bounced into the air, did a full front flip, took a few more steps and then fired a shot that went wide of UMass goaltender Bill Schell's cage.

While "The Move" didn't end up having any consequence, Powell certainly saved his best performance at home for his last. His six goals and one assist edged him to within five points of Syracuse's all-time career points record, held by Powell's older brothers, Casey and Ryan.

"When you face a guy that good, it's almost like, 'hey, whatever you do, he's going to make his teammates better,' so we tried to take his teammates out of it," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

Minuteman Matt Tundo scored the game's first goal just 17 seconds in, but the Orangemen went on a 7-1 run over the next 17 minutes, including four from Powell. The Minutemen were able to keep SU from going on another streak like that one, but couldn't muster

See MEN'S LAX on page 6

AMELIA P. LINCH-KNICKERBOCKER

Kevin Glenz took four shots, two on goal, in the Minutemen's 17-10 defeat at Syracuse Saturday. UMass falls to 7-8, and finishes the regular season Saturday.

Flyers get one back at home

By Rob Maaddi
Associated Press

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Back at home, the Philadelphia Flyers dominated the Toronto Maple Leafs and regained control of the series.

Keith Primeau had three goals and Michal Handzus scored twice, leading the Flyers to a 7-2 victory over Toronto on Sunday in Game 5 of their Eastern Conference semifinal series.

Philadelphia can eliminate the Leafs with a victory in Toronto on Tuesday night. If necessary, Game 7 would be Thursday. The home team has won each game in the series.

Flyers	7
Maple Leafs	2

The victory was costly for the Flyers, who lost goaltender Robert Esche and defenseman Vladimir Malakhov to undisclosed injuries. Sean Burke replaced Esche after the first period and stopped eight of nine shots.

After being outplayed in two straight losses in Toronto, the Flyers controlled the game from the start, taking a 2-0 lead in the first six minutes and holding the Leafs without a shot until the final minute of the first period.

Mark Recchi and Branko Radivojevic also scored for the Flyers, who have never lost a best-of-seven series in which they led 2-0, going 16-0.

Leafs goalie Ed Belfour allowed six goals on 18 shots, before being replaced by Trevor Kidd less than four minutes into the second period.

Joe Nieuwendyk and Gary Roberts scored for Toronto.

Energized by a noisy sellout crowd of 19,825, the Flyers played with more intensity and determination than they showed in the two losses at the Air Canada Centre. They outshot Toronto 29-11.

Recchi picked up a loose puck after a turnover by Leafs defenseman Bryan McCabe, skated in and wristed a shot past Belfour for a 1-0 lead 3:51 in.

Handzus made it 2-0 just 1:52 later with his first goal of the playoffs. Handzus took a drop pass from Simon Gagne and shot it through a screen past Belfour.

Primeau's first goal came on a short-handed breakaway with 1:06 left in the first period. Primeau beat McCabe to a loose puck, skated in on Belfour, made a nifty move to go around defenseman Brian Leetch and one-handed a shot into the net.

His second goal came on another breakaway 44 seconds into the second period. Primeau broke in with Gagne, who made a nice centering pass to set up the easy goal.

Primeau made it 7-2 early in the third period. The Flyers' captain came in with just 11 playoff goals in 119 games.

Nieuwendyk, back in the lineup after sitting out the last three games with back spasms, scored Toronto's first goal on a rebound with 33 seconds left in the first period.

'Smarty' trainer soaks it in

By Richard Rosenblatt
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. (AP) — The morning after John Servis won the Kentucky Derby with Smarty Jones, the trainer was still having a hard time taking it all in.

"It's still a little overwhelming," Servis said on a rainy Sunday at Churchill Downs. "It'll probably be sinking in for the next few days."

Servis said Smarty Jones came out of the race healthy and would be shipped back to his home base at Philadelphia Park on Monday or Tuesday to begin training for the Preakness at Pimlico on May 15.

When Servis returns to his home in Bensalem, Pa., about a mile from the track, he might have a better idea how popular Smarty Jones has become.

Servis already knows a huge roar went up from the Phillies crowd when the race was shown on the giant video screen before Saturday's game. And friends told him folks at Philly Park were "jumping on tables" to celebrate Smarty's win.

"The city is embracing it, the whole state is embracing it," Servis said. "It'll be fun. We're very fortunate to be part of it."

Asked if Smarty Jones might be more popular than the Flyers, Servis said, "His winning streak's a little longer then theirs so I'd have to say Smarty — but we'll be rooting for them."

Winning the Derby is a golden opportunity for a trainer to move up in the ranks, and perhaps set up shop at a bigger track like Santa Anita or Belmont Park or Churchill Downs.

But just listening to Servis, there's no way the 45-year-old trainer born in West Virginia is about to leave Philly. With a wife and two teenage children, and living in a city he loves, Servis seems quite comfortable, Derby win or not.

He's been approached about leaving, but says he's not interested.

"My oldest son is going to be a senior next year and that's my last year with him," he said. "There's nothing more important to me than my family. I'm not going anywhere."

With his wife, Sherry, standing next to him holding a long-stemmed red rose, Servis then related a touching moment with his 16-year-old son Blane before the race.

The horses enter the track from the backstretch and are led all the way around the track with owners, trainers and family walking along. Blane, Servis said, is a quiet kid. "I could feel him coming up behind me, and he said 'Dad, I'm getting so excited.' That was good. That was great."

Servis was away from his family for almost two months while Smarty Jones prepped for the Derby at Oaklawn Park in Hot Springs, Ark. The colt won the Southwest Stakes, the Rebel Stakes and the Arkansas Derby during that time, and then arrived at Churchill Downs less than two weeks ago.

Together for Derby week, the Servises soaked up the scenes, especially the moments when fans where cheering for Smarty Jones before the race.

"We're walking out between the barns, and when we made the cut to head down (onto the track), the people were lined up on both sides," Servis said. "When they saw his number, they just started clapping, and I'm trying to quiet them ... The way over people were calling out 'Smar-tee! Smar-tee!' It was great to have that support."

Smarty's win made instant celebrities of Servis, Philly Park jockey Stewart Elliott and owners Roy and Patricia Chapman. After Smarty Jones put away Lion Heart in what turned out to be a two-horse race instead of the predicted wide-open affair, the Servis' got a taste of fame.

Walking through their hotel lobby late Saturday night, Servis said people just started applauding. They also met a couple from Scotland who invited them to the Melbourne Cup in Australia.

"We'd love to have you there." Servis said. "I said, 'I know my wife would love to go there, but it's the first week of November, that's Breeders' Cup time.'"

Added Servis' wife: "And he said, 'Well, we can't change our parade for you, John.' "

Jurassic 5: the highlight of Spring Concert at Mullins

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Kevin Garnett of NBA receives MVP award

SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, MAY 4, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 132

U.S. troops clash with militia

Fifteen U.S. soldiers killed in Iraq since beginning of May; American hostage reunited with his wife

By Denis D. Gray
Associated Press

NAJAF, Iraq (AP) — U.S. forces in Najaf came under their most intense attack yet by Shiite militiamen in a clash yesterday that may have killed up to 20 Iraqis. But the military still held back from going after the militia's leader, a radical cleric, to avoid angering Iraq's Shiite majority.

The United States turned to a new commander for an Iraqi force taking control of Fallujah, considering Maj. Gen. Mohammed Latif, who opposed Saddam Hussein, to replace another general.

And Thomas Hamill — the Mississippi truck driver who escaped Iraqi kidnappers after three weeks in captivity — flew to Germany for a reunion with his wife. On Sunday, Hamill fled a house where he was being held north of Baghdad and ran to a passing U.S. patrol — his first appearance since his captors released a videotape April 10, a day after his abduction, threatening to kill him.

In Baghdad, insurgents opened fire on U.S. soldiers guarding a weapons cache, killing one soldier and wounding two, the military said. Elsewhere, a Marine was killed in by enemy fire in Anbar province, the western Iraqi province where the turbulent cities of Ramadi and Fallujah are located.

The deaths brought the U.S. toll to 153 since April 1 — including 15 in May. At least 735 U.S. troops have died in Iraq since the war began in March 2003.

U.S. troops battling insurgents in west Baghdad pounded rebel positions with artillery fire yesterday night, a series of eight or more heavy blasts that resounded through central Baghdad, the Army said.

U.S. troops in Najaf, south of the capital, clashed for hours with Shiite militiamen who barraged the Americans' base with mortars overnight, then opened fire in the afternoon from several directions. Tank and machine-gun fire demolished a building that troops said was the source of shooting, raising a pillar of smoke. Apache attack helicopters circled but did not fire.

Before dawn yesterday, militiamen shelled the troops with about 20 mortars, hitting in and around the base where U.S. troops replaced Spanish forces a week ago. There were no casualties.

The U.S. military is deployed at the base and outside Najaf to crack down on radical Shiite cleric Muqtada al-Sadr and his militia. But the troops have held back because the military fears angering Shiites Muslims, whose holiest site in Iraq — the Imam Ali Shrine — is about three miles from the U.S. base.

Lt. Col. Pat White said American troops would "maintain our defense posture" until someone "much, much higher than me makes a different decision."

He estimated 20 militiamen were killed in the battle and said there were few civilian casualties because troops were using precision fire. "I think every soldier here understands the sensitivities of the situation," he said.

SGA questions Collegian independency

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

The Public Policy and Relations Committee of the Student Government Association passed a motion last night to be brought to the Senate floor Wednesday asking that The Massachusetts Daily Collegian "refund the direct financial contributions from the SGA," or the SGA will limit "access to any further resources of the SGA."

The motion, which passed after a tie-breaking vote by Adrienne Girad, chair of the committee, defines the "direct financial contributions" as $10,000 paid by the SGA for a past Collegian lawsuit, $2,592 for the services of a Center for Student Businesses advisor this year, and administrative overhead for fiscal year 2005.

The motion sited its reasons as The Collegian's decision to run "an extremely offensive, hurtful and inappropriate article on Wednesday, April 28," referring to the column by Rene Gonzalez, titled "Pat Tillman is not a hero: He got what was coming to him" and The Collegian's opposition to any SGA oversight.

The motion states that the Gonzalez column "will cost the University and its future enrollment and fundraising abilities" and that the SGA "wholeheartedly disagrees with the decision of the leadership of The Daily Collegian to print said article — [and] should not enable such behavior in the future."

"We've received a lot of calls from SGAs around

See SGA on page 2

Commission finds potential safeguards for death penalty

By Karen Testa
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — A commission appointed by Gov. Mitt Romney issued a report yesterday outlining legal and scientific safeguards to ensure a near foolproof death penalty system in Massachusetts, but opponents decried the plan as an expensive political maneuver with no proof it would work.

Romney, who vowed during his campaign to bring back capital punishment, embraced the findings — which allow very few crimes to qualify as capital offenses — and said his staff would be drafting legislation in the coming months based on the commission's report.

"We offer a series of 10 proposals — many of which are unprecedented in the history of American capital punishment — that if adopted in their entirety, can allow creation of a fair capital punishment statute for Massachusetts that is narrowly tailored and as infallible as humanly possible," the report said.

The possibility of reinstituting the death penalty faces uncertain prospects in the Legislature. House Speaker Thomas Finneran, D-Boston, and Senate President Robert Travaglini, D-Boston, have opposed capital punishment.

"Any time you have humans involved in the process there's an automatic assumption that it's far from perfect," Travaglini said yesterday.

Finneran echoed Travaglini's concern.

"I'll be interested to see what the report suggests in terms of how human beings can so order human affairs that all possibility of error is eliminated," Finneran said. "It hasn't happened with, for example, the space shuttle on which we make incredible expenditure and the very best scientists in the world have continued to struggle with those types of challenges."

Massachusetts abolished capital punishment in 1984, and hasn't executed anyone since 1947.

Republican governors since then have pushed for reinstating it and came close in 1997, after 10-year-old Jeffrey Curley was abducted from a Cambridge street and killed by two men who later received life sentences.

Soldiers reprimanded for abuse of Iraqi prisoners

Brig. Gen. Janis Karpinski claims no prior knowledge of the mistreatment

By Jim Krane
Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Seven U.S. soldiers have been reprimanded in the alleged abuse of Iraqi prisoners, and the U.S. officer who oversaw Baghdad's notorious Abu Ghraib prison suggested yesterday that more may be involved.

The reprimands were the first known punishment of soldiers involved in the mistreatment of prisoners at Baghdad's Abu Ghraib prison.

On the orders of Lt. Gen. Ricardo Sanchez, commander of U.S. forces in Iraq, six of the soldiers — all officers and noncommissioned officers — have received the most severe level of administrative reprimand in the U.S. military, a military official said on condition of anonymity. A seventh officer was given a more lenient admonishment.

The official said he believed investigations of the officers were complete and they would not face further action or court martial. However, the reprimands could spell the end of their careers.

Another six U.S. military police already are facing criminal charges.

President Bush called Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld before a campaign trip yesterday and urged him to make sure the U.S. soldiers are punished, White House spokesman Scott McClellan said.

"The president wanted to make sure appropriate action is being taken against those responsible for these shameful and appalling acts," McClellan said.

The U.S.-appointed Iraqi Governing Council joined the chorus of international criticism of the alleged abuse, terming it a violation of international law and the Geneva Conventions.

In a statement yesterday, the council demanded that U.S. authorities allow Iraqi judges to take part in the interrogation of prisoners and open the detention centers to inspection by Iraqi officials.

Brig. Gen. Janis Karpinski, who oversaw the prison, said on ABC's "Good Morning America" that she did not know about the prisoner abuse while it was happening.

"They were despicable acts," Karpinski said yesterday. "Had I known anything about it, I certainly would have reacted very quickly."

Karpinski, commander of the 800th Military Police Brigade, said that in one photograph from the prison, there appeared to be more Americans involved in the alleged abuse than the six MPs who have already been charged.

"Absolutely. One photograph showed — it didn't show faces completely — but the photograph showed 32 boots," Karpinski told ABC. "I'm saying other people than the military police."

It was not clear if that would include the seven soldiers reported reprimanded Monday.

Last week, CBS' "60 Minutes II" broadcast images allegedly showing Iraqis stripped naked, hooded and being tormented by their U.S. captors.

An internal U.S. Army report found that Iraqi detainees were subjected to "sadistic, blatant and wanton criminal abuses," according to The New Yorker magazine.

The Arab language television station Al-Jazeera broadcast an interview yesterday with two Iraqis who said they were abused at Abu Ghraib. One, identified only as Hashim, said guards "covered our heads with bags, they beat us with the butts of their guns without any fear that we would die of the blows."

"They made us take our clothes off and they pushed us against the wall," he said. "They did things to us that I am unable to talk about." The other Iraqi, Haider Sabur, said an American intelligence officer, along with an Iraqi and an Egyptian translator, showed him "immoral photos of the acts that took place," apparently to frighten him.

At a news conference yesterday in Baghdad, Iraqi Foreign Minister Hoshyar Zibari strongly condemned the alleged abuse and called for an independent inquiry into the reports.

"The position of the Foreign Ministry is to condemn these kind of behaviors," he said. "We call for an independent inquiry to investigate these allegations" so that the perpetrators will "be brought to justice."

Karpinski, who oversaw the Army-run detention facilities in Iraq, told The New York Times she believed military commanders were trying to shift the blame for the abuses from military intelligence officers in Iraq to the reservists.

"We're disposable," she said of the military's attitude toward reservists. "Why would they want the active-duty people to take the blame? They want to put this on the M.P.'s and hope that this thing goes away. Well, it's not going to go away."

Karpinski told ABC the cell blocks at Abu Ghraib, where some of the alleged abuse occurred, were "under the military intelligence control."

"It was part of Abu Ghraib prison operation, but those cell blocks ... and the prison was actually under the control of the military intelligence command at the time."

Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt, chief U.S. military spokesman in Iraq, said on ABC that he isn't sure Army military intelligence "had anything to do with the individual acts of criminal behavior."

"Those were clearly the acts of individuals," Kimmitt said, appearing on the program after Karpinski. "They made the choice to do those. And now they seem to be a little concerned they've been caught and being prosecuted for that."

Kimmitt added, however, that the investigation is reviewing "concerns expressed about the military intelligence."

Asked whether more people are under investigation, Kimmitt said it's possible but he didn't want to "pry into" an ongoing probe.

"Something's going on here that's wrong and we need to get to the bottom of this. There's been determination to open up every door and find out what's going on," Kimmitt said.

Karpinski's lawyer, Neal Puckett, told "Good Morning, America" that while his client received "an admonishment" from her commander, she has not been suspended or relieved of her command.

Brig. Gen. Janis Karpinski, right, is shown in this photo during her appearance on ABC's "Good Morning America" with interviewer Diane Sawyer yesterday.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Advertising Manager Scott Pihl
Non-Print Sales Manager Nick Markantonatos
Assistant Business Manager Sean Costello
Production Manager Shannon Farrington
Associate Editor Glen Straub
Associate Editor Molly Eggleston
Associate Editor Matthew Reid
Associate Editor S. J. Port
Associate Editor Ferron Saltziker
Associate Editor Scott Eldridge II
Associate Editor Andrew Merritt
Classified Manager Kristen Weiss
Production Assistant Manager Marty Pappas
Circulation Manager Mark Logatic
Circulation Manager Greg Stamm
Design Director Renee Brand
Design Editor Linda Wallack
Design Editor David Bor
Business Manager Jaclynn Sorenson
Sales Manager Josh Kiggins
Sales Manager Richard Pacheco
Sales Manager Rachael Bruno
Sales Manager Charlie Higgins
Accounts Receivable/Billing Meghan Healy
Accounts Payable Cameron J. Woods
Classified Sales Paige Grant
Assistant News Editor Erika Lovley
Arts Editor Morris Singer
Photography Editor Amelia P. Lincoln
Photography Editor Mike Martelli
Photography Editor Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE SPRING SEMESTER OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST EXCEPT DURING VACATIONS AND EXAMINATION PERIODS. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED AND OPERATED BY STUDENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST. THE PAPER BEGAN AS NOTES ON COLLEGE NEWS IN 1890, BECAME A WEEKLY IN 1908, AND THE DAILY SOON IN 1936. PUBLISHED BY THE COLLEGIAN AND THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN PRINTED BY ITSELF SINCE 1996. FOR ADVERTISING AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 EXT. 3. $30.00

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
MDC DESIGN

For the Record

Clarification

Due to an editing error, yesterday's brief that accompanied the photo spread of the Spring Concert at the Mullins Center was unattributed. The commentary should have been attributed to Monique Jemmott.

Around the nation

Michigan

Bush calls Kerry unsteady leader

KALAMAZOO, Mich. (AP) — President Bush, winding his way by bus through job-strapped Michigan and Ohio, acknowledged yesterday that the region is still in the throes of an ailing economy while warning that Democratic challenger John Kerry is not the steady leader America needs.

Looking to show equal parts empathy and determination, Bush told Republican-friendly audiences that "when the president speaks, he better mean what he says," and also said that in time of war, "what the country needs is a leader who speaks clearly."

The reference was to Kerry, whom the Bush campaign has tried to portray as a candidate who lacks conviction and merely says what is politically expedient. As Bush campaigned, Kerry unveiled new ads that tout his "lifetime of service and strength."

ASSOCIATED PRESS
President George W. Bush

Massachusetts

Out-of-staters pay full toll price

BOSTON (AP) — Out-of-state drivers irate about Massachusetts tolls won't get a sympathetic ear from U.S. Supreme Court justices after the court declined on Monday to take up an appeal of a lawsuit over toll discounts.

Peter A. Doran, who lives in Brattleboro, Vt., sued the Massachusetts Turnpike Authority in July 2002, just days after the state put into effect toll hikes that were reduced for drivers who use the state's automatic transponder, called Fast Lane.

Drivers who use the state's transponder pay 75 cents at the Allston-Brighton tolls and $2.50 at the Ted Williams and Sumner Tunnels. Drivers with transponders from other states, such as E-Z Pass, pay the full toll, which is $1 at the tollbooth and $3 at the tunnels. Drivers with no transponder at all also pay the full toll.

Doran alleged in the lawsuit that giving the discount only to Fast Lane users violates U.S. commerce laws.

Washington

Oil prices reach highest in 13 years

WASHINGTON (AP) — The price of oil rose to its highest level in more than 13 years yesterday as traders responded to the weekend killing of five Westerners working for an oil contractor in Saudi Arabia.

The wholesale price of gasoline also reached a new record, signaling the likelihood of even higher pump prices by Memorial Day, which marks the beginning of the summer driving season.

Crude for June delivery gained 83 cents on the New York Mercantile Exchange, settling at $38.21 per barrel — the highest price since Oct. 16, 1990, when oil was valued at $38.89 per barrel.

The rally in oil prices was largely triggered by the violence in Saudi Arabia on Saturday, when four men opened fire on the offices of oil contractor ABB Lummus Global Inc. Two Americans, two Britons, an Australian and a Saudi died in the attack. All four attackers — who police said were Saudi brothers — were killed.

Around the world

Pakistan

Three killed in bombing, act declared "terroism"

KARACHI, Pakistan (AP) — A car bomb shattered a bus carrying Chinese engineers to a port project in remote southwestern Pakistan yesterday, killing three in what the government called a terrorist attack.

The Chinese government expressed deep concern and urged more protection for some 400 of its citizens working on the port project in Gawadar.

The attack occurred as the bus was taking at least 12 Chinese to the port, said Sattar Lasi, the chief of police in Gawadar. The site is about 300 miles west of Karachi, near the border with Iran.

"This is clearly terrorism. The aim was to terrorize the Chinese working at the Gawadar port," said Lal Jan, another senior police official.

Islamic militant groups have targeted foreigners in the past, but never in such a remote part of the country.

Shoaib Suddle, the police chief in Baluchishtan province, said it appeared the bomb was triggered by remote control. Police investigators found fuses and pieces of a cylinder that contained the bomb in the white Suzuki car, said Communications Minister Babar Khan Ghauri.

Only the skeleton of the car remained, and the bus also was heavily damaged, with windows shattered and metal twisted, he said.

Ghafoor Baluch, a fisherman who lives near the scene of the attack, said the explosion shook the walls of his home.

"We saw pieces of metal from the car strewn on the beach and stuck in nearby trees," he said. The explosion left a four-foot crater and smashed the front of the bus, he said.

Saudi Arabia

Ambassador urges evacuation for Westerners

YANBU, Saudi Arabia (AP) — The U.S. ambassador traveled to this Saudi oil-industry city yesterday with a simple message for the gathered Americans:

Go home.

We cannot protect you.

Huddled in a meeting room in a Holiday Inn still pocked with bullet holes after the latest in a string of attacks on Westerners killed two Americans and four others, many said they would heed his words.

The first to go were among the 90 foreign employees of ABB Lummus Global Inc., a Houston-based oil contractor whose offices were attacked Saturday by four gunmen trying to encourage Saudis to join the resistance against the U.S. occupation of Iraq.

The first ABB employees — all Europeans — boarded a van for the Yanbu airport yesterday night.

"Money is money, but it's not worth your life," said Armando Rosiglioni, 63, of Venice, Italy, who arrived in Yanbu 10 days ago on a three-month contract. "I don't want to take a stupid risk."

ASSOCIATED PRESS
U.S. ambassador

Israel

Prime Minister to devise alternate withdrawal plan

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon said yesterday he will come up with an alternative withdrawal plan after his proposal to pull out of the Gaza Strip and parts of the West Bank was resoundingly rejected by members of his Likud Party.

Israeli officials suggested the original plan — which had U.S. backing and was popular with Israelis — would be slightly scaled down and the new version would not be put to a Likud vote.

"I want to say in the clearest fashion there will be another plan," Sharon told a meeting of Likud lawmakers, according to a participant.

Sharon had proposed his "disengagement plan" as the best way to obtain security for Israel in the absence of peace moves and to defuse international pressure for greater concessions.

Members of Sharon's traditionally pro-settler party disagreed, voting against the plan 60 percent to 40 percent in a nonbinding referendum Sunday that the Maariv daily labeled a "crushing defeat" for the premier.

ASSOCIATED PRESS
Prime Minister Ariel Sharon

Motion to be brought to Senate

SGA from page 1

the country and from various alumni about the article published ... everyone was calling us, asking us to do something ... Many people were asking us what our role was," said SGA President Jared Nokes, who sponsored the motion.

"...While we can't fire anyone, or force a retraction, [this motion would allow it so] we can say that we don't make any financial contributions to The Collegian."

Nokes said the motion is in part a way for The Collegian to be financially independent, and for the SGA to become distant from the paper.

"That money was used to help publish something the SGA doesn't agree with," he said.

Sen. Tristian Brown, who voted against the motion, came to The Collegian office last night, saying he thought the motion was written in an effort to punish The Collegian for printing the highly controversial column.

"I found it horribly insulting," said Brown. "Jared explained that the newspaper wanted to be financially independent for some time ... I felt it was about freedom of speech, and we [the Senators who voted against the motion] are ready to fight for everyone to say what they want."

Sen. Michael Sheridan seconded Nokes' motion, but said that the column had nothing to do with his support.

"Of course Gonzalez had the right to write the article and The Collegian had the right to sponsor it ... The fact that you guys [The Collegian] chose to run the article, I don't have a say in that," he said.

Sheridan said he supported the motion for fiscal reasons, saying he believes that if Collegian leadership wants to be financially independent, they should be.

Other senators in the Public Policy and Relations Committee either refused to comment last night, or were unavailable.

Jason Bissonnette, a former high-ranking SGA official, said last night that the motion "goes against the parts of Title VII [of the SGA By-Laws] that protect our media organizations from being harmed by what they print."

"This is clearly not compliant with the by-laws of the SGA, and probably won't hold up in the long run as it is currently written," Bissonnette said.

The motion will need a simple majority (more than half the Senate) vote to pass. The SGA meeting will begin at 7 p.m. on Wednesday in room 163 of the Campus Center.

Write for news

The International Award Winning
Commencement Ball 2004
Friday, May 21, 2004
7:00 pm to 12:30 am, Student Union Complex
A Night to Remember!
ALUMNI

HermanMiller AUTHORIZED DEALER
MHEC Vendor
LEXINGTON GROUP
Buyers & Sellers of Quality New & Used Office Furniture
♦ Design & Space Planning ♦ Installations
♦ Furniture Rental & Leasing ♦ Panel Systems
New & Remanufactured
Eric Bascom 413.746.3064
eric@lexingtongroupinc.com
380 Union St., West Springfield,MA 01089

This summer, change your life: change your mind.
We will change your mind this summer with new course selections, expanded degree programs and accredited online learning.
Use this coupon to waive the registration fee for 6 or more credits!*
Only at UMass Amherst. Only this summer.
Call 413-545-2414 for a free course catalog, or visit us online at www.umass.edu/summer
UMassAmherst Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.
*Savings Code: E8T148. May be applied when registering for six or more credits at one time during Summer Session I or II, 2004. Coupon has a singular value of $35.00; multiple coupons may not be applied to one registration. Must be presented at the time of registration and may not be applied retroactively. Not redeemable in cash or credit. Not valid if credit load falls below six. Other limitations apply.

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
CINCO DE MAYO
Corona 12 pk bottles $10.99 + dep
Dos Equis 12 pk bottles $9.99 + dep
Tecate 12 pk bottles $4.99 + dep
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MAY 4, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Time to rethink plans in Iraq

The news that some U.S. soldiers have engaged in sexual, physical and psychological abuse against some Iraqi prisoners at a detention facility in Iraq is another black eye against the U.S.-led war in Iraq.

President Bush has rightfully ordered an investigation "to make sure appropriate action is being taken against those responsible for these shameful and appalling acts," said White House spokesman Scott McClennan.

The sad part, however, is that officials within the department of defense have known about the abuse cases since at least January, according to Rep. Jeff Bingaman, D-N.M.

It's difficult to choose which is more shameful: that these acts have been going on for months or that no action had been taken until just recently?

It's unclear what action will be used against anyone found guilty on abuses, but punishment should be served. Abuses like these may have been commonplace under former Iraqi leader Saddam Hussein. Undoing these heinous crimes is one of the reasons America overthrew the tyrant. Continuing these actions defeat one of the main reasons we went over there and debunks the notion that we are setting the Iraqi people free.

This latest event begs the question: Does the Pentagon even know what's going on overseas? The answer is probably not.

The unveiling of these despicable acts also raises the following question: Was the Bush administration ready to rebuild Iraq after the fall of Hussein? Again, the answer obviously seems to be no. They were unprepared for the countless deaths that would lie ahead. They would be unprepared for the chaos that would erupt overseas even when Hussein would be overthrown and captured.

Even if Washington is aware of the chaos in Iraq, the Bush administration obviously had no idea things would turn out this way.

The war in Iraq should serve as a lesson. Unleashing swift military action against any country without long-term plans is foolish. Overthrowing Hussein was obviously one of the main missions when America went overseas. But rebuilding Iraq was most certainly one of the goals. That has been a difficult goal to achieve.

The Bush administration must reevaluate their plans for rebuilding Iraq. Death tolls continue to rise and each passing week there seems to be another sorrowful tale that comes out of Iraq. The people of Iraq have suffered long enough and the people of America deserve a better job from the current Bush administration.

Although this news presents America in a negative way, it should not cast a pall against the majority of troops who are fighting bravely overseas. We are there to help, after all, and most troops are doing an excellent job of upholding the highest principles in serving their country.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Lest we forget

Yousef Munayyer

Graphic pictures scare us: photos of people without limbs, dead children, crying mothers over the bodies of the war dead. We do not want to be bothered by any of this. Whether they are pictures of caskets covered in American flags or photos of POWs being tortured, we find no place for them in the mainstream media.

ABC's news program, "Nightline," devoted the entire half hour to reading the names of the war dead. Many people criticized the station for having political motives, saying that such a reaction was unnecessary. About two weeks ago, photos from a mortuary in Delaware were released showing caskets covered in American flags. They almost seemed as if they were in a warehouse being shipped around like cargo. These pictures were also not received well.

Soldiers are affected traumatically by killing the enemy. Secretary of Defense Donald Rumsfeld has an answer to this — he proposes advancing combat to the point where you will never have to see your enemy when you destroy them. That way we won't have to watch them die. The problem, though, is just because we don't have to watch the enemy die, it doesn't mean the enemy is any less dead.

All of this points to a very scary direction. We, as a society, are working to take any and all humanity out of war. We don't want to see the dead; we don't want to think about the dead. We just want to destroy and not have to be bothered by the consequences. We put up statues of the war dead and make memorials. We look at the lists upon lists of names but we never realize how horrific it really is.

Thucydides the Athenian wrote 2,500 years ago, in what may still be to this day the best and most relevant work on war, about the reservations of the Spartan king before engaging in war with the Athenians. "Spartans," said King Archidamus addressing his people, "in the course of my life

We put up statues of the war dead and make memorials. We look at the lists upon lists of names but we never realize how horrific it really is.

I have taken part in many wars, and I see among you people of the same age as I am. They and I have had experience, and so are not likely to share your enthusiasm for war, nor think that war is a good thing or a safe thing."

The words from the pages of the Peloponnesian War speak with uncanny relevance today. Our society is forgetting the horrors of war and therefore will be more inclined to accept war as a reasonable action. We have to realize that a declaration of war is an admission of total failure.

We keep hearing these names and looking at pictures of young men and women who do not exist on this earth anymore, yet it doesn't seem to move us. In fact it bothers us because we do not want to think about it. We call them heroes and that seems to make it all right, but like a friend told me last week, our nation could use a lot more living veterans and a lot less dead heroes.

Our society is disconnected from the military and our military is also disconnected from our society. The civilian will never understand war through violent video games. What is scarier though is that modern warfare has begun to move in the virtual direction. We don't want to see the enemy; we don't want to put boots on the ground, and of course "we don't do body counts." The military is very much being disconnected from the enemy. The days of the western front's man-to-man ditch confrontations are over. Today, buttons are pressed to lock onto boxed shaped targets from thousands of feet into the night sky.

Some might say that this is perfectly fine. In fact many, particularly those in the defense department who advocate this numb warfare, see this to be the way of the future. This is a great problem. As the Spartan king told his people so many years ago, once you come to know what war is about and the horrors that come with it, you will be less inclined to use it.

Our society today is becoming disconnected with the horrors of war, and war is becoming more acceptable. It has become acceptable to the point where a few individuals lied to the nation and got the congress to give up their constitutional right so to pursue their own interests. Now, blinded by the "patriotism" of war's hero-making industry, we neglect to realize that war in its nature is failure. We have become blinded to the point where we embrace failure.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

The problem with Yankees fans

Michelle Rivera

The Yankees and Red Sox rivalry can't get any better than last season, but if it does, I'm ready. I've been an avid Red Sox fanatic all my life, and for the past several years I have never missed a Red Sox game. If I am at work or driving in a car, I keep the radio tuned in to the game. If the game is on an alternative channel that our lovely UMass dormitories don't provide, I'll watch it online with the aid of ESPN's GameCast. There is nothing I won't do to support the Red Sox.

Now I've heard some pretty hideous and unoriginal insults coming from Yankees fans directed toward the Red Sox nation. Maybe idiocy rubs off from George Steinbrenner because their rants are so boring and lackluster. I understand why the Red Sox nation, along with other fans of the game that are in no affiliation with the Red Sox, hate the "Evil Empire." Unlike the rest of the teams in the major leagues, the Yankees don't respectably build their team from scratch. George Steinbrenner handpicks the best players in baseball and collectively buys them. He has noticeably made a hobby out of this. This is why I absolutely despise the Yankees franchise and their methodology of building a great team. Not only do I hate their franchise, but I also hate their fans. Here are some reasons why I find their fans particularly moronic.

First of all, "it's only May." If I hear one more Yankees fan say that to me or anyone else, I'll vomit. Is a Red Sox fan allowed to be happy that their team had a great weekend, especially over the Yankees? Yes, it is only May. We all know that. But nevertheless my team still swept your team in their house. Well I guess that's a good thing though, to constantly be reminded by a Yankees fan that it's only May. It shows that they're jealous, and it shows they feel embarrassed that their once dominant team is currently off to a weak start even with a $180 million payroll.

"Red Sox suck." Okay, so I see why the Red Sox fans chant, "Yankees suck." They buy their players to buy success. So yes, the Yankees suck. What reason would a Yankees fan have to hate the Red Sox? We haven't won a World Series championship since 1918. Give us a break. That's like beating a dead camel with a stick. You just don't do that; Yankees fans have no class.

The curse of the Great Bambino. Will this ever die down? There is no curse. Come up with something new. Now I'll quote Pedro Martinez: "I don't believe in rivalries. I don't believe in curses. Wake up the damn Bambino. Maybe I'll drill him in the ass." Enough said.

The Yankees caps. If I see one more person with a Yankees cap on this campus, I'll scream. It's UMass! What right do you have parading around in a Yankees cap? Even if you are a fan, show some respect and don't wear one around here. I wouldn't wear a Boston Red Sox hat in New York. What annoys me even more is that blonde girl you'll see wearing a Yankees cap. You know, the kind of girl you can bet a million dollars on that she can't name two Yankees players, excluding Jeter. As if we haven't seen enough Yankees caps with former New York mayor, Rudolph Guliani. Is that super-glued to his bald head? Enough with the Police Department and Fire Department Yankees cap already. That thing is just ugly.

Michelle Rivera is a UMass student.

My last words: UMass rules!

Rachel Smith

So here it is, my last column.

There are so many things I will take away from UMass. The professors were fantastic; I've made a handful of good friends, and I had probably the greatest job on earth: helping other veteran's transition into college.

It greatly saddens me that the University has recently gotten much bad publicity for one student's off-color rant, while the countless academic and cultural achievements here go unnoticed. So, rather than kvetch about all the things I haven't had a chance to complain about this year, I'll use my last column to tell you everything I love about UMass.

I would like to impress upon all Jewish students that you should check out Hillel at least once. Services at Hillel have probably been the single most influential set of experiences at UMass for me. The folks at Hillel have re-awakened my interest in the Torah, and not only do I actually do the weekly readings, I'm also learning Hebrew in my spare time. I was afraid that services would be the stuffy, uncomfortable experience at my family's synagogue, but instead they're fun and sincere.

My experiences with extra-curricular activities have at least been highly instructional even when they haven't been fun. I had this bi-weekly column, which was a great honor. I don't want to know what I think half the time so it's always an ego boost when people come up to me and agree with something I wrote.

My work with the University Democrats has been difficult at times, but overall, I couldn't have hoped to hang out with a better group of people. I would like to impress upon all students that it really doesn't take much to get involved in local and even national politics, but it does require you showing up for a meeting or two with the University Democrats or at least talking to an internship advisor, like Professor La Raja in the political science department.

Let's talk academics. I have been overwhelmed with support from the faculty in the legal studies, political science, history, and Japanese departments. The professors haven't just been teachers, but have been mentors, meeting with me and exchanging emails outside of the classroom and generally going way above and beyond what I expected from a large university like UMass. I honestly haven't had one class here that I wish I hadn't taken, and there isn't one faculty member that I wouldn't recommend to other students. Maybe I've just been lucky, but it isn't chance that there are so many outstanding professors at the University.

Since I'm a senior, and it's too late for the Collegian to fire me, I'm going to thank a few people. First of all, I wouldn't have had the drive to accomplish as much as I did if I wasn't doing it for my son, Garrett Smith. Without my parents, Martin and Abby Solomon, driving me crazy I wouldn't be the person I am today.

I owe a debt of gratitude to my best friend, Ana Galvan, who has always believed in me even when I didn't believe in myself. Ana has been a touchstone for me and a pillar of strength. Oh yeah, and she saved my life.

Thanks to my partner, Ken Campbell. I've become a better person and a happier woman. I never thought I'd love a Republican.

I would like to thank every faculty member and advisor individually, but I don't know if I have enough room, so instead I'll just say thanks to the legal studies, political science, Japanese, and history departments for teaching more than I thought was possible in the five semesters I've spent here.

A million thanks to my first roommate, Courtney Marzano. She was actually a normal roommate, which was more than I could have hoped for. Once again, thank you to everybody at Hillel especially Ben, Daniel and Sarah.

I owe a debt of gratitude to newlyweds Jim and Becca Smith. Thanks to Mrs. and Mr. Smith, Jim's mother and father — thank you for putting up with me during winter break and orientation.

Also, thanks (in no particular order) to Bray, Yances, Gurtler, Bell, Shelton, Sgt. Rolle, Sgt. Maj. Orto, Staff Sgt. Rhodes and Donelle, Sergeant First Class Eagleman, Sgt. Adams, AFKN, the 55th Combat Camera Company, the 65th PAOC and everybody who's out there risking their lives while I'm finishing my degree. I wouldn't be here if it wasn't for you; I'm sorry I'm not by your side. Eyes of the Army, huah!

Whether you want it or not, I'm dedicating my columns from this year to those who served in the Pentagon on Sept. 11, those who have been called to active duty and those who have served overseas since the tragedies of that day. I'll never forget the smell of sulfur that permeated Pentagon City two days after the attacks, and I'll always be grateful that so many people I care about survived. No matter what, I'll never forget.

And to all the Lionel Mandrakes of the world (see the movie "Dr. Strangelove" if you don't get the reference), don't stop making sense.

Rachel Smith is a Collegian columnist.

LETTER FROM THE EDITORS

DEAR READERS

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian continually strives to provide its readers with the most important thing it has to give: truthful and original accounts of our world at large. An error occurred last week to compromise that goal.

It has been brought to The Collegian's attention that the story titled "Calvin to welcome jazz great Marsalis," a preview for the April 27 Northampton concert by Wynton Marsalis, was largely plagiarized from the Web site jazzatlincolncenter.org.

The story was written by a Collegian staff member and published in The Collegian's print and online versions on Tuesday, April 27. The author admits to "taking facts" from the Web site. As a result, the two stories share seven sentences with identical phrasing.

This is both inexcusable and regrettable. As a result, the writer has been barred from any further writing at The Collegian, and the online edition of the story has been deleted to illustrate this point and prompt all writers and editors to understand the seriousness of capitalizing on other's work.

The Collegian is committed to doing its best to uphold its social duty in offering accurate and original stories.

Sincerely,

Jennifer Eastwood
Editor in Chief

Dan Lamothe
Managing Editor

Glen Straub
Arts & Living Editor

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com

413-545-3699

Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MAY 4, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The sounds of Spring

Jurassic 5 highlight of Sunday's low quality show at Mullins ...

By Monique Jemmott
Collegian Staff

If students that went to this year's Spring Concert seemed disappointed, they had reason to be. The show, which attracted a small crowd, gave those in attendance little to get excited about.

Headlining the concert, produced by University Productions and Concerts, was J Records recording artist Busta Rhymes and throwback underground sensation Jurassic 5. Although both acts may have been crowd-worthy, concerts in large spaces should be reserved for artists who have current projects or cult-like following. This was shown through attendance, which was meager compared to last years sell out.

Playing one set outside of the Mullins Center on a pavilion was one of two opening acts, Natural Dissent, a band whose members are all Amherst natives. Their sounds, although hardcore, and almost scary at times, were comparable to that of Limp Bizkit, but their music held messages of much value. They played the title track off their album, "This Road," which talks about working hard to achieve goals in life. "Red, White, and Blue," was dedicated by the band's front man, Price, to UMass graduate student Rene Gonzalez, who has been in the news recently for a controversial column in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Around 8 p.m. on the inside of the Mullins Center, Jurassic 5 took the stage. Their performance, which was very energetic, and unconventional — the entire group at one point used kazoos as part of the beat for a song — fed the crowd and kept them going throughout the hour-long performance. Their debut single "Quality Control," from the album of the same title, was one of the few times the crowd actually seemed familiar with what was going on.

Spring Concert
UMass
Amherst
May 2

The highlight of the performance, a solo by DJ Nu Mark, who on a beat machine and two turn tables created jazzy, Coltrane-like beats, with hip-hop base lines, reaffirmed to the non-believers that hip-hop may not be dead after all.

"I was surprised by the energy here at UMass," said Marc 7 of J-5 following the group's performance. "You usually don't get much of a response when you're between albums, so this was sort of a surprise."

"We weren't sure what to expect," added Akil, another group member. "But we were happy with what we saw from the crowd."

The intermission between J-5 and Busta Rhymes was filled with two dance performances, one from hip-hop dance group Flava Unit, and the other from break-dancing group Poetry in Motion.

Nearly an hour later, Busta Rhymes and the Flip Mode Squad took the stage. Because Busta is known mainly for his energy, it was no surprise to the crowd, as he and hype man extraordinaire Spliff Star, jubilantly bounced in front of the crowd with Busta's verse off M.O.P.'s "Ante-up Remix." Once Busta and company hit the stage the nostalgic hip-hop vibe was completely erased and the crowd's images of hip-hop returned to the money, cash, hoes personas that has come to dominate the industry today.

From the time he stepped onto the stage it was questionable whether or not Busta really even wanted to be there. After his command for everyone to "shut the f up" so he could check his microphone, he proceeded to insult the crowd continuously, calling them "a bunch of weak motherfers" for not putting their hands up on command. Following this exchange with the crowd, he continued the concert with more featured songs, including the "Make It Clap" remix by Sean Paul, where Spliff Star actually got a chance to rap a verse.

This was followed by another barrage of insults to the crowd by the rapper, including a request for all UMass girls to hit the gym.

"I don't know what's going on out here at UMass," Busta stated, "but ya'll motherfers better get it together."

The rest of the performance was just a run through of songs from all of Busta's past albums including his 1996 debut album "The Coming," from which he performed "Whoo Ha."

The concert ended after taking a trip down Busta memory lane, but we were assured that our favorite rambunctious MC would release a new album this summer.

... while Kweli and Common's concert rocks Amherst College

By Stephanie Fougy
Collegian Correspondent

AMHERST — Hip-hop music has many different genres within its own genre. One of the lesser-known genres, alternative hip-hop, seems to be under-appreciated in comparison to the widely popular southern and Midwest rap movement. But it is clear that, after Saturday night's performance at LeFrak Gymnasium at Amherst College, Talib Kweli and Common Experience are on a mission to bring hip-hop back to its roots.

Talib Kweli/ Common
Amherst College
May 1

The show opened with local group, One's and Two's, performing with their eclectic blend of rock, funk and hip-hop. The first impression of the group is their mix of hard rapping with alternative rock, which is so eccentric that it seems like the group was put together for a "Making the Band 3." But it's because of this that makes their sound captivating and enjoyable. If the group could control the sometimes bizarre outbursts of singing from the lead singer along with controlling his comical jerky movements onstage, the group could be quite successful.

Talib Kweli came out opening with flowing and reflective sophistication but also with confrontational fierceness. Not wanting to be upstaged, Common came out and assisted Talib on a couple of songs from Talib Kweli's former group Black Star, including their hit "Respiration."

The show flowed very well with Talib Kweli and Common both each performing hits of their own. Both performed together fluidly, as if having been in a group for years. Common's mellow, laid back flow, along with his animated movements onstage worked well with Kweli's cerebral, beast-like rhythm. It is almost akin to the music connection of Andre 3000 and Big Boi of OutKast.

Both artists performed their memorable hits. Common performed "Come Close to Me," bringing a shocked female from the audience onstage while he moved toward her. Kweli, performed an Al Green cover, "Good to You," "Move Sumptin," and his popular hit, "Get By." The two DJ's of the show, DJ Chaps and Dummy, had a 10-minute set taking the crowd way back. They demonstrated their impressive skills with tricks including going under each other's legs while mixing the classic song, "It Takes Two."

Talib Kweli and Common continued to energize the audience. The crowd was so wound up that they roared and chanted Kweli and Common's names until the duo came back onstage for a three-song encore. It is obvious that these artists love their fans and genuinely love what they do, which created an incredible show.

COURTESY TALIB-WELL.COM

Talib Kweli performed at Amherst College's LeFrak Gymnasium on Saturday as part of the school's Spring Concert. Also appearing was fellow hip-hopper Common, who has appeared in the area before.

The Push Stars release new album, prepare to take over NoHo

By Emilie Duggan
Collegian Staff

The Push Stars' new album, "Paint the Town," impressed Matchbox Twenty's lead singer, Rob Thomas, so much that he invited them to open for them on their last tour to introduce the Boston band to a legion of new fans.

The trio — Chris Trapper on vocals and guitar, Dan McLoughlin on bass and piano, and Ryan MacMillan on drums — have been together for the better part of a decade, produced four progressively better CD's and have had their songs featured on television shows and in movies like "Malcolm in the Middle" and "There's Something About Mary." And they got their name from the telephone.

The Push Stars
Tonight
Iron Horse
Northampton
$10, $13

"We were offered a gig with the Boston band Morphine," Trapper said in an interview. "It was our first big opening spot and we didn't have an established name. At the same time we got the call for that gig, I'd been paying a gas bill over the phone and one of the options was 'if you want to tell us how broke you are, push star.'"

The name stuck, Trapper said, because they liked the old-time feel of it. It's that old-time feel that moves a lot of their music, and the first single off their new album —"Outside a Dream" — was created around a sound found in simple, 1950's standard rock and roll.

"It was based around a '50's chord progression," Trapper said, pausing to sing the notes. "That's how it started."

Lyrically, "Outside" is a nostalgic look at Trapper's formative years in Buffalo, N.Y. It is about a man — presumably Trapper — approaching his 30th birthday and reminiscing about his not-so-distant past. Lines like, "No second chance was the last thing that you told me/ and I was the fool who agreed," are what attack the listener at the heart. Ultimately, Trapper's search for his ex finds her married, "with a sweet, little child on the way," and he must learn to put her memory away.

"Claire," the first track on the album, takes a look at life on the road and is Trapper's answer to a girlfriend that questions his dedication to her. He makes no vow of faithfulness to Claire, but promises in the refrain that he's "just a shadow 'neath the street lights, who would die for you."

The Push Stars
'Paint the Town'
23rd Street Records

The title track is a mid-tempo look at hanging out with friends and being unconcerned with the worries of the world. Trapper's voice reflects the wistful ache for simpler times with lyrics like, "sipping up the last drop of night that's left/ isn't that the way we paint the town?"

The Push Stars make the kind of music you listen to as you take a long drive through your hometown and think about how far you've come. The lyrics are not especially deep or philosophical, but it is the emotion behind Trapper's words and the strength of the music that makes this album absolutely perfect.

"Paint the Town" is an album about love and life, topics that some would say are overdone and cliché. But, the Push Stars are "romantic guys, compared to most of the guys we know," according to Trapper. Every song on the album reflects that romanticism, but with humor, simplicity and bare-your-soul honesty.

"Most of the songs on this album are meant to get as truthful as we possibly can about different realities of love and romance and relationships," Trapper said.

They have based their career around touring, and they're on the road for a good portion of each year. Their sound and their image is not packaged or dependent on radio. They have gained fans by touring with bands — like Matchbox Twenty — that they have befriended in their years together. Their fan base has grown exponentially because of this, but they remain true to an independent artist kind of life. There are no fancy tour buses, no bodyguards, no huge stage production.

"Those guys were really, really nice guys," Trapper said of their stint with Matchbox Twenty. "They'd let us do autograph signings after our set each night. So, we'd have a row of fans from section A to M, and that was really effective for getting like-minded fans."

Besides Matchbox Twenty, the band recently wrapped up a tour with Canadian Celtic rock band, Great Big Sea. They have also done dates with Train and Third Eye Blind, but they find themselves in the middle of a headlining club-tour now, promoting their new album.

"We're dedicated to getting this record heard because we're all really proud of it," Trapper said. "We found backing for ourselves, had no label, no anything. And that little record took us on tour into hockey arenas with Matchbox Twenty because Rob Thomas just loved it."

They have reason to be proud. This album, dubbed "the little record that could" by Trapper, deserves to be heard.

The Push Stars play the Iron Horse, tonight at 8:30 p.m.

Information for this article was taken from www.pushstars.com.

EMILIE DUGGAN/COLLEGIAN

The Push Stars' Chris Trapper will appear with his bandmates tonight in Northampton. The group recently released a new cd, "Paint The Town."

Sept. 11 exhibit at Ground Zero church honors life through art

By Verena Dobnik
Associated Press

NEW YORK — New Yorkers call it The Little Chapel That Stood.

Across the street from the World Trade Center, St. Paul's Chapel survived Sept. 11, 2001, while the twin towers fell.

Within days, the 18th-century church became a sanctuary for ground zero workers, who ate, slept, washed and wept in the chapel where George Washington once prayed. Outside, the church's iron fence was draped in tributes and flowers left by mourners.

St. Paul's opened a permanent exhibit Monday about the aftermath of the terrorist attacks. "The Unwavering Spirit: Hope and Healing at Ground Zero" recalls the rescuers who looked for human remains, the volunteers who nurtured them and the images and words of a world that grieved a shattered city.

GREGORY BULL/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Across the street from the World Trade Center, St. Paul's Chapel survived Sept. 11, 2001, intact, while the twin towers fell. Workers put the finishing touches on a new exhibit dedicated to the attacks, and the outpouring of support from around the globe that resulted, at St. Paul's Chapel in New York on Friday.

"Objects don't speak, but they enable you to remember — and to experience both how scary and horrific it was, and the wonder of people's inner resilience and strength, the sense of community that was created," Edwin Schlossberg, an interactive designer whose firm, ESI Design, worked with the church to create the exhibit, said.

"This is an invitation to participate, to explore."

On display are hundreds of artifacts taken from the fence, including photographs, letters, drawings, flags, and even such exotic tributes as strings of Japanese origami peace cranes. Some can be seen on digital archives, along with interviews of rescuers, survivors and volunteers.

St. Paul's fulfilled an array of human needs, from kitchen to therapist's couch to makeshift sleeping quarters to art gallery to doctor's office.

"What I think of most was all the love freely given to strangers by strangers," volunteer Ann Neary says in one video clip.

Today, banners sent to the chapel hang off the balcony of the pastel-colored, Georgian-style sanctuary. One is a huge American flag with white stripes made from paper cutouts of the hands of children at a public school in Cedar Springs, Mich.

One of the students, 12-year-old Kelly Fitzgerald, came to New York to see the exhibit and stayed with her mother on the 40th floor of a hotel overlooking ground zero.

"This morning, I got up and looked out the window, and I could see where the towers were," the sixth-grader said. "When it first happened, I didn't think it was real."

One photograph in the exhibit shows an exhausted firefighter curling up on a St. Paul's pew, clutching one of the many teddy bears sent by well-wishers. Another photo shows a rescue dog lying in front of the altar with its overwhelmed handler.

A third image shows a man flipping hot dogs from a barbecue set up behind the chapel's ionic columns to grill hot dogs and hamburgers for ground-zero workers.

Summer Break Self Storage
Our Prices are the Lowest in the Area
Greenfield Secure Storage
1135 Bernardston Rd.
413-775-0074

NEW ON TUESDAY:
LAST SAMURAI
CALENDAR GIRLS
CHASING LIBERTY
ELEPHANT
GIRL WITH A PEARL EARRING
PETER PAN
TRIPLETS OF BELLEVILLE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Bruegger's
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

THE WATERFRONT
WEDNESDAYS FEATURING:
$1 Draft
$1 Shooters
$2 Well Drinks
Hosted by DJ KT
Spinning hip-hop and reggae all night long!
No cover charge, 21+ only, 10-2am
FRIDAYS FEATURING:
New! Drink specials every week!
Hosted by: DJ Joe E Mak
No cover charge, 21+ only, 9-2 am
COLLEGE NIGHT
Every Wednesday and Friday Night is College Night!!!
920 Main St.
Lower Rd. to Holyoke
413-532-2292
www.waterfronttavern.com

TO RENT OR OWN!
THE LAST SAMURAI
TOM CRUISE
LAST SAMURAI
Captain VIDEO
2 LOCATIONS TO SERVE YOU
BEHIND BRUEGGER'S - DOWNTOWN AMHERST
19 MONTAGUE ROAD - NORTH AMHERST

Postal Connections
GRAND OPENING
413-253-2311 • 375 COLLEGE ST (RTE 9 @ S.EAST ST)
COME IN BEFORE MAY 8 & ENTER TO WIN A FREE HP SCANJET 3670, PC SCANNER
OPEN M-F 9-6 SAT 9-3
CURRENT SPECIALS!
$.04 B/W COPIES
$.49 COLOR COPIES
$2 OFF UPS OR FEDEX
*NOTARY *FAX *CUSTOM PACKING
PASSPORT PHOTOS *LAMINATING
STUDENTS! ASK ABOUT OUR STUDENT MOVING PACKAGE & MAIL BOX RENTALS!
WWW.POSTALCONNECTIONS.COM/165/

Kiss A Senior Goodbye
Let your Senior friends know you will miss them!
Give them a card and a champagne glass filled with Hershey® Kisses to say Goodbye!
Only $6.00 each or 2 for $10.00
Stop by the STARS table on the Campus Center Concourse or visit www.UMassAlumni.com/students for more information on how to order these great gifts!
STARS can be reached by phone at 577-1390 or by email at stars@stuaf.umass.edu.

Danton faces arraignment today

ST. LOUIS — Blues forward Mike Danton returned to the St. Louis area from California on Monday to face charges in an alleged murder-for-hire plot, a federal marshal said.

Danton arrived by airplane with other prisoners and received no special treatment, said Karen Simons, chief deputy federal marshal for the southern district of Illinois.

He was being held in the Clinton County, Ill. jail, near St. Louis. Danton will be arraigned Tuesday afternoon in an East St. Louis federal court, U.S. Attorney Ronald Tenpas' office said.

Danton and 19-year-old Katie Wolfmeyer were indicted April 22 by a federal grand jury on charges of conspiring to arrange a murder for hire and using a telephone across state lines to arrange it.

Wolfmeyer pleaded innocent Thursday and is in the custody of her parents on $100,000 bond. Her trial is scheduled for July 13.

Danton was arrested April 16 in California, hours after the San Jose Sharks beat the Blues to eliminate them from the NHL playoffs. His attorney, Bob Haar, has said Danton also will plead innocent. A phone call to Haar wasn't returned.

Federal authorities said that Danton, with Wolfmeyer's help, tried to hire a hit man for $10,000 to murder an unidentified acquaintance at Danton's suburban St. Louis apartment. Federal authorities said the men argued April 13 over Danton's "promiscuity and use of alcohol." Danton allegedly feared the acquaintance would talk to Blues management, potentially damaging Danton's career.

Wolfmeyer was accused of passing a phone call from Danton to the would-be hit man, who pretended to go along with the plan, but actually went to Columbia, Ill., police; they in turn alerted the FBI.

Authorities have refused to identify the person Danton allegedly wanted dead. Media reports have maintained the target was Danton's agent, Dave Frost. Frost previously has said he wasn't the target.

On Monday, Frost said he hadn't heard that Danton was back in town. He would only say, "I just want him to get home."

Danton came to the Blues in a June trade from the New Jersey Devils, where he had been twice suspended for disciplinary reasons. This past season he had seven goals, 12 points and 141 penalty minutes, which tied him for most on the team.

—Associated Press

Yzerman sidelined with eye injury

DETROIT — Detroit captain Steve Yzerman is out indefinitely after undergoing 4 and a half-hours of surgery for a scratched cornea and broken bone just below his left eye.

Yzerman is expected to make a full recovery, the Red Wings said in a statement Sunday, adding that he will be unavailable to comment for a week.

Yzerman was hurt when he was hit in the face with a puck during Detroit's 1-0 loss to Calgary in Game 5 on Saturday night. The Red Wings fell behind 1-0 shortly after he was injured, and that was the only goal of the game. Yzerman needed help getting off the ice.

Calgary leads the best-of-seven Western Conference semifinal series 3-2 and can eliminate the top-seeded Red Wings at home Monday night.

Yzerman, who will turn 39 on May 9, experienced blurred vision in his eye, but that improved after the surgery on his orbital bone. He has a franchise-record 70 playoff goals and 181 points in his 20 seasons with the Red Wings. In regular-season games, he's the sixth-leading scorer in NHL history.

"He's been a tremendous leader and now it's up to us to step up," center Kris Draper said after practice Sunday. "Let's go out and play a great game for him because he's done so much for us."

The injury came after a shot by Red Wings defenseman Mathieu Schneider ricocheted off someone in front of the Calgary net and hit Yzerman squarely in the face as he stood to the left of the goal.

Yzerman, who doesn't wear a face shield, immediately dropped to the ice. He kicked his legs in pain as he was sprawled out.

After being down for a couple minutes, with the crowd watching in stunned silence, Yzerman was helped to the dressing room as a towel was held near his left eye. He didn't return to the game.

If Detroit fails to advance against Calgary, Yzerman may have played his last game because of the NHL's looming labor problems. A long lockout could lead to his retirement.

"I plan on playing next year, but the collective bargaining agreement will determine that," Yzerman said just before the playoffs started. "I'm just going to wait and see what happens. I'm prepared to wait a year."

Some thought the 10-time All-Star and 1998 Conn Smythe winner as playoff MVP would choose to end his storied career last year, but he said it wasn't an option he considered.

He missed the first 66 games of the 2002-03 season following a knee surgery — usually reserved for retirees — that involved sawing into the bone below his knee and using a wedge to realign the joint.

Detroit forward Darren McCarty said Sunday that he hopes the game wasn't Yzerman's last.

"He's been the strength and pillar of this hockey club for longer than I've been here. It'll be in the back of our minds," McCarty said.

—Associated Press

'Big Easy' win for Singh

ANDREW CAMOUNIS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Vijay Singh, holds up the winners trophy after winning the rain-delayed HP Classic at English Turn Golf and Country Club in New Orleans, yesterday. Singh made a 25-foot birdie on the 18th hole Monday to win.

By Mary Foster
Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — At the ninth hole, Vijay Singh thought he was out of the HP Classic. At the 18th, he knew the tournament was his for the taking.

Singh made a 25-foot birdie at No. 18 Monday to win the rain-delayed tournament, denying Masters champion Phil Mickelson his second straight victory and Joe Ogilvie his first title.

"I had patience out there," Singh said. "Like the front nine, when nothing was happening. I was just 2-under and everybody was way ahead. So I said, 'Just keep going, there is another nine to go. Just play a solid nine and see what happens.' And the putts started going in, and throwing in an eagle here and there, and all of a sudden everything changed."

Singh overcame a six-shot deficit in the last eight holes, using an eagle at No. 15 to shoot 29 on the back nine for a round of 63.

Ogilvie almost forced a playoff after Singh's putt, but his blast out of the sand trap missed by an inch.

"I shot 32 on the front side, and I felt like I was in control pretty much the whole way around," Ogilvie said. "Then I saw him make an eagle on 15, then a birdie on 16. I don't know how long the putt on 18 was, but what can you say. I mean, that's why he's probably the best player in the world right now. He shot 29 on the back side."

Singh finished at 266 and became the first three-time winner on tour this season, taking $918,000 of the $5.1 million purse. He also won last Monday at the rain-interrupted Houston Open. The victory moved Singh to No. 1 on the money list with $4,267,899.

It was Singh's eighth come-from-behind win. He now has 18 career victories, trailing only Tiger Woods (40), Mickelson (23) and Greg Norman (20) among active players on tour.

Mickelson, playing in his first tournament since winning the Masters, and Ogilvie were a stroke back at 267.

Hidemichi Tanaka was fourth at 269, while Charles Howell and Justin Rose tied for fifth at 271. Three players, including former champion K.J. Choi, were tied at seventh at 272.

Singh had five birdies and an eagle on the back nine. He caught Ogilvie on the treacherous 15th, an island hole with sand traps on two sides.

"I looked up after nine holes, and I said, 'Well, it's over,'" Singh said. "But then I made a birdie on 11, 12 and 13, and all of a sudden I said I've got a chance. That eagle putt on 15 got me close. If I had made a birdie there, I may still not have won. I think that kind of tightened up the guys behind me as well."

Mickelson was tied for second going into the final round. Playing in the same group as Ogilvie, he made birdies at Nos. 15, 16, and 18 for a 4-under 68.

"I look in the middle part of my round, not birdying 11, the par-5, and missing short putts on 13 and 14 took some momentum away," Mickelson said. "Although I was able to make a run near the last four holes, I really needed something there in the middle to get me up to the top of the leader board."

Ogilvie is playing on the PGA Tour for the second time after spending last season on the Nationwide Tour. His best previous finish on the PGA Tour was a tie for fourth at the 2000 Fed Ex Classic.

Ogilvie's putter, which got him the lead earlier in the week, wasn't as dependable on Monday. He missed birdie putts on 14 and 15.

The tie for second place earned Ogilvie $448,800. His biggest previous payday this season was $52,611.

That may have accounted for some of the pressure he felt, Ogilvie said.

"This is my biggest check by $300,000 or $325,000, so you know, it does come into play I think," he said. "You hate to say that as a player. But I was thinking if I make a bogey it's going to cost me 100 grand at one point."

BUCCI
HAIRCUTS always $10.
25 N. Pleasant St. Amherst 256-0735
145 Main St. Northampton 586-0155

The University of Massachusetts Amherst
Office of Jewish Affairs and Student Affairs & Campus Life

REMEMBERING OUR HUMANITY

A forum to discuss the historical, legal and moral significance of last week's vandalism of the Holocaust memorial flag display

Wed, May 5th at 7:00 pm

Campus Center Room 101

University of Massachusetts Amherst

James Young, Professor of English and Judaic Studies; authority on Holocaust memorials, memory and its desecration

Ervin Staub, Professor of Peace Psychology; author of The Psychology of Good and Evil; authority on violence, genocide, and the role of bystanders

Allan Ryan, Jr. Chair, Anti-Defamation League Civil Rights Committee; former director, U.S. Department of Justice, Office of Special Investigations

Campus administrators, clergy, and students will also offer statements of solidarity, in the spirit that an affront to one is an affront to all.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
Now Hiring Advertising Account Executives

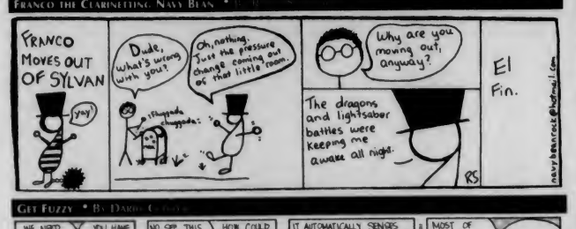
Call 545-3500 or stop by our office, room 113 in the Campus Center Basement, with your resume for more information.

All Majors & Classes Welcome to Apply

2nd Annual Boston Harbor Cruise
Sponsored by the UMass Alumni Club of Greater Boston

Thursday
June 17, 2004
5:30 - 9:00 p.m.

Live Music
Food
Cash Bar



This is a 21+ Event

$25.00 for UMass Amherst Alumni Association Members and their guests
$30.00 for non-Alumni Association Members

To reserve your tickets online visit: www.umassbostonclub.org or call the Office of Alumni Affairs at 800-456-UMASS (8627).

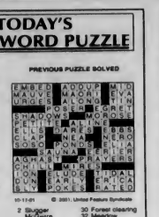
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION

Quote for the Day

"Ever tried. Ever failed. No matter. Try Again. Fail again. Fail better."

-Samuel Beckett

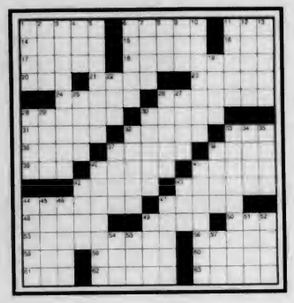
TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE



ACROSS

1 Brownish-yellow
8 Luminous aurora
11 Gun pellets
14 Huge
15 Toward the stern
16 Senator Spike
17 Will
18 Rum source
20 FBI abbr.
21 Father's sister
23 Inter-dent
24 Wander from place to place
26 Finishes
29 Wealthy suburb
30 Rockhound's find
31 Sheila, probably
32 Tire problems
33 Fish feature
36 Pitch
37 Jungle vine
38 The — Ranger
39 Chelsea's pony
40 Fruit drink woman
41 Food gobbler
43 Legend
43 Wooden rods
44 Was in a box
47 Short trip
48 Maids public
49 Piano parts
50 Had dinner
53 Starting point
56 Days of surgery
58 Dine
59 Significant — Coolidge
60 Go inside
61 Slat
62 Jacob and Jill
63 Flower parts

DOWN



1 "Hawkeye" Pierce
2 Slugger McGwire
3 Show on TV
4 Type of trip?
5 Flaws
6 Lacks
7 Neighbor on
8 Fall behind
9 Ghost — chance
10 Maroons
11 Hoops
12 Inexpressible
13 Poet Stephen Vincent
14 Gardener's purchases
19 Film
22 Asian craft?
25 Soldiers in grey
27 Mr. Ed
28 Modicum
29 Roman statesman
29 Press
30 Forest clearing
32 Meadow
33 Advance warning
34 Like the U.N
35 Loch — monster
37 Earring's place
38 Grassy area
40 Huge lama
42 Ogle
43 Type of market
43 Place center
44 Impertinent
45 Mill
46 Spew
47 Yells insults
48 Type of jam?
51 Swarm (with)
52 Mess-ages
54 Ms. Lupino
56 Electronic unit
57 Aardvark morsel

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

10-11 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
April Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"start your own tradition"

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- BBQ Pork Sandwich
- Chicken Pesto Pasta with Walnuts
- Falafel Pocket Sandwich (vegan)

DINNER
- Chicken Parmesan
- Blackened Catfish
- Harvest Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 57
- Low: 38

WEDNESDAY
- High: 67
- Low: 41

THURSDAY
- High: 69
- Low: 48

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR Sheryl Wolnik
PHOTO TECHNICIAN Andy Tamulynas
COPY EDITOR Meghan Healy/ Andrew Merritt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF Russell Silva/ Nikolas P. Markantonatos

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Procrastination isn't just a bad habit; it's a way of life.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Get your work done ahead of time; you'll get to play later.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Garlic bread may be tasty, but your breath won't be.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Go scrub today, go scrub everyday, be comfortable.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Don't spread rumors; it's not nice. Unless they're really juicy, then it's fun.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Stop collecting old stuff. It just takes up space.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Don't skip classes now; you're almost there!

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Snakes hate the smell of kerosene. "MacGyver" will teach you many things.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
It may suck doing your work, but it's better than being a bum.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Try out a new sport, like bowling or curling.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't let the hunger pains get to you, go eat something.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
An uninvited guest will appear in your room.

Classifieds Sponsored by
WIFFLE ROCK
WWW.WIFFLEROCK.COM

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Apartment for Rent

Mill Valley Estates now Renting 2 bedrm $1050/1100. 4 bedrm $2100 available 6/1/04 No last months rent, Free Heat & Hot Water, 2 full baths, AC. On bsline Mon-Fri 10-5pm 253-7377

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Employment

THE RED LION INN
Looking for an awesome summer experience? Join us at The Red Lion Inn for a fun filled Dining season of fine cuisine, warm hospitality & delicious food. On Property Housing available! Interviews are on-going! Call (413) 298-1677

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hiuspromotions.com

Employment

PART-TIME POSITIONS
20+ hours/wk. Set your own schedule. Conduct surveys over the phone at our Hadley location – NO SALES! Evngs/wkends. hlthl/dent/401(k); PVTA accessible. Email mvivian@hcdmarketingma.com or apply in person, First Floor 100 Venture Way, Hadley, MA (888)423-5381

Hardworking individuals living around 91/495 belt South of I-90 for fulltime painter positions. Challenging job requires independence, own car $10-$12 base rate. Call Will @ 617-699-8970

Children's fitness camp holding 33rd summer session on Hampshire College campus June 16-Aug 7. Seeking Counselors & Instructors in Nutrition, Health, Rock climbing, Drama, Dance, Photography, Martial Arts, Aerobics & all sports. Call now for the summer of a lifetime! 413-232-8518 www.campkingsmont.com

Painters wanted greater Springfield area 1-413-695-2645 or 188-277-9787

Employment

Nurse, Nurse assistant for busy Summer camp on Hampshire College campus June 20-Aug 7 413-232-8518 www.campkingsmont.com

Play sports! Have fun! Save Money! Sports Camp in Maine. Coaches needed: Tennis, Basketball, Baseball, Water-sports, Ropes Course, Golf, Archery, and more. Work Outdoors and Have a Great Summer! Call Free: (888) 844-8080 or Apply www.campcedar.com

CANTONESE, JAPANESE, KOREAN, MANDARIN Earn $75
Individuals fluent in Cantonese, Japanese, Korean, and Mandarin needed to participate in a test development activity. Participants will provide responses to the Listening, Reading, Language Structures, Cultural Understanding, Language Acquisition, Speaking, and Writing sections of tests for these languages. Participation is by appointment May 3 – May 14. For more information call Pam Gigliotti, National Evaluation Systems, Inc. 256-0444.

Employment

FRENCH, GERMAN, HEBREW, ITALIAN, LATIN Earn $50
Individuals fluent in French, German, Hebrew, Italian, and Latin needed to participate in a test development activity. Participants will respond to approximately twenty-five multiple-choice questions, and provide responses to Writing and Speaking sections of tests for these languages. Participation is by appointment May 3 – May 14. For more information call Pam Gigliotti, National Evaluation Systems, Inc. 256-0444.

Mowing: Local mowing company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413)584-4746

Painters Wanted in Danvers area want a challenging Job outdoors w/good $$$? Seeking driven, Hardworking Individual w/own car to be a painting crew member. No exp. necessary Call Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Employment

BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Summer teenage bicycling trips. USA, Canada, Europe. Salary plus expense paid. Student Hosteling Program, P.O. Box 419, Conway, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, www.bicycletrips.com.

Lowell Area Driven Leader needed to be crew chief for one of the state's largest exterior home painting companies. Must be hard-working, Independent & have own car. Exp. preferred, but not necessary. Call Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Students wanted for a summer painting job. $400 $600/week. Experience not needed but a plus. All hired will go through a paid training program. Call 888-277-9297 or go to COLLEGE-PRO.COM. Work with friends.

"Painters.Inc" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext. 162

Spa manager East Hampton Part-time nights and weekends $90/shift 413-695-1765

House for Rent

Hadley 5 Bedroom Plus home, 2 baths w/ laundry hookup. Large yard, minutes from UMass. 549-4270

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

Roommate Wanted

Female roommate wanted to share 2-bd apt in Sunderland. $418/mo. Includes heat, hot water, and cable. Available 6/1 or earlier. Call Lauren @ 860-604-6068.

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Summer Sublet

The Boulders 2 bedroom apt. available June 1st-August 15th full option 413-478-8915

Summer Sublet

3 or 4 bedroom (flexible) in Belchertown House- Huge (11 acre) backyard. Fall lease option $1200 (negotiable) Come see! Aaron 978-460-1756

Live downtown this summer! Large 4BR 2 floor apt next to Amherst HS. Washer & dryer included. 5 min. to bus stop & town. ONLY $362.50 per room + utilities. Available 6/1 thru 8/15. Contact Rob: agraff@student.umass.edu/978-808-7322

Want to live downtown this summer? 1 Bedroom, Above Newbury Comics Amherst Only 600/month, June-August. Call 549-9309

2 BR Apt for summer w/option to continue $820 or Best Offer Everything included Contact Angie_T_MV@yahoo.com or Jamie 617-435-0559

2 bedrooms, fully furnished apartment, 1 full bath. Available June 1st- September 1st. Call Rachel Szyman @ 781-264-1512

Travel

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included. Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe $169 one way. Book on-line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

Wanted

Summer House Rental 413-232-8518

Compensation up to $7K+; loving, couples seeking egg donors ASAP! Healthy women, 21+, non-smokers with proven academic achievement. View www.tinytreasuresagency.com for info or e-mail apply @ tinytreasures.com for applications. Toll Free 1-866-357-6868. Refer to ad #UMA-117

EGG DONORS NEEDED: Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6400 or visit www.reproductivechoices.com

Collegian Classifieds: 413-545-3500

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MAY 4, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen eye postseason

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team couldn't have scripted a better way to end the regular season.

Two weeks ago, UMass was 3-9 with a 1-3 conference record. But after going on a three-game winning streak, including Friday's 17-13 home victory over St. Bonaventure, the Minutewomen find themselves with new life, heading to Corning, N.Y. next Saturday for a shot at the Atlantic 10 title.

Fueled by captain Tracy Drown's eight-point performance on five goals and three assists, UMass (6-9, 4-3 A-10) was able to overtake St. Bonaventure (8-5, 3-3 A-10) in the A-10 standings and gain a number three seed going into next weekend's tournament.

At 6-1 in the A-10, Duquesne and Temple enter the A-10's as the one and two seeds, respectively. Despite Friday's loss to Massachusetts, the Bonnies earned a four seed because Saint Joseph's upset George Washington Friday, 14-13 — effectively ending the Colonial's season and linalizing the brackets.

"We knew we had to win to make the tournament and I didn't want this to be the last game I ever played," Drown said. "This has definitely been an up and down season for us but we're coming on at the right time."

Drown has scored five goals in each of UMass' last three contests, a feat which earned the senior attacker the National Player of the Week Honorable Mention Award, from InsideLacrosse .com.

Drown wasted no time getting on the board Friday, scoring a pair of goals and helping UMass to an early 3-0 lead less than five minutes into the game. After St. Bonaventure responded with two goals, Hope Zelinger extended the Massachusetts lead back to three, with one of two consecutive goals coming off an assist from Kerri Connerty.

Zelinger would score an additional goal in the second half to move within six goals of the all-time single season UMass scoring record.

After junior captain Maura McGarrity scored on a free position shot, the Bonnies went on a three-goal run to tie the game at six goals apiece with 11:14 left to play in the half. Connerty and Drown proceeded to capitalize on free position shots, enticing coach Tony Zostant of St. Bonaventure to swap freshman goaltenders. Courtney Hastrich came in for Eileen Gagnon and settled things down in the Bonnie cage, inducing ten minutes of stagnant play, and maintaining the 8-6 Massachusetts advantage at the break.

After gaining possession off the opening draw of the second half, Zelinger found senior attacker Emma Butcher cutting to the net. Thirty-three seconds into the second frame Butcher capitalized on Zelinger's pass, bouncing a shot past Hastrich to tally her first career point, and giving Massachusetts a three-goal advantage. Butcher spent her first three seasons as a goalkeeper and has seen limited play at attack.

"It was very special for me to score and go out on a high note. I will be leaving with a special memory of this field," Butcher said.

After SBU answered 30 seconds later, UMass responded with a four-goal flurry, including three consecutive tallies by sophomore Lindsay Cassell and freshman Brianna Bubeck's 15th of the season.

The Bonnies tallied the next two goals but were answered by a pair of scores from Drown, which gave UMass an insurmountable 15-11 lead with 10 minutes left to play.

The Maroon and White is set to face Temple in the semi-finals Friday, in a rematch of last year's A-10 Championship game. UMass lost to Temple 18-14 at Garber Field on April 18. The Bonnies will square off against Duquesne, a team that UMass defeated April 4 on its home turf, to snap a six-game losing streak.

COLLEGIAN/UMASS-AMHERST RELATIONS

K-Zone

UMass junior Keith Doherty struck out 10 batters in a complete game 5-3 win at URI on Sunday. The Minutemen (14-19, 6-9 A-10) take on Siena today at 3:00 p.m. at Lorden Field.

Crew wins Orange Cup

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

On Wednesday, the Massachusetts women's crew team replaced Syracuse as the 18th ranked team in the country. Three days later, the Minutewomen made the Collegiate Rowing Association Coaches look like prophets, as they edged out the Orangewomen and Villanova at the Orange Plus Cup, in Syracuse, N.Y.

Unlike last week's Atlantic 10 Championships, the tri-meet was not a scored competition. Points were not allotted to individual victors, yet Massachusetts was handed the title despite splitting four races with Syracuse.

The Orangewomen won the varsity four and second varsity eight races, while UMass captured gold in the varsity and novice eights. Since the varsity eight competition is regarded as the most important, Massachusetts managed to relinquish Syracuse of the title, and an Orange Cup trophy that's been at home in Syracuse for the past four years.

The UMass varsity eight bested Syracuse by almost five seconds, finishing with a time of 6:29.7, to Syracuse's 6:34.3. Villanova brought up the rear at 6:41.1.

"We were hoping our varsity eight would win by six to eight seconds, but a strong tailwind made for a very fast race. It's hard to get a large margin when the race is so fast," coach Jim Dietz said.

Danish National Team member Leah Jakobsen led the UMass varsity eight from the six-seat, while Carrie Champigny acted as the crew's coxswain. Joining the duo was Katie O'Brien in the four-seat, Haley McGrath at stroke, Faith Harkins in the one-seat and Catherine Gariepy in the two-seat. UMass varsity swimmer Lauren Cromwell, Lizzy Boyle and Stephanie Hoph rounded out the first varsity eight.

In the varsity fours, UMass tried a new combination of Katie Oberlander, Megan Pittman, Kate Grogan and Ann Roberts. Freshman Lindsay Price, the team's coxswain, guided the upperclassmen to a third-place finish. After an even start, the Orangewomen pulled to victory with a time of 7:39.2, about a boat's length ahead of the Wildcats (7:43.2). Massachusetts finished in 7:54.9.

Massachusetts cruised past Villanova in the novice eights, besting the Wildcats by a time of 7:07.0, to 7:12.1. Syracuse did not bring novice rowers to the regatta.

Katie Freeley swapped seats with Naomi Rudov prior to the second varsity eight competition and powered the Minutewomen to a third-place finish from the seven seat. Syracuse and UMass were neck and neck for most of the race, with SU gaining a one-half length advantage by the 1,000-meter mark. The Minutewomen narrowed the gap to half a boat's length by the race's end, with the Orangewomen finishing in 6:54.4 and UMass in 7:00.5.

Aided by a one-loss season, the Massachusetts crew team has its highest ranking since 1999. UMass' sole defeat came against fourth ranked Brown.

UMass captured its ninth consecutive Atlantic 10 title last weekend and will now look towards the ECAC Championships, May 5-8.

The ECAC Championship will be held in Worcester, Mass., on the same river UMass competed on to start the season in a dual meet versus New Hampshire and Rhode Island, April, 3.

"We'll be sitting on pins for the next two weeks waiting for the NCAA to make its selections," Dietz said. "Right now we are ranked second to Princeton in our region and given a chance I think this team is fast enough to go deep into the tournament."

Thousands gather to honor Tillman

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Before Pat Tillman was hailed as a national hero for leaving the NFL to fight and die in the mountains of Afghanistan, he was a local high school football star with a bright life ahead of him.

Friends, family and other admirers gathered Monday to mourn Tillman in his hometown — to remember a man so moved by the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks that he walked away from a multimillion-dollar contract with the Arizona Cardinals to join the Army.

Tillman, 27, died April 22 in a firefight near the Pakistan border as he was leading his team to help comrades caught in an ambush. The Army gave few details of how Tillman was killed, but said he was fatally shot "while fighting "without regard for his personal safety."

NFL commissioner Paul Tagliabue and Hall of Famer Gene Upshaw, executive director of the players' union, were among those who attended Monday's public memorial at a municipal rose garden here. Police said 2,000 people had gathered before the ceremony began.

"The underlying thing was his courage and selflessness on the athletic field, in his community and now as a soldier," Tagliabue told reporters before the afternoon service.

Last week, the military posthumously promoted Tillman, a member of the Army's elite Ranger unit since 2002, from specialist to corporal. He also was awarded a Purple Heart and Silver Star.

Tillman attended San Jose's Leland High School and was drafted by the Cardinals after starring at Arizona State University. He became the Cardinals' starting safety and broke the franchise record for tackles in 2000.

Though he never publicly offered reasons for his decision to join the Army, several friends have said the terrorist attacks affected him deeply.

Tillman was assigned to A Company, 2nd Battalion, 75th Ranger Regiment, and was based at Fort Lewis, Wash.

His death was one of about 100 U.S. soldiers to have been killed in Afghanistan since the United States invaded in 2001. That made him the first National Football League player killed in combat since Buffalo offensive tackle Bob Kalsu died in the Vietnam War. Nineteen NFL players were killed in World War II.

"I came to pay my respects," said Joel Cascio, a San Jose resident who served two years in the Navy during the mid-1960s. "He put his career aside. That's a courageous thing to do, no matter what walk of life."

—Associated Press

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Cpl. Pat Tillman, center, with brothers Richard, left, and Kevin, are shown in a photo from Pat's wedding, displayed during a public memorial service for Tillman at the San Jose Municipal Rose Garden in San Jose, Calif., yesterday. Tillman, a former professional football player and San Jose native, was killed in action in Afghanistan.

Garnett earns MVP, credits McHale

MINNEAPOLIS — The Kid can be called "MVP," too.

Kevin Garnett of the Minnesota Timberwolves won his first Most Valuable Player award Monday, easily beating two-time winner Tim Duncan and Jermaine O'Neal.

Garnett received 120 of 123 possible first-place votes in balloting by the Pro Basketball Writer's Association for a total of 1,219 points. San Antonio's Duncan got 716 votes, while Indiana's O'Neal had 523.

The Associated Press reported Sunday, citing sources, that Garnett would win the honor.

Garnett led Minnesota to a 58-24 record and the top playoff seed in the Western Conference, averaging 24.2 points and a league-leading 13.9 rebounds.

"The teammates that I have, they made things so simple and they made things to easy at times," Garnett said after receiving the trophy.

Garnett was an overwhelming choice for his first MVP honor.

He joined Larry Bird as the only players to average at least 20 points, 10 rebounds and five assists for five consecutive years.

Garnett credited team vice president Kevin McHale, who played with Bird for the Boston Celtics.

"This is best situation I could ever think of, or dream of," Garnett said. "I had to believe I could get there, because of him and his belief in me."

Minnesota coach Flip Saunders said Monday Garnett has wanted to win the award since the team drafted him out of high school in 1995.

"When he came in the league nine years ago the No. 1 thing he said to myself and [team vice president] Kevin McHale is he wanted to be the best player in the league," Saunders said.

The success of players such as Garnett, nicknamed "The Kid," and Kobe Bryant helped usher in a generation of preps-to-pros players who skipped college.

McHale said he told the skinny kid fresh from Chicago's Farragut Academy to work hard and see what happens.

"That young man turned into a bigger man and a hell of a basketball player," McHale said. "He reminds me of how basketball should be played, with passion, hard work and discipline."

Garnett, in turn, gave some of the credit for his own success to McHale, whose career with the Boston Celtics earned him a spot in the Hall of Fame.

"This is best situation I could ever think of, or dream of," Garnett said. "I had to believe I could get there, because of him and his belief in me."

The Timberwolves host the Sacramento Kings in Game 1 of their Western Conference semi-final series on Tuesday night.

—Associated Press

ANN HEISENFELT/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Minnesota Timberwolves forward Kevin Garnett is all laughs at a press conference in Minnesota yesterday where he was announced as the NBA's Most Valuable Player.

Nature's cures and more at HerbFest 2004

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 6

Siena deals UMass fifth consecutive home loss

SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 133

ALANA light vigil mourns lives lost in war

MARTHA'S PRIDE KNITTEL/COLLEGIAN

Shahzad Saduzai, Binnish Butt, Urfan Saduzai, and Bilal Qayyum participate in the war on terrorism candlelight vigil last night, organized by ALANA.

Amidst the flickering light of the candles they held in their hands, University of Massachusetts students gathered last night in a vigil remembering those who lost their lives in the war on terrorism in Afghanistan and Iraq.

"This vigil is where we can get together and express our sorrow," said Nelson Acosta, director of the Office of ALANA Affairs, which hosted the candlelight vigil.

"We just want to commemorate the people who've been hurt, lost their lives, and have an opportunity to talk about it in a non-political matter."

The group of about 20 students shared their feelings on the war, and the toll on human lives.

"It's not only soldiers, but civilians," said Gladys Franco, a senior political science major. "We're here to mourn those who are losing their lives for what is not necessarily a good cause."

While some felt sorrow, other also felt anxiety about what consequences the fighting will cause in the long run.

"To me, any war is not something I want," said Pavel Payano, a sophomore psychology and Spanish major. "I am scared that we are making more enemies out of this. I hope in the end that this all works out."

Despite the fear and sorrow that some students expressed concerning the loss of life in the war on terrorism, others said they found comfort and hope in the company of their fellow students.

"This vigil brings me strength," said Binnish Butt, a senior communications and English major. "I, as a Muslim woman, wear a veil on my head and everywhere I go, I am representing my religion. This vigil gives me hope that people are accepting, that there are Americans who are with me."

-Matthew Consolini

Alpha Phi Omega hosts 'Fill-A-Bus'

By Michelle Rivera
Collegian Staff

A donated Pioneer Valley Transit Authority bus will be stationed on the University of Massachusetts campus today and tomorrow, collecting an assortment of donations from students, staff and faculty for the 11th annual "Fill-A-Bus" event.

"Fill-A-Bus" is part of a University-wide effort to completely fill a transit bus with non-perishable food items, new toys, clothing, household and other non-food items such as toiletries and paper products.

"Typically, this is a fall event — around Thanksgiving — but this year we are hosting it in the spring to see if we can collect more donations now as students prepare to move home for the summer," said Jennifer A. Donovan, events and office coordinator.

In recent years, the event brought in as much as 500 pounds of collected food donations — a figure that coordinators of the event hope to surpass.

"We are hoping that this year will be more successful as we are collecting at a time when many students will want to lighten their load and hopefully donate these extra items to this worthy event," said Donovan.

Alpha Phi Omega, a fraternity that is part of the Kappa Omicron chapter at UMass, is helping to host the event and will staff the bus during the week.

Besides the bus, students can help by organizing to collect donations in dorms, within Registered Student Organizations, fraternities, sororities and other various sites around campus.

All collected donations will be delivered to the Amherst Survival Center on Thursday, the last day for donations. The Amherst Survival Center provides clothing, food and hot meals to needy families and individuals free of charge. Volunteers will be needed to help transport the donations to the center. According to Donovan, depending on the success of the event and the number of people who are helping to unload, it volenteer time should only take about an hour. Interested students should call 545-2015 for detailed information.

The PVTA bus will be stationed outside of the Student Union today from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. and the same time tomorrow at the Southwest Horseshoe in order to collect more donations.

"Fill-A-Bus" is sponsored by the UMass Office of Community Service Learning at Commonwealth College. Each year, the UMass Office of Community Service Learning at Commonwealth College sponsors community service fairs, one-day service events, the annual "Fill-A-Bus" event and the Chancellor's Community Service Awards.

Maura Murray's mom fears her daughter was a victim of kidnapping

By Elizabeth Joyce-Brandt
Collegian Correspondent

The mother of a University of Massachusetts nursing student still missing after nearly three months suspects foul play in the disappearance of her daughter.

Laurie Murray, mother of the missing student, Maura Murray, said she fears that her daughter has been kidnapped.

"Maura was abducted," Murray said. "She is not a runaway, she would not do this to her family."

Maura Murray, a junior and Hanson native, drove to New Hampshire on Feb. 9, after telling her teachers she would be gone for a week due to a death in the family. While driving east along Route 112 in Haverhill, N.H., Murray failed to make a sharp left hand curve near The Weathered Barn, which resulted in a single-car accident. A passerby, Butch Atwood, stopped to see if she needed him to call the police. Atwood told police that Murray refused.

According to police, Murray disappeared before they arrived. They found her car locked with her clothing inside. Her cell phone and credit cards have not been used since her disappearance.

"My thinking is that when she had her car accident up in Haverhill, she was walking up the road and she took a ride, she had to have... the [police] dog stopped in the middle of the road with her scent," said Murray. "She had to get into someone's vehicle. There were no footprints on either side of the road. She got into a vehicle, with the wrong person. You know, she could've been suffering from a head injury, her windshield was broken... she could've had trauma, amnesia."

Although police say they have no evidence of foul play, they have not ruled it out. "Anything's possible," said Sgt. Thomas Yorke of the Troop F Barracks in Twin Mountain, N.H. Yorke said he believes that Murray had some type of plan.

"We are dealing with facts. She packed up her room ... she obviously had something on her mind," he said. "Maybe she went to visit someone and that got interrupted." Yorke also said there is some possibility that Murray may not want to be found.

"She may have just gone out on her own. She's 21; she can be her own person," Yorke said. "She may not want to be found, we'll respect that. We just want to know so we can put people at ease."

Police are currently following up on tips that they have received.

"[There are] different things that detectives are working on, though nothing is earth-shattering," Yorke said. "Just miscellaneous tips, things like 'I saw her the next day.'"

The search has been focused in the New Hampshire area. A helicopter search found nothing last week. Another ground search will be conducted sometime this week with help from area fire departments and Fish and Game officials. Vermont authorities are aware of Murray's disappearance and her close friends have contacted Canadian authorities, according to Murray.

"Considering there is a very limited force up there [in New Hampshire], they are doing the best they can," Murray said. "There are only three or four of them [officers] to cover a large area, so I can't say that they are [doing enough to find Maura]."

When questioned, Murray denied

See MURRAY on page 3

Rumsfeld denounces Iraqi prisoner abuse

KEVIN WOLF/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Gen. George Casey, the vice chief of the Army briefs reporters at the Pentagon in Washington, about the investigation of abuse of Iraqi prisoners by U.S. soldiers, yesterday.

By Robert Burns
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld yesterday condemned the abuse of Iraqi prisoners by U.S. soldiers as "totally unacceptable and un-American" and said the Defense Department would move vigorously to bring those responsible to justice.

"Any who engaged in such action let down their comrades who serve honorably each day and they let down their country," Rumsfeld told a Pentagon news conference.

He also said investigations were being opened to determine whether abuses occurred in other prisons and prison camps run by the U.S. military.

Asked about how what occurred at Abu Ghraib prison near Baghdad would affect the U.S. image around the world, Rumsfeld said it was "clearly... unhelpful in a fundamental way. It's harmful.

"It is, we hope, an isolated case," he added.

Earlier, lawmakers emerged from a closed-door briefing with Pentagon officials and said similar abuses — though "small in number" — may also have occurred at other Iraqi facilities and in Afghanistan.

"There were some incidents in Afghanistan," said Sen. John Warner, chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee. "We did not get the full details but were left with the impression that they were relatively isolated and certainly small in number."

15-year-old Palestinian indicted for recruiting suicide bombers

LEFTERIS PITARAKIS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Would-be suicide bomber Palestinian youth Hussam Abdo stares at journalists following his arrest at the Hawara checkpoint near Nablus on March 24, 2004.

By Ravi Nessman
Associated Press

JERUSALEM (AP) — An Israeli military court yesterday indicted a 15-year-old Palestinian boy on charges of recruiting teenagers to become suicide bombers — the first time such charges have been leveled at a Palestinian youth.

The court said Nasser Awartani recruited a 16-year-old who blew himself up at a military checkpoint and another teen who was caught with a bomb strapped to his body. Awartani was the key contact between youths in the West Bank city of Nablus and two militant groups, the court said.

Palestinian militant groups, especially around Nablus, have been trying to attract youths to attack Israelis, in the belief they are more likely to evade security checks. Some Palestinian intellectuals and educators have criticized the practice of enlisting young bombers.

Israel's military court in the northern West Bank charged Awartani with 12 counts, including attempted murder and membership in a militant group. Although hundreds of Israelis have been killed in suicide attacks, none of the Israeli deaths were attributed to Awartani in the indictment.

The court said Awartani oversaw a recruitment network for the Al Aqsa Martyrs' Brigades and the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, ferrying potential bombers to initial meetings with militants and helping them get ready for attacks.

He took the bombers to get haircuts before attacks, preparing for martyrdom and the afterlife, and helped them travel from place to place undetected, the indictment said.

Awartani was also accused of involvement in a highly publicized incident, in which Hussam Abdo, 16, was caught at a checkpoint outside Nablus wearing a suicide bomb vest. Soldiers forced Abdo to remove his shirt and cut off the bomb, an incident broadcast around the world.

The court also charged Awartani with recruiting Sabih Abu Saud — at 16 the youngest suicide bomber in 3 1/2 years of violence — who wounded one Israeli soldier when he blew himself up in November.

Awartani's mother, Ihlas, said her son spent all his free time at home and could not be guilty. "They want to blame someone, so they have chosen my son," she said.

In violence Tuesday, an Israeli attack helicopter fired a missile at a group of armed Palestinians in the Khan Younis refugee camp in Gaza, killing a 23-year-old militant and a 16-year-old civilian and wounding 22 other people, residents and doctors said. Witnesses said gunmen fired two missiles at Israeli tanks in the camp before the helicopter struck.

In the Gaza village of Beit Lahiya, four children were wounded by Israeli gunfire while throwing stones at cars traveling to a nearby Jewish settlement, Palestinian officials said.

The army also said that twice within an hour, two Palestinians approached the security fence around the settlement of Nissanit. Each time, the Palestinian refused to stop, the soldiers shot at his legs and he fled.

In the West Bank, a 9-year-old boy was killed and two 11-year-old boys were injured when a flare they were playing with exploded, Palestinian security and hospital officials said. The flare was apparently left by an Israeli patrol.

Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon had proposed unilaterally withdrawing from Gaza and the 21 settlements there, but his Likud Party rejected the plan in a nonbinding referendum Sunday.

Sharon has said he would modify the plan, which also included pulling out of four West Bank settlements, and submit it to the Cabinet and parliament for approval.

A senior government official said Tuesday that Sharon was considering a scaled-back withdrawal, evacuating only three settlements in Gaza and two in the West Bank.

Justice Minister Tommy Lapid, leader of the moderate Shinui Party, threatened to pull out of the government if Sharon does not present the Cabinet with a plan similar to the original.

"I understand that the prime minister will continue the policy that he started, maybe with some changes ... but there will be no change from his main line. If he does so, we will continue to support him," Lapid told Channel 10 television.

A poll published Tuesday in the Yediot Ahronot daily said that if Sharon had presented his plan to the general public instead of his party, it would have passed 62 percent to 32 percent. The paper did not give a margin of error.

Sharon proposed his "disengagement plan" as the best way to obtain security for Israel in the absence of peace moves, as well as defusing international pressure for greater concessions.

The United States consulted Tuesday in New York with the United Nations, the European Union and Russia — the so-called Quartet of Mideast mediators — to find a way to restart peace efforts.

University of Massachusetts

FINAL INSTRUCTION

For Seniors About The Commencement Ceremony

134th Commencement Ceremony Sunday, May 23, 2004

PRE-COMMENCEMENT GENERAL INFORMATION

• There is no Commencement rehearsal.

• Tickets are not required and there is no limit on the number of guests you may invite. There is no reserved seating. The stadium is uncovered. The ceremony will be held at the stadium, rain or shine. Tell your guests your entry and exit gate numbers.

• UNIVERSITY REGULATIONS PROHIBIT THE POSSESSION OR USE OF ALCOHOL AT THE STADIUM. NO GLASS OR METAL CONTAINERS WILL BE ALLOWED IN THE ASSEMBLY AREA OR ON THE FIELD. THIS POLICY WILL BE ENFORCED FOR BOTH GRADUATES AND GUESTS.

• Photographs of graduates will be taken in the assembly area by Chappell Images. Proofs will be mailed to your permanent address. You decide to purchase or not – no obligation.

• The Index (the yearbook) may be ordered by calling 545-0848.

• Commencement Videotapes and DVDs may be ordered by calling 545-1283. Also, there will be a booth at the stadium where they may be ordered.

• The University Club on campus will be open to the public and will serve gourmet meals from 12 noon to 4 p.m. It accepts MasterCard, Visa, Diner's Club, and Carte Blanche. Please call 545-2551 to make reservations as soon as possible.

• Disability Services: For mobility or hearing impaired guests, please call 545-0892. For guests who are unable to walk long distances, please park in Lot 25 near the Mullins Center. Shuttle buses will provide transit to and from the stadium. Wheel chairs are also accommodated.

• Diplomas will be mailed after the grades have been received, recorded and processed by the Registrar's Office, and the diplomas have been engrossed, which is usually in early September. Inquiries may be made to the Registrar's Office, 545-6296.

COMMENCEMENT MORNING TIME SCHEDULE:

• 9:00-9:15 a.m.: Students should arrive at the assembly area, Yellow Lot #11, no later than 9:15 a.m., carrying their cap and gown.

• 9:15 a.m.: George Parks, Director of the Minuteman Marching Band, and Commencement Marshals will help graduates line up by school/college and escort the Processional onto the field.

• 9:40-10:00 a.m.: Chappell Images photographs individual graduates.

• 10:00 a.m.: Faculty Processional begins. Faculty greet Degree Candidates.

• 10:05 a.m.: Processional of Degree Candidates (See entrance gates).

• 10:25 a.m.: Platform Party Processional

• 11:45 a.m.: Recessional begins. Graduates exit through north gates #1 and #2.

• 12:00 noon: Ceremony ends - Alumni status begins!

WHAT TO DO AND WHERE TO GO WHEN YOU GET TO THE STADIUM.

• Go directly to the Graduate Assembly Area in Yellow Lot #11 north of the football stadium. Do not enter through the main gates of the stadium. Marshals will greet you and Professor George Parks will organize the Student Processional.

• Look for the signs for your college/school. If you are unsure of the school or college of your major, see "Gate Entrances by Major."

• Commencement Photographs will be taken as the procession of degree candidates gets underway. Graduates will be photographed in their regalia. Proofs of these photographs will be mailed to graduates along with order forms and information for those wishing to purchase prints.

CONGRATULATIONS FROM THE ENTIRE UNIVERSITY COMMUNITY

REMEMBER -

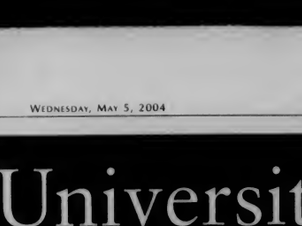
University regulations prohibit the possession or use of alcohol at the stadium.

No glass or metal containers will be allowed in the assembly area on the field.

This policy will be enforced.

COMMENCEMENT DAY GENERAL INFORMATION:

• Routes to campus/travel assistance: Please advise your guests to plan ahead to allow extra travel time to campus. Traffic is usually very heavy on major routes and in the greater Amherst area as early as 8:00 a.m., and delays are frequently encountered. (Commencements at Amherst College and Mount Holyoke are the same day at 10:00 a.m.) Encourage your guests to arrive by 9:00 a.m., park in the upper campus lots, and take the shuttle buses to the stadium. Seating at the stadium is "first-come-first-served."



• Parking and shuttle services: Police officers will direct you to designated parking lots. Beginning at 8:00 a.m., free shuttle buses will circle campus every 5-10 minutes, taking you and your guests to the stadium, and returning you to the lot after the ceremony.

• Snacks and souvenirs: Coffee, soft drinks, bottled water, donuts, bagels, and pastries are available at the refreshment stands on both sides of the stadium. Fresh-cut roses, bouquets of flowers, and balloons will be for sale inside and outside the stadium. Sweatshirts, T-shirts, baseball caps, seat cushions, diploma frames, teddy bears, banners, disposable cameras, and film are available at the tent on the east side. In addition, the University Store in the Campus Center will be open from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. with a complete supply of UMass clothing, gifts, and other merchandise.

• Food Services: Following Commencement, a food court adjacent to the stadium will offer a variety of food for sale, including sandwiches, sushi rolls, burgers, salads, and hot and cold beverages. Reservations are not required.

• Meeting arrangements: Arrange a meeting place for after the ceremony with family members prior to the start of the ceremony, such as at one of the four food kiosks. You will exit through the north gates #1 and #2.

• Post-Commencement Reception: After the ceremony, graduates and guests are invited to the Chancellor's Reception. It will be held under the large white tent in the southeast corner of the stadium near the entry gates. Punch and cookies will be served. This will be an opportunity to meet, greet, and take a family photograph with the Chancellor. Faculty are also invited to attend.

Gate Entrances By Major

Major	Gate	Major	Gate
Accounting (BSOM)	2	Italian Studies (HBA)	1
Afro-American Studies (HBA)	4	Landscape Architecture (NRE)	4
Animal Science (NRE)	4	Legal Studies (NBA)	1
Anthropology (SBA)	3	Linguistics & Anthropology (HBA)	3
Apparel Marketing (NRE)	1	Linguistics & Chinese (HBA)	3
Art Design (HBA)	3	Linguistics & Spanish (HBA)	3
Art History (HBA)	3	Economics (SBA)	3
Biochemistry (NSM)	3	Economics & Mathematics (SBA)	3
Biology (CNS)	3	Economics & Political Economy (SBA)	3
Biology (NSM)	3	Education (SOE)	1
Building Materials & Wood Technology (NRE)	4	Electrical Engineering (ECS)	2
Business Economics (SBA)	1	Elementary Education (SOE)	1
Chemical Engineering (ECS)	2	Engineering (ECS)	2
Chemistry (NSM)	3	English (HBA)	3
Civil Engineering (ECS)	2	Environmental Conservation (NRE)	4
Communication (SBA)	1	Environmental Design (NRE)	4
Communication Disorders (PHHS)	1	Exercise Science (PHHS)	1
Computer Engineering (ECS)	2	Film Studies (HBA)	3
Computer Science (NSM)	3	Finance (SBA)	1
Criminal Justice (SBA)	3	Food Science (NRE)	4
Dance (HBA)	3	French (HBA)	3
Early Childhood Education (SOE)	1	Geography (SBA)	3
Economics (SBA)	3	Geology (NSM)	3
Electrical Engineering (ECS)	2	German (HBA)	3
English (HBA)	3	Health Education (SOE)	1
Environmental Conservation (NRE)	4	History (HBA)	3
Environmental Design (NRE)	4	Hospitality & Tourism Management (SBA)	1
Exercise Science (PHHS)	1	Industrial Engineering (ECS)	2
Film Studies (HBA)	3	Interdepartmental Studies (SBA)	3
Finance (SBA)	1	Interdepartmental Studies (HBA)	3
Food Science (NRE)	4	Interdepartmental Studies (NSM)	3
French (HBA)	3	Interdepartmental Studies (SOE)	1
Geography (SBA)	3	Interdepartmental Studies (NRE)	4
Geology (NSM)	3	Interdepartmental Studies (PHHS)	1
German (HBA)	3	Journalism (HBA)	3
Health Education (SOE)	1	Kinesiology (PHHS)	1
History (HBA)	3	Landscape Architecture (NRE)	4
Hospitality & Tourism Management (SBA)	1	Legal Studies (SBA)	1
Industrial Engineering (ECS)	2	Linguistics & Anthropology (HBA)	3
Interdepartmental Studies (SBA)	3	Linguistics & Chinese (HBA)	3
Interdepartmental Studies (HBA)	3	Linguistics & Spanish (HBA)	3
Interdepartmental Studies (NSM)	3	Economics (SBA)	3
Interdepartmental Studies (SOE)	1	Economics & Mathematics (SBA)	3
Interdepartmental Studies (NRE)	4	Economics & Political Economy (SBA)	3
Interdepartmental Studies (PHHS)	1	Education (SOE)	1
Journalism (HBA)	3	Electrical Engineering (ECS)	2
Kinesiology (PHHS)	1	Elementary Education (SOE)	1
Landscape Architecture (NRE)	4	Engineering (ECS)	2
Legal Studies (SBA)	1	English (HBA)	3
Linguistics & Anthropology (HBA)	3	Environmental Conservation (NRE)	4
Linguistics & Chinese (HBA)	3	Environmental Design (NRE)	4
Linguistics & Spanish (HBA)	3	Exercise Science (PHHS)	1
Economics (SBA)	3	Film Studies (HBA)	3
Economics & Mathematics (SBA)	3	Finance (SBA)	1
Economics & Political Economy (SBA)	3	Food Science (NRE)	4
Education (SOE)	1	French (HBA)	3
Electrical Engineering (ECS)	2	Geography (SBA)	3
Elementary Education (SOE)	1	Geology (NSM)	3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

53 diplomats stand against Bush on Mideast policy

According to The Guardian, a newspaper out of Britain, 53 former U.S. diplomats have united to blast president George W. Bush and his administration's Mideast policy.

Good for them.

Bush recently got into the fray last month when he endorsed a plan alongside Israel prime minister Ariel Sharon to partially pull settlements out of the contested Gaza Strip. Sharon suffered a blow this week when his Lakud party voted against the proposal.

Now, Bush is getting his.

The 53 diplomats have served in a variety of locales including India, Egypt, Jerusalem and Qatar. For the most part the signees are former ambassadors and consuls. According to The Guardian two former Bush administration employees, John Brady Kiesling, who resigned in protest over the Iraq War, and Greg Thielmann, an intelligence analyst who accused the administration of distorting the facts over Iraq, also signed the letter.

"Your meeting with Sharon followed a series of intensive negotiating sessions between Israelis and Americans, but which left out Palestinians," reads the broadside, the likes of which has not been seen from U.S. diplomats against the administration since the Vietnam war.

The Guardian article adds that it is particularly unusual for U.S. diplomats to come out against the longtime alliance between the United States and Israel.

The letter reminds Bush that the road map to peace can only be followed with both Palestinian leadership and Israeli leadership involved. Bush's meeting with Sharon and masquerade in the White House Rose Garden announcing the duo's plan for peace failed all previous accords and attempts for an end to violence.

Instead, it has effectively incensed the Middle East, raising the anti-American sentiment even further. Already suffering a blow from pictures released last week of abused Iraqi prisoners of war, the diplomats' letter strikes again at the faults of Bush's foreign policy.

"In fact, you and Prime Minister Sharon consistently have excluded Palestinians from peace negotiations," the letter adds.

In no uncertain terms this letter calls out Bush's consistent record of pandering to its ally in Israel excluding Palestinian leaders. All of the charges are written as just that, charges, but that U.S. diplomats would have cause to write this letter should wave a red flag to Bush that something needs to change.

Taking into consideration that many of the diplomats are from countries in the Middle East and Southern Asia and only one appears to be from inside Israel, the accusations summate into a bipartisan conclusion: "By closing the door to negotiations with Palestinians and the possibility of a Palestinian state, you have proved that the United States is not an even-handed peace partner.

"You have placed U.S. diplomats, civilians and military doing their jobs overseas in an untenable and even dangerous position."

Bush should consider weighing the odds more carefully when entering into politically-motivated agreements. With peace as the goal, in Israel, Palestine and even Iraq, it would behoove the president to concentrate on all sides of a very, very strained and hostile diplomatic arena.

Unsigned Editorials are the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Collegian Editorial Board.

Genocide victims deserve respect

Dan O'Brien

I grew up in the small town of Watertown. Despite being nestled in-between the boarders of the large cities of Cambridge and Boston, the town is not very well-known to those who live outside the area. But there is something unique about my town that warrants inspection. Many people from my town have taught me a valuable lesson: What it means to fight for one's beliefs. It's a lesson from history that should be explained more thoroughly in the history books than it is, if it is ever explained at all.

The story comes not from my hometown, but from the people who live there, particularly my Armenian friends and neighbors. Armenians make up approximately 20 percent of the town's population. This is a considerable percentage because they represent less than one percent of the American population. Watertown has the second largest community of Armenians in the country. This community, located in Watertown's east end, is known to locals as "Little Armenia." It is surrounded by five Armenian churches and an array of Armenian specialty shops and restaurants.

Last month I returned home to Watertown for a weekend visit. Without fail, I saw the giant billboard on Mount Auburn Street that goes up around this time every year. The billboard said, "Never Forget," in bold print, followed by, "The Armenian Genocide: April 24, 1915." This year, April 24, 2004 was the 89th anniversary of the Armenian Genocide. For me being a non-Armenian, seeing these billboards brought me back to my high school days when a handful of Armenian classmates would stay home from school. I remember speaking with some of these students, who complained that this event was never taught in their high school history classes. A valid point, considering that the public school system would deny the third largest ethnic group in town a chance for their children to learn about a significant part of their personal history.

The genocide began in 1915 in the Ottoman Empire — present-day republic of Turkey — with the eradication of the Christian Armenians and lasted until 1918. The Ottoman Empire, which was ruled by Muslim Turks, carried out the genocide due to a policy of eliminating the Christian minority. Countless numbers of people were savagely brutalized and women were often raped. By 1922, the Armenians had been eradicated from their historic homeland.

The genocide only began after the massacres of 1894 to 1896 under Sultan Abdul-Hamid II, nineteen years before the actual genocide would be committed by the Turkish government. The sultan was alarmed by increasing activity in a number of Armenian political groups, many of which spoke out for civil rights and autonomy. Historians guess that the massacres killed somewhere between 100,000 and 300,000 people. The sultan began the systematic brutalization as a way to undermine Armenian nationalism.

The night of April 24, 1915 was when the Armenian Genocide truly began to unfold: the Turkish government arrested over 200 Armenian community leaders in Constantinople and hundreds more were apprehended soon after. They were all sent to prison; most were executed. These acts occurred under the cover of a news blackout; a time when there was no communication between the Eastern nations and the Western world because of the ongoing World War I. The news blackout had been happening for some time before April 24, 1915, and as a result many Armenians had died at the hands of the Turks before foreign nations had time to react. It is estimated that between 1915 and 1923, over 1.5 million Armenians died in the genocide.

Today, several nations including Russia, Argentina, France, and Greece have formally recognized the Armenian Genocide. However the United States has never officially recognized the events as a genocide

Today, several nations including Russia, Argentina, France and Greece have formally recognized the Armenian Genocide. However, the United States has never officially recognized the events as a genocide. President Bush in 2001 called it, "the forced exile and annihilation of approximately 1.5 million Armenians," which has angered many Armenian-American interest groups, including the lobby group the Armenian National Committee. ANC is asking 100 members of Congress to sign a letter to the President asking for the use of the word "genocide." And rightly so. I can't imagine how a descendant of a genocide victim would react if President Bush were to walk up to that person and say, "You're loved one was murdered at the hands of a government that was systematically arresting, torturing, and murdering people solely due to their racial background. But, it wasn't a genocide."

Despite not being fully recognized by our government or in our history text books, there have been several memorials built to honor the victims of the genocide. These memorials are located around the world, including several In the Boston area. Meanwhile, as the United States fails to give those who suffered through one of the worst human atrocities their proper respect, we join the ranks of countries such as Turkey, which denies all knowledge of the genocide as a matter of policy. The Turks blame the deaths as part of WWI warfare. What is even worse is that Turkey dismisses the atrocities as mere allegations. The country's leaders have also allegedly obstructed efforts for acknowledgment.

If you ever happen to be driving to Boston on the Mass Pike, take a detour. Get off the highway at exit 17, be sure to drive up Mount Auburn St. and read the billboards that say "Never Forget." The message isn't asking you to donate your money or join some sort of animal rights campaign or anything like that. The people of Watertown and Armenians around the world are simply asking our government to, at the very least, give their ancestors the proper respect they deserve. It is imperative to remember atrocities such as these in order to not repeat mistakes of the past.

Information from the Armenian Museum of America (Watertown, MA), the Armenian National Institute (www.armenian-genocide.org) and AFMB-AM (Loi Angeles) was used in this column.

Dan O'Brien is a Collegian Columnist.

Coach's decision appalling

Matthew Reid

I've been playing sports since I was very young. I only once played basketball, when I was in middle school, and I joined a YMCA league. I'll be the first to admit that I was not overly talented. In fact, I don't remember even scoring a single point. I quickly accepted the fact that while I was skilled at certain sports, basketball was not one of them.

At the end of the season, I attended an awards banquet for my league. My coach gave me a certificate that said "Dennis Rodman Award" on it. While Dennis Rodman is far from the type of person I would want to emulate, I took the award as a compliment, since Rodman was such a good basketball player. Being taller than your average individual, I was fairly successful at rebounding (as was Rodman, of course) so I was satisfied with my award and felt that it was fitting for me. I realized that every player on the team received an award, but I was still happy to have a shiny certificate saying that I had completed the season.

Unfortunately, not everyone is as lucky as I was. However, the situation that one middle-schooler from New Jersey is currently dealing with goes far beyond anything I have ever heard of.

Kids have a hard enough time being accepted during those awkward middle school years, and the absolute last thing they need is for insensitive, unprofessional "adults" making their lives additionally complicated.

Last month, at a banquet for a middle school basketball team in Pleasantville, N.J., a player (whose name has not been released) received an award that took everyone by surprise. Prior to the banquet, the coach informed the player (I'll call him Scott for the purposes of this column) that he would be receiving an award. So Scott watched as all of his teammates receive trophies and awards throughout the night. When it came time to receive his own award, the coach of the team said, "[this next kid] begged to get in the game, and all he did was whine." The award, which was a silver figure of a baby mounted on a pedestal, had the boys name on it, which was not even spelled correctly. It was engraved "The Crybaby Award."

To me, someone who played a lot of sports growing up, I simply cannot comprehend how this could have taken place. The boy was so shaken that he stayed home from school the following Monday. Can you blame him? Kids have a hard enough time being accepted during those awkward middle school years, and the absolute last thing they need is for insensitive, unprofessional "adults" making their lives additionally complicated.

I don't exactly know what to say about the so-called coach. Of course, he should be fired for what he did. I'd even go as far as saying that he should never be allowed to coach or teach at a school ever again. But simply stripping him of his post does not seem to be enough. Somehow, it seems to be letting him off easy. Clearly, there is some reason why a grown man in an educational environment, a supposed role-model, would do such a terrible thing to a young boy. Perhaps the coach was picked on as a child. Perhaps he was told he was a crybaby when he was younger. Whatever the reason, the man certainly has issues that he needs to deal with. I just hope that he gets the help he needs before he completely demolishes the spirit of another young boy.

As for Scott, I can't offer much in the way of advice, either. I remember once, when I was younger, a teacher ridiculed me for spelling a word wrong on a spelling test. It wasn't just any word, it was my own name (I was young, so don't ask.) The major difference, however, was that the teacher didn't ridicule me in front of the whole class; it was simply in a one-on-one situation. And she was laughing the whole time, so I knew she was just joking around. Even still, a part of me was a little self-conscious about the whole thing. So I can only imagine the embarrassment that must have resulted after the "crybaby award" was given out. There is just no excuse for it, and nothing can really be said to console Scott. The only real words of advice would be to dismiss what was said, considering the coach proved that he cannot be taken seriously and that his awards have little value. Dismissing the award, however, is easier said than done.

Edwin Coyle, superintendent of the Atlantic County school district where Scott is enrolled, has said that the coach should be punished for what he did.

"I was very upset and dismayed that our coaches would take an opportunity to belittle or lessen the self-esteem of our athletes," Coyle said.

I don't know what punishment would be enough to make up for the terribly unsettling incident. I'm just glad that there are some coaches out there, such as the ones who gave me the Dennis Rodman award way back when, who still realize that when dealing with young athletes (and non-athletes as well), there are more important things than popularity and success. Sometimes, a simple bit of encouragement will suffice. Clearly, Scott's coach could have used more of it when he was a boy.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this story.

Matthew Reid is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

NON-VIOLENCE THE ANSWER TO HOBART PROBLEM

Once again, the police have suppressed the "Hobart Hoedown" with overwhelming force. What lessons for next year's Hoedown can we take away from the events of this past weekend?

I think we should look to the example of firmness and persistence shown by the Cannabis Reform Coalition. One week ago, they managed, yet again, to put on the annual Extravaganja marijuana festival on the Amherst Town Common. For years this event has been plagued by harassment, threats, and attempts at intimidation by town officials. Yet the CRC has always stood firm, and never given up.

Firmness does not mean street fighting. Violence is the specialty of the police. Short of another Lexington and Concord, it is impossible to beat them in that realm. The only way to defeat them is in the political arena. That means getting involved in Amherst governmental affairs, sticking with it as long as it takes, and really playing "hardball" with the "Powers That Be."

If done peacefully, progress is possible. In fact, non-violence, firmness, and persistence are the only answer to this problem. It may take years, but someday the "Hobart Hoedown" will return to its roots as an enjoyable, music-filled, mellow block party, while Town Manager Del Castilho and Police Chief Sherpa will be relegated to the ash heap of history.

Terry Franklin
Amherst

Keeping a right To free speech

After reading your article entitled "SGA Questions Collegian Independency," I became infuriated. It is hard for me to believe that the Student Government Association is even considering demanding back money from the Collegian. If the motion is passed, the SGA is undermining one of the fundamental principles of journalism – Freedom of the Press. Perhaps this is another political match between Jared Nokes and the rest of the SGA. I was not the least bit surprised to see that Mr. Nokes supported a motion against the Collegian, especially after the Collegian announced its support for our president-elect Eddie Bustamante.

What I see is a game being played on unfair grounds. Although the majority of people, including myself, disagree with what Rene Gonzalez wrote, we cannot allow this right to publish to be taken away. Yes, this article gained national attention, but we cannot allow this to detract from the freedom the Collegian deserves. Could you imagine the national attention given to UMass if funding was cut to the Collegian? "UMass votes to cut funding over Gonzalez Column."

If the SGA makes the demand for the money from the Collegian, they make a statement about a government's role in media; if they cannot have control over what is published, then they will do everything in their power to make sure that they do. The editors of the Collegian, not the SGA, decide what should and should not be published. There is no question here — freedom of the press is a right for the Collegian and all media outlets.

On Wednesday, vote to continue funding for the Collegian, and to keep this freedom alive.

Matt O'Rourke
UMass student

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

In order to be considered for publication, all submissions must include the writer's name, address, and telephone number or e-mail address. Letters should be no longer than 450 words in length and addressed as 'Letters to the Editor.' Commentaries should be no more than 750 words and addressed as 'Editorial/Opinion.' Submissions may be edited for clarity and condensed. You may write, fax, or e-mail your submissions to:

E-mail: editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax: 413-545-3699

Mail: Letters to the Editor 113 Campus Center Amherst, MA 01003

Spring Concert: Headliner a 'bust'-a

Kim Nguyen

This year's Spring Concert disappointment highlighted how music artists can be either positive audience-minded performers or negative abusers of their star status. I would have called Sunday night an awesome experience... if I had left the Mullins Center after the opening acts. "Busta Rhymes," the supposed highlighted headliner of the show, ended up turning what was an exciting dance party with Jurassic 5 and various MCs and DJs into a negative experience for me and my other female friends who did not come to hear this person speak about how girls who smoke weed are "airheads" and how all these "potbellied bitches need to get on the treadmill."

After staring in shock at his drawn out degrading comments, we didn't find much motivation to move to any of his beats, and eventually, my friends and I left early in the set. But the fact that we didn't just walk out right after his whole spew of insults to women and at the crowd in general was a point of the night that continues to bother me.

Busta's abusive presence brings up the question: how much power do we give stars in the entertainment industry? This question includes public entertainers like film and TV actors as well.

At the beginning of his set, Busta Rhymes declared that he could bounce anytime since he already got his paycheck for the show. It's insulting that a music icon like Busta Rhymes can say something like that to justify his freedom to spout out any garbage and slack on his performance. (Maybe the organizers of the Spring Concert should consider not only looking for more positive acts like 15, but also not paying them all up front). But it's also insulting to us audience members when we let him do that, when we stay, because we let his stardom excuse his offenses.

Today's common reality: there are plenty of popular rappers/hip-hop artists who put out "bling-bling" lyrics, and while it may bother some of us, we still continue to listen and buy their stuff, because we think it's still hot stuff to dance to. This is an especially sensitive issue for women listeners, because we're the ones often being put out as bodies to sell the image of sex and subordination. Really, though, can one listen to these lyrics without stopping to consider how all the projected negative images may affect us later?

It's a conflict of entertainment and personal politics. It's one I haven't resolved; all I know is that I'm not apt to excuse it all. I dance to lots of music, but for some particularly offensive songs I will leave the floor. I won't listen to some artists, and now that includes Busta Rhymes. Also, I have started getting into what's been labeled "conscious/positive hip-hop" and have been discovering all sorts of exciting artists that haven't really hit the mainstream but show how not all hip hop is driven by a negative/misogynistic/bling-bling culture.

All the reviews I've read about Busta being a charismatic presence on the stage can be chucked into the garbage. Maybe he wasn't used to a smaller crowd that wasn't familiar with all his stuff, but when you're a music performer, I believe you're supposed to love sharing your music and performing when you've got an event to be at. Busta's been talked about as a great innovative, edgy rapper, but if he wants to keep some of his fans, then maybe he should have followed the advice of one of the girls in the audience: "shut up, I just want to hear your music." This is kind of a shame to say, because the night before, I saw Talib Kweli and Common play at Amherst College, and I liked hearing them talk to the audience about politics and doing some spoken word in their encore.

But Busta Rhymes talking about getting girls to hotel rooms when he couldn't even perform onstage didn't win him any fans. And if turning off hundreds or so people from his music and personality wasn't enough, Busta may have to also face the power of the consumer, as a friend of mine said, "I am never going to buy an album of his again."

I realize this column has gotten into several issues, so let me just say that I want to emphasize three points. One: people should get offended, should get angry when there's reason to, no matter what the status of the offender. Two: the music out there is not limited to the mainstream (i.e. hip-hop has amazing voices that aren't as negative as some of the mainstream like Mos Def, Social Deviantz, Common, Encore, Talib Kweli, Jurassic Five). And three: keep this in mind, that what you choose to hear and buy is a political choice.

Kim Nguyen is a UMass student.

Concert etiquette 101

Adrienne Bossi

After attending the annual Spring Concert Sunday with Busta Rhymes and Jurassic 5, I have decided that many of the students and performers need a crash course in concert etiquette.

First of all, the number one concert faux pas is to wear the band's T-shirt to the show. Clearly you like the band if you have put in the effort to get to their concert. Why must people advertise the obvious? I don't see why a person needs to wear a special shirt if they really support the band. Am I supposed to believe they are the biggest fans ever because they have the shirt on? Unless you're on the "Price is Right," there is no need to advertise your love for the people on stage that you obviously support by simply being there.

Secondly, while I believe everyone has the right to enjoy a concert how they please, it's utterly annoying to have people obstructing the view of the stage while they simply stand in place. If they are dancing, I can understand it, although it remains annoying to have to peek between the waving arms of dancing hippie girls flowing with flower power during Jurassic 5.

Furthermore, I can't ignore the drunken concert-goers lack of etiquette despite the endless amusement they provide by dancing during music-less portions of the show. What I don't appreciate is the lack of bathroom etiquette among drunken concert-goers. I like to hope that most college students have graduated from potty training and been practicing proper bathroom techniques for upwards of two decades. Yet, it seems these basic lessons of human functioning are completely disregarded the minute alcohol enters the blood stream.

To the girl complaining on the cell phone as she sat on the floor of the handicapped stall with her tooth-floss red thong poorly covering her exposed behind, what were you thinking? Why would anyone, ever, under any circumstances, sit on the floor of a public restroom stall? I can think of a million better ways and places to make a phone call. People wear shower shoes into dorm bathrooms, why would anyone voluntarily have tile-to-tush contact on a public restroom floor?

To the girls that don't shut and lock their stall doors, nobody wants to walk in on you. Is it that hard to lock the door? Unless you want to be seen by everyone that walks into the restroom, there is no need for an unlocked door.

Furthermore, I've always wondered why the paper towel dispenser must get destroyed at every concert. Is it easier to rip apart the dispenser and spew its contents all over the room trying to rip free a towel than it is to just push the lever twice and tear? Also, last time I checked, 50 gallon trash barrels were huge. There is no need for used paper towels to be everywhere around the barrel. If you don't have the coordination to place a small piece of garbage inside a two-foot diameter hole, than perhaps it's time for you to sober up. Trade the Poland Spring bottle full of Bicardi Limon and Sprite, pull up your pants, get off the bathroom floor and drink some actual Poland Spring. (For those concert-goers that aren't novice drinkers, disregard all of this. Thanks for keeping it real.)

Concerts are a beautiful thing, but certain rules of etiquette need to be followed. It's a total mood killer and "ew factor" when concert goes and performers alike break these rules.

It wasn't just those attending the show who put a damper on this year's Spring Concert. The performers certainly had some work to do. It's hard to be a time-filler, but it's even harder to be an audience member struggling through an hour with an annoying time-filler before the main act. While the dancers were awesome, the DJ was not. If you are going to play music, then do just that, and play music. Nobody wants to hear you sing. You were hired as a DJ, not a singer. Nobody wants to hear the audience sing, either. We're at a concert to hear music sung by real performers, not a chorus of drunken college students slurring half forgotten lyrics.

To Busta Rhymes, the best entrance isn't always one where you shoush the audience and complain about your microphone levels. Yes, we do want you to sound the best as you can, but have some professionalism.

Also, it's not always in good taste to make fun of the audience you've been hired to entertain. Calling female audience members fat and advising them to get on a treadmill certainly isn't going to inspire more people to acknowledge your incessant pleas to throw their "mother f—ing hands In the air." Why you gotta hate, Busta?

You can learn from the same lessons aimed at the DJ, Mr. Rhymes. Don't stop your songs. Nobody wants to hear you talk, or complain, or poke fun at our student body, and if we want to throw our "mother f—ing" hands up, we will. Stop talking about it and do what you were hired for, sing your music. Like the DJ time filler, we don't want to hear each other sing your chorus lines, and don't get angry when we don't know all the lyrics. Sorry Busta, I don't mean to be a jerk, but, while we still enjoy your beats, half the hits you were playing went top 50 when most of us were in junior high.

Concerts are a beautiful thing, but certain rules of etiquette need to be followed. It's a total mood killer and "ew factor" when concert-goers and performers alike break these rules. Music is a wonderful thing. Let's not destroy its beautiful ability to unite all walks of people with drunken stupidity, arrogance, or naivety. While we can't control the poor behavior of the people on stage, we should embrace these unique unifying concert situations and do our part by leaving the band t-shirts at home, sitting when nothing is going on, and learning how to handle our alcohol.

Adrienne Bossi is a Collegian columist.

Hobart's temporary prison

Stephen Bene

As a resident of the Hobart apartments I was a first-hand witness of the "preventative measures" taken by the Amherst Police Department on Saturday, May 1. I awoke on that beautiful day to find a sea of Amherst police officers patrolling Hobart Lane. Feeling hungry, I walked down my stairs to get something to eat. Looking out the window of my kitchen, while grabbing a box of cereal, I saw two men walking by in my backyard. The word SECURITY was written in big bold capital yellow letters against their black T-shirts, matching perfectly with their black and yellow hats. That's cute, I thought to myself.

It was the weekend of the infamous "Hobart Hoedown." A great deal was mentioned in regards to how the APD was going to do whatever possible to prevent the same outcome that resulted last year, when riots broke out shortly before midnight during the first Saturday of May, which caused an exclusive amount of damage. Nevertheless, I never would have imagined that APD would have taken this strict of a route.

It was like we were all criminals and we all of a sudden were subjected to rules and regulations that we never before encountered. For that one day Hobart was on lockdown and it was absolutely ridiculuous.

No one, without a permit was allowed to even enter Hobart's parking lot. It was blocked off by the security guards. Later that day one of my friends tried to drop me off and they made me get out of his car and walk to my apartment. They would not allow him to enter the parking lot even to just drop me off. Later that night, as I was coming home, I began to pull into my parking lot when I saw a truck blocking the entrance. Three security guards all came running to my car with flashlights, blinding me, asking me if I had a permit and to show it to them. We could not go across the street to visit our neighbors. It was like we were all criminals and we all of a sudden were subjected to rules and regulations that we never before encountered. For that one day Hobart was on a lockdown and it was absolutely ridiculous.

Residents of the Hobart apartments did not even discuss any plans for the "Hobart Hoedown" this year. This is my first year living in Hobart, however I found out that last year all the students living in Hobart had a meeting one afternoon to implement plans for the "Hobart Hoedown." We never had a meeting this year. We made no plans. Many of the students who lived in Hobart went home for the weekend, because they wanted no part of the Hoedown. Police officers had made it clear that there would be zero tolerance for a Hoedown this year, to all residents, even prior to the actions that they took last Saturday.

I understand that last years "Hobart Hoedown" was absolutely out of control. I agree with the fact that there was no need for any of that to happen, although I would like to point out that the riots broke out after the police broke up the party on Hobart Lane. I also understand that no one wanted a repeat of last years "Hobart Hoedown," and neither did I, although I feel that the APD is going about it the wrong way.

The problem that I have is that last year was not the first disorderly occurrence of the "Hobart Hoedown." It has been going on for the past decade, progressively getting worse each year. Now all of a sudden everyone wants to do something about it. I feel that the APD invaded our privacy on Saturday. The APD should have let us go about our own business. If a party seemed to be forming that gradually was becoming out of control, the APD should have then intervened. Last year the Amherst police officers waited until midnight to break up the party. I am almost positive that the party started getting out of control much earlier than midnight. Why the ADP waited until midnight to break up the party, when there was a higher percentage of drunken college students, is beyond me. They were just adding fuel to the fire, especially by showing up in riot gear and blocking off the street.

I strongly feel that the Amherst Police Department needs to rethink another plan of action for this situation. We, as current residents of Hobart, should not be punished this severe for what has happened with the past residents of Hobart. It is not our fault that the Amherst police have had trouble in the past controlling events such as the "Hobart Hoedown." Word on the streets is that the APD will be doing the same thing that they did last Saturday this upcoming Saturday as well. I truly hope that this is just a rumor and that as a resident of Hobart I hope to enjoy the last weekend before finals as a free man.

Stephen Bene is a UMass student.

The 413

by Zachary Denver

A travel entry from Europe

Sean McDonough

I'm from Boston, but I really hail from Sterling, just north of Worcester. Not even people from UMass know Sterling, unless of course you live there or next door. With the rapid globalization of McDonalds at every street corner in Berlin and Budapest, it's redundant to say you are from the United States and useless to say Massachusetts. But Boston — that rings a bell. And what do most Europeans know about Boston? The Boston Tea Party. I couldn't help but laugh when a German fellow told me he had taken pictures of the Bay.

I had packed my bags too full, closed my eyes, took out the essentials, pretended they were still in there, opened my eyes, and headed off to the United Kingdom for a semester abroad. Aside from the things I enjoy about Britain —the pints of beer, the pints of Guinness, and the heavy drinking — I do think back on the University of Massachusetts and miss a few things. I mean, who wouldn't miss the after-Wings effects, Club Sidewalk, ignoring the Grapevine Bar, and freshman-laden frat row?

So you know, once I had gotten used to life in Britain; I planned a trip flirting around Europe for my five week Easter holiday. I was scared to death to do anything more than circle places on a map — that was the extent of my planning. I had all these ideas of hostels being full of 17-year-old rackheads, semi-homeless, and casual gays. I had also heard vicious rumors that Italy was full of sunken-eyed children going for change in your pockets.

I dove into these tougher cultural barriers with just half of the "essentials" I brought with me to the United Kingdom. Through this, I found all you really need to travel is the ability to play Dumb-American, and the ability to listen to Canadians talk about Jesus in coffee shops in Amsterdam. There's a balance there, though — chances are you are that Dumb-American, and drown out the annoying Canadian with the appropriate solvents and fumes.

I do think back on UMass and miss a few things. I mean, who wouldn't miss the after-wings effects, Club Sidewalk, ignoring the Grapevine Bar, and fresman-laden frat row?

I was forced to rationalize spending as much time on trains every few days as it would take me to watch the entire Lord of the Rings trilogy. I figured — what better way to se the countryside than in a train running through mountains and over rivers? Seems like a better idea that spending hours in planes and airports, and wishing you could have your very own elvish girlfriend.

So what I'm trying to get at is just a few words of advice from a fellow [U]Massive lectured student. Freshman and sophomores — study abroad. You don't have to go to Europe; there are locations all over the world. It's worth the horrible paperwork. Get some miles under your belt before the "real world" sneaks up on you. Juniors and Seniors — I am going to be a bad influence. Hold off on getting a real job and shitty apartment — get an easy job, save some currency, and do that thing you've been waiting to do — travel, buy a motorcycle, whatever. We're going to be working for over 40 years anyways, and once we're retired, what can we physically handle? Playing Bridge?

Sean M. McDonough is a UMass student.

Attention Collegian staff: End of the year party

Sunday, May 9, Peking Garden, Rt. 9 Hadley 8 p.m. -12 a.m.

Come join us for some good times, food and music

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Paying tribute to the new late-night king

Magic Picture Box

Ryan Aubert

As the shelf life of this column nears its end, homage needs to be paid to one of the greatest talk show hosts on television today. This 6-foot-4 red-haired dorky man who broadcasts from Studio 6A in Rockefeller Center is simply a late-night god. Yes, I'm talking about Conan O'Brien.

"Late Night with Conan O'Brien" is a television staple to many college students and young people. Now in its eleventh year, "Late Night" is more popular than ever, trouncing its weak competition (Craig Kilborn.) But, it wasn't always this way. Conan had it rough for the first few years, garnering few viewers, and being picked up for renewal almost week to week. The early days were awkward, with Conan trying to find his niche in the legendary late-night arena. However, some "Late Night" essential elements were actually founded in these early days, including "In the Year 2000" and "If They Mated." Luckily for us, the NBC executive suits stayed with Conan, and the show found its footing.

"Late Night" today may be better than ever. With former sidekick Andy Richter gone, Conan has triumphed going solo. Conan, now 41 with a newborn daughter and a wife, seems to be genuinely happy. That comes across on screen.

So what makes Conan so hilarious and addictive to watch on the tube? Conan has a razor sharp wit and excellent delivery. He can take the most simple idea or joke and make it the funniest thing ever. An example of this comes from the Christmas season piece, "The World's Fastest Menorah."

No matter who Conan interviews, he always makes it very interesting. Even if the interviewee is really boring, Conan spices things up – jumping on the desk, making faces, cracking on himself – all to make the audience applaud and bustle with laughter. Conan loves attention, and he admits that. He also plays around with the camera, especially during his opening monologue. He may jump around or hide from the camera and then surprise you with a hiss like a cat.

Conan's bits are every bit as funny as he is. "Clutch Cargo" is a personal favorite in which a celebrity or politician's face is projected on a plasma screen with somebody else's mouth doing the talking. Another bit is "State Quarters" in which fake quarters are shown depicting not-so-wonderful traits of each state. "Late Night's" characters are outrageous and funny too, such as "Triumph the Insult Comic Dog", "Little Hitchceno" and "The Masturbating Bear." Everything is not as peachy-keen behind the scenes though. Conan has been itching to make the transition to the coveted 11:35

See CONAN on page 7

Medicinals and more at UMass

Herbal festival shows off the world of herbs

By Cameron J. Woods
Collegian Staff

To most people in these modern times it is just a matter of a trip to the medicine cabinet that provides the solution to any medical malady. Not more than 100 years ago things were very different in regards to medicine, and still are in some sectors of the world. Many people used to and still do rely on the natural world of medicinal plants and herbs to provide the necessary treatments for their illnesses. This week, University of Massachusetts Professor Lyle Craker's, Medicinal Herbs and Spices class provided a glimpse into the vast world of natural medicines and cosmetics.

HerbFest 2004 opened at 11:30 a.m. to a good sized crowed, the Student Union Ballroom remained crammed with herbal enthusiasts and other curious folks right up to closing time at 2:30 p.m.

"This year we had a great variety of projects, ranging from food of various sorts to the proper usage of medicinal herbs for various health problems," explained Craker.

Truer words are hardly ever spoken. After the first few booths of basil infused culinary treats and ginger treats came the first of the cosmetic displays. Senior biology major Tia Coleman, who serves as Craker's teacher assistant as well as a student in the class, had prepared a combination of invigorating skin care products.

"This is really one of the best classes I have ever taken," she said.

Next to Coleman's display was far and away the best culinary treat of the event. Dan Flanagan, a senior environmental science major, had crafted some delectable herb infused homemade ice cream. "It was kind of a challenge to get the mixture just right; too much moisture or to much fiddling with the mix and it would just come out gross," explained Flanagan.

Far off in one of the back corner was a display that could possibly cause viewers to lose their lunch, but was highly informative. In large clear jars filled with various teas floated globular masses that somewhat resembled malformed brains. These herbal atrocities were actual symbiotic bacteria that feed in the nutrients in the tea, called Kombuca. This creepy looking beverage supposedly is part of a miracle treatment, that can alleviate suffering from anything from cancer to menstrual cramps, that is assuming one can bring themselves to drink it.

Filling in the booths between these outstandingly interesting exhibits were numerous displays of teas. There were teas for everything imaginable, easing pregnancy, treating colds and even ones that were good to bathe in. Mixed in amongst the bubbling pots and various other goodies, were a couple of booths that were actually putting Henna tattoos on people, while explaining the cultural significance of the art form.

Robin Malinowski, a University Without Walls student, did her project on a lesser-known version of mint, the chocolate mint. Row after row of nearly sugar free mint-chocolate flavored lollypops covered her table. "It is like nature's version of a Peppermint Paddy," said Malinowski. "It is a great plant because the chocolate flavor is already in there so you do not need tons of sugar when you use it to cook, especially when you're making treats for kinds because it keeps them from getting all worked up on sugar."

Understandingly the word herb has taken on several slang meanings that may have misled some HerbFest visitors. Fortunately even these individuals could find a point of interest at the festival. Freshman Alex Bronschi under his giant poster board, which bore the title of, "Smokable Herbs!" provided a range of all natural alternatives to tobacco, all of which were legal of course.

HerbFest 2004 — Tues. May 4 — Student Union Ballroom — UMass

"I personally like the (Calae) Zastechichi, it is an amazing plant to smoke the chemical nature of it promotes vivid lucid dreams. Supposedly the longer someone uses it the more potent the dreams become," Bronschi said.

The one booth that lacked free samples for legal reasons was an interesting exploration into the history and culture of absinthe by Heather Mojer a junior plant and soils major.

"It has a great history of being the drink of artists and poets, because of this it is still thought of as an artists drink," said Mojer. "The truth is that the chemical compound found in it that is related to the THC, that is found in marijuana, is pretty weak. You would have to drink a dozen glasses or so before its affects were noticeable, and it has too bad of a taste to even drink that much."

Though HerbFest was a mandatory part of the

See HERB on page 7

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Top: Professor Lyle Craker and HerbFest judge Susan Leigh Anthony admire some potted herbs. Bottom: Senior biology major Archana Indira applies henna tatoos as part of her project.

'Mean Girls' isn't mean to audience

Lindsay Lohan matures with stronger role in newest film

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"Mean Girls," written by and co-starring retired "Saturday Night Live" snark Tina Fey, is a deviously spiked punch bowl of a teen comedy. It's an acidic, vinegary variation on the 1995 hit "Clueless," a colorful, less malevolent "Heathers" for the post-Britney teen universe and a chance for Lindsay Lohan to prove that she is most definitely not the red-haired rival to blonde tween queen Hilary Duff.

'Mean Girls' — Directed by Mark Waters — Starring Lindsay Lohan, Rachel McAdams — Paramount — Rated PG-13 — 97 mins. — Grade B+

Fey freely adapted "Mean Girls" from Rosalind Wiseman's sociological treatise "Queen Bees & Wannabes," a sort of pop-psych textbook for parents on how to deal with the complex society of their teenage daughters: the boyfriends, the cliques, the popularity contests and the slander and gossip that comes with the territory of post-pubescence. The sharply astute "Mean Girls" is a kind of comic companion piece to last year's "Thirteen." That film was teen angst as hellish horror show, with the gifted Evan Rachel Wood slipping farther down into the abyss of adolescent torment in increasingly scary ways; this is more of a witty light comedy, playing on teenage backstabbing in nimble and funny ways.

"Confessions of a Teenage Drama Queen" this certainly ain't. Lohan was an insufferable, obnoxious brat in that movie, but here she displays the same winning mix of confidence, vulnerability and comic timing that she did in last summer's fabulous redux of "Freaky Friday." She's a most appealing young actress, acting with moxie, verve and charm and she keeps us sympathetic to her "Mean Girls" character even when she does bad, bad things. If she avoids movies that make her prance around like a cut-rate, junior league Britney-wannabe (like, say, "Drama Queen") than she may have a real career.

See MEAN GIRLS on page 7

COURTESY PARAMOUNT

Lindsay Lohan plays the role of sweet, yet, devious Cady Heron in her new film "Mean Girls."

A Gypsy's life during WWII

By Kurt Kongtong
Collegian Correspondent

When one thinks of the Holocaust, the massacre of nearly 6 million Jewish people comes to mind. In textbooks and novels we learn about how the Jewish people were forced to leave their homes, how they were forced into hard labor and eventually, how they were killed. But in her latest novel, Louise Doughty takes a left turn and gives us the highly ignored experience of the Gypsy people and the part that they played in the horror that was the Holocaust.

'Fires in the Dark' — By Louise Doughty — HarperCollins

It is 1927 and the reader is introduced to the Ruzicka's, a family composed of nomadic coppersmith Gypsies (or The Romany people). The first chapter takes place in an abandoned barn, where Anna Ruzicka is giving birth to the main character of the novel – Emil. It is through this family that we are to see the prejudices and discrimination that Gypsies had to face before, during and after the war.

The main character, Emil, is growing up on the eve of Hitler's reign of terror and in a time when tough restrictions are put upon his people. Beginning with these difficult years, the gypsies are forced to participate in a census that tracks their numbers and their movements, ultimately drawing them into a trap: a mass assignment to an all-gypsy labor camp, where their fate was sealed.

Throughout the novel, readers are taken into Emil's head as he experiences the torment that his family is going through – the registration and census of the Romany people, the taking of all their belongings, and eventually, being sent to the concentration camp where his family endures starvation, humiliation and death. The author tells the story of a young man who experienced the pain of witnessing his family, and those around him, slowly degrade into walking ghosts.

In her novel, Doughty takes readers through Emil's brutal beatings, his intense hunger, and his climactic escape attempt with unrelenting detail. Because of this, and because of the amount of fervor and intensity in which the author describes Emil's physical and emotional pain, readers are automatically drawn in to the story.

Another plus about this novel is that Doughty takes the time to share with readers the culture and beliefs of the Gypsies. Throughout the story, there are religious references, marriage rituals, and Romany festivities that Emil and his family take part in. All of this results in the reader's better understanding and learning of the culture that belongs to the primary people of this novel. Doughty also puts to rest many myths and stereotypes about Gypsies. She illuminates the Gypsies in a way that dispells their reputation as individuals that are often the subject of judgments made out of ignorance, rumors and lingering legends based on untruths.

"Fires in the Dark" is a heart-rendering novel of epic scope. Doughty has written a compassionate portrayal of Gypsy life, and an observance of a greatly misunderstood culture, told through the story of one family who went through unimaginable horrors. This story should be embedded into the reader's mind not only as a reminder of what happened, but also as a voice for those whose pain and suffering were never heard.

'Mean' new Lohan film not just a comedy for 'Girls'

MEAN GIRLS from page 6

And her character does some bad, bad things. But she doesn't start off that way. Lohan is Cady Heron, a new girl at the Chicago high school she's attending after spending 12 years being homeschooled in Africa under the tutelage of her anthropologist parents. Her first day – a "surreal blur" in her words – is an awkward attempt to gain a foothold in the ways of a modern suburban high school; she spends her lunch alone in a bathroom stall.

Various cliques interested in her quickly recruit Cady. She's befriended by the artsy outsiders, the mildly gothed out Janis (the terrific Lizzy Caplan) and the jovial Damian (Daniel Franzese), who's "too gay to function" according to jaded Janis.

Then there are "The Plastics," a trio of beautiful, shallow shrews who constitute the school's in-crowd. They're rich. They're gorgeous. They're powerful. And they are the cruelest of the school's girls, spreading gossip and backstabbing "friends" with vicious aplomb.

Cady, being as attractive as she is, is swiftly brought into "The Plastics" mold by the group's venomous queen bee Regina George (Rachel McAdams, of "The Hot Chick.") Janis sees this as a prime opportunity for deep cover espionage, with Cady infiltrating "The Plastic's" world and working to destroy it from the inside out. But the more that Cady spends in their backbiting world, and the more she learns about how good is to be the queen, the more she goes from being a false "Plastic" to a genuine one.

Cady tricks Regina into eating weight-boosting "diet" bars, turns her airheaded lackeys, insecure Gretchen (Lacey Chabert, "Party of Five") and ditzy Karen (Amanda Seyfried), against her, and angles to steal away Regina's sweet boyfriend Aaron (Jonathan Bennett) for herself, all the while slinking from sweet, shy new kid to sneaky, nasty witch.

It sounds like corny, teen-girl cheese, but Fey knows how and when to employ her trademark Ginsu-knife wit. The movie, directed with zest and vigor by Mark Waters (who did the deed on "Freaky Friday" too), bogs down in life lessons at the end – it backs away from being as dark and wicked a comedy as "Heathers" was – but even then Fey knows how to cut thorugh the sugar so that "Mean Girls" leaves you with the aftertaste of a Sour Patch kid in your mouth.

"Mean Girls" is spectacularly well cast for this kind of film; not one actor gives a singular false note. I could go on about how good Lohan is here – I've done it already – but that wouldn't leave nearly enough space to praise McAdams, who has the same crack comic timing and a nicely rounded sense of youthful superiority, or Chabert, who gives her superficial wannabe a tinge of insecure feeling and steals scenes from both Lohan and McAdams. Ditto Franzese's droll line readings. And the cast is stocked by a plethora of "SNL" veterans old and new, including Amy Poehler as Regina's desperate to be cool mom, Tim Meadows as the beleaguered school principal and Fey herself as the math teacher Ms. Norbury, who's dealing with divorce issues. Meadows and Fey demonstrate talents they've never gotten to show on the amped-up theatrics iof "SNL;" they each play their respective roles with subtle comic shadings and a great deal of sad dignity.

"Mean Girls" has a PG-13 rating, but that doesn't mean that Fey doesn't avoid cramming in as many deliriously, hilariously demented moments as possible. The movie has a merrily skewed spirit of sly satire, a tone of toothy black comedy dressed in the spangly rainbow colors of a high school princess. In otherwords, it's a savage and gutsy comedy dressed in the costume of a girlish Saturday night movie. By the time it reaches the end, "Mean Girls" wants to lecture its target audience on all the bad that comes from calling each other "fat" and "sluts." It gets all saccharine and righteous on us, but that's okay, seeing as how the bitter medicine helps the spoonful of sugar go down.

From left, Lindsay Lohan (Cady), Rachel McAdams (Rachel), Aamanda Seyfried (Karen) and Lacey Chabert (Gretchen) play as a small clique labled "The Plastics."

Nature's remedies

HerbFest entertains and teaches

HERB from page 6

Medicinal Herbs and Spices class, the participants seemed genuinely happy at the event suffusing the atmosphere with an amazing amount of positive energy. After the last crumbs had been cleared from the sample plates and all of the tea had been drunk the festival came to a close and everyone who had taken part in the event left with more than a stomach fool of all natural goodies, they left with an appreciation for the herbal world.

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Plant and Soil Science professor Allen Barker was just one of the many faculty members who turned out for HerbFest 2004.

Honoring O'Brien

Conan from page 6

p.m. time slot, and he certainly can be just as successful there. Recently however, Jay Leno renewed his position until the end of the decade. Conan's contract expires in two years though, and at that time, he will have to make a decision to perhaps move his show to another network for the earlier spot, the potential for a move includes possibility of the FOX network.

Until then though, Conan O'Brien is entertaining as always every weeknight. Most of us don't go to bed until we have at least watched Conan's first segment. "Late Night" continues on with its sometimes disgusting, always funny, pushing-the-envelope signature type of humor that is deemed great television.

"Late Night with Conan O'Brien" airs weekdays on NBC at 12:35 a.m.

Information for this column was taken from The New York Times.

Ryan Aubert is a Collegian Columnist.

Conan O'Brien has become a staple of late-night television. His show, "Late-Night with Conan O'Brien" is currently in its 11th season.

HermanMiller AUTHORIZED DEALER — MHEC Vendor
LEXINGTON GROUP
Buyers & Sellers of Quality New & Used Office Furniture
♦ Design & Space Planning ♦ Installations
♦ Furniture Rental & Leasing ♦ Panel Systems
New & Remanufactured
Eric Bascom 413.746.3064
eric@lexingtongroupinc.com
380 Union St., West Springfield,MA 01089

Hit the books, then hit the beach!
• Day and evening classes start May 24th
• Affordable resident cost is $130 per credit
• 5- or 10-week courses
• A great way to earn college credits quickly
• Credits are transferable to your school! (When you are a university or college student, or incoming college freshman)
• Wellesley, Framingham, and Ashland
Call MassBay today at 781-239-2703 or go to www.massbay.edu
Looking to get ahead in your course work? Shore up credits and need to catch up? Or just looking for something satisfying to do this Summer? A MassBay Summer Session course is the way to go!
Don't sweat it.
Check out MassBay's Summer Session I courses in:
Business, EMT, English, Health, History, Lab Sciences (such as Anatomy & Physiology, Biology, Microbiology), Math, Social Sciences, and other transferable courses!
Classes meet Monday-Thursday so there's plenty of time left for other Summer activities.
To register or obtain additional information, call 781-239-2703.
MASSBAY COMMUNITY COLLEGE
Start here. Go anywhere.

Write for Arts.
arts.dailycollegian.com

Spring Projects Fair
Come see the interesting showcase of our students' work!!
May 5th, 2004 5-8pm
In 604 Goodell (across from our office)
This program made possible (in part) by the Career Services and a grant from the UMass Amherst Alumni Association.

Student Sized Self Storage
Only $26 a month
You Keep the Keys
Greenfield Secure Storage
1135 Bernardston Rd.
413-775-0074

SWEET SHOP
THE ONE YOU WANT.
THE WAY YOU WANT IT.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

NEW ON TUESDAY:
LAST SAMURAI
CALENDAR GIRLS
CHASING LIBERTY
ELEPHANT
GIRL WITH A PEARL EARRING
PETER PAN
TRIPLETS OF BELLEVILLE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Bruegger's
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

This summer, change your life: change your mind.
We will change your mind this summer with new course selections, expanded degree programs and accredited online learning.
Use this coupon to waive the registration fee for 6 or more credits!*
Only at UMass Amherst. Only this summer.
Call 413-545-2414 for a free course catalog, or visit us online at www.umass.edu/summer
UMassAmherst Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.
*Savings Code: EBT149. May be applied when registering for six or more credits at one time during Summer Session I or II, 2004. Coupon has a singular value of $35.00; multiple coupons may not be applied to one registration. Must be presented at the time of registration and may not be applied retroactively. Not redeemable in cash or credit. Not valid if credit load falls below six. Other limitations apply.

Roddick falls in Italy

RODDICK from page 10

weeks ago.

He plans to play in Hamburg, Germany, next week before heading to Paris.

Federer had decided to take some time off from the tour, staying at home in Switzerland for three weeks and skipping Monte Carlo.

"I'm happy I won the first round, but it wasn't a great match because it was very difficult for me to play in my very first clay-court tournament," Federer said.

He had 25 winners to Bjorkman's 14 but was unable to break the Swedish veteran's serve until the second set. After a long first set, Federer closed the match in 1 hour, 23 minutes.

Federer could face a tougher challenge when he plays 2002 French Open champion Albert Costa next.

"I think I have to improve many things," Federer said.

Mantilla struggled to get past American Robby Ginepri, eventually winning 5-7, 7-5, 6-0.

Mantilla came back from 1-5 to win the second set, saving four match points in the process.

Mantilla said he had felt low on confidence, and needed to work on his speed and aggression. "I didn't play really well. ... For sure, today I was lucky," he said.

Two other Americans were eliminated. The veteran Todd Martin was beaten by 2003 French Open runner-up Verkerk 7-5, 3-6, 6-3, while James Blake lost to Novak 2-6, 6-3, 6-1.

Former Red Sox manager dies

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON – Darrell Johnson, who managed the Boston Red Sox to the 1975 World Series and was the first manager of the expansion Seattle Mariners two years later, has died at age 75.

Johnson died Monday of leukemia at his home in Fairfield, Calif., the Red Sox announced.

"He was easygoing. We played well under him," said Bill Lee, the starting pitcher in Game 7 of the 1975 World Series won by Cincinnati. "He was a very knowledgeable baseball guy. He handled players well. He was one of my all-time favorites."

Johnson was fired during the 1976 season and replaced by Don Zimmer. Lou Gorman, the Mariners' first general manager, hired him to manage the expansion club in 1977.

"The first guy I hired was Darrell Johnson. I had great admiration for him," Gorman said. "He was an excellent baseball man. He was great at handling players. He had a great deal of patience."

Johnson, who played 134 games in the majors, was a catcher with the St. Louis Browns and Chicago White Sox in 1952.

From 1957 to 1962, he played for the New York Yankees, St. Louis Cardinals, Philadelphia Phillies, Cincinnati Reds and Baltimore Orioles.

He retired in 1962 with a .234 batting average and two homers in 320 at bats.

In eight major-league seasons as a manager, three with Boston, four with Seattle and one with Texas, Johnson was 472-590.

After retiring as a player, Johnson managed in the Baltimore system, where Gorman was director of minor league scouting.

From Seattle, Gorman went to the New York Mets, where he recommended that Johnson be hired. Johnson joined the Mets as a major league scout in 1983.

"He was actually an underrated manager," Gorman said. "The toughest thing in the world is to manage an expansion club. I thought he was exactly the guy for that task."

He recalled one long losing streak in which the Mariners played many close games. After one loss, Gorman told Johnson, "That's as good as our ballclub can play," Gorman said.

"He said, 'Lou, I agree, but I'm going in the clubhouse and yelling at them.' I said, 'Why, would you do that?' He said, 'I don't ever want them to get in the frame of mind of losing.'"

His Seattle teams were 226-362. He was fired with a 39-65 record in 1980 and replaced by Maury Wills.

Johnson had poor eyesight and refused to wear glasses on the bench, Randy Adamack, the Mariners' public relations director at the time, said Tuesday.

Adamack recalled that when one reporter asked Johnson how he knew when to remove a Seattle pitcher, Johnson said, "I don't have to see what he's doing. I just go by the crack of the bat."

Adamack remembers him as "the strong, silent type. He was a John Wayne type of manager. ... He worked hard and he had a lot of fun when it was over."

Johnson's only teams with winning records were the Red Sox, who were 84-78 in 1974 and 95-65 in 1975. The 1975 team had Carl Yastrzemski, Carlton Fisk, Dwight Evans, Fred Lynn, Jim Rice and Luis Tiant.

Johnson was fired in 1976 with the team at 41-45.

"He had no bearing on the outcome of that season. It was injuries," Lee said of Johnson. "He was a kind guy. I liked him a lot. He'll be sorely missed."

Preparation for Olympics nearly complete

By Lisa Orkin
Associated Press

ATHENS, Greece — The sprint to the Olympics is being run through an obstacle course.

Frantic work — including on the main stadium — slogs on in mud, through rainstorms and at night. Roads and squares are ripped up for repaving or new rail lines. Cement mixers and cranes snarl city traffic. Whirlwinds of dust spin through neighborhoods.

Ready or not, the Athens Games will start 100 days from Wednesday.

"My major challenge is the same as that faced by everybody else involved in games preparations: Stay focused and make every minute count, because we don't have a moment to lose," chief Athens Olympics organizer Gianna Angelopoulos-Daskalaki said.

Preparations for these games have been racked by delays and glitches.

Four years ago, about the biggest last-minute concern officials in Sydney had was planting flowers outside arenas.

And for Athens' 4 million residents, the frustrations and burdens of living in a giant work-in-progress could get worse before the Aug. 13-29 Olympics begin.

The International Olympic Committee arrives Monday for its last major inspection visit, hoping everything comes together in the days ahead.

"We won't have much time before the games, that is for sure," Denis Oswald, the top IOC overseer of Athens' preparations, told The Associated Press. "Some time ago, we were also fearing that things would be ready only after the games. Now we are confident that everything will be finished before the games."

But just how soon before is still an open question.

Oswald and the IOC want all venues finished by the end of June. That applies even to the main stadium's new roof, whose two huge arches still must be moved into place. Attempts to glide the two sides into place could begin later this week.

Other key projects, including a new tram line, are not expected to be ready until less than a month before the opening ceremony. And progress on a roof for the swimming pool was so far behind, it was scrapped altogether.

"Our experts who have reviewed these plans say, 'Yes, it's feasible. It can be done,'" Oswald said. "But as long as it's not done, you never know if any unexpected difficulty will arise."

IOC president Jacques Rogge put Athens organizers on notice that he expects some welcome surprises during next week's visit.

"I look forward to hearing more news from them of how much is being accomplished in a short time," Rogge said.

"As we enter the final stretch together, most of the preparations are already complete," he added. "More work remains, however, and we are continuing our close cooperation ... to ensure that everything needed for the games to succeed is in place."

It wasn't supposed to be like this.

When Athens was awarded the Olympics in 1997, organizers boasted that 70 percent of the venues were in place. The Athens Games, the IOC was assured, would be organized on a "human scale," without grandiose or cumbersome projects.

But the system couldn't shake its old habits. The Socialist government (which was ousted in elections in March) let three years slip by with little progress on Olympic work.

The IOC began to panic. In 2000, then-IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch publicly scolded Athens for the delays.

Then came Sept. 11, 2001. Those attacks — and later terrorist strikes in Turkey and Spain — turned the Athens Games into the biggest security effort in Olympics history. The price tag has reached nearly $1.2 billion and could rise if threats escalate.

The overall Olympic budget is already more than $1 billion above the planned $5.5 billion.

For the first time, the IOC took out cancellation insurance, which protects against a terrorist attack, earthquakes and other natural disasters. The $170 million policy would give the IOC, national Olympic committees and sports federations enough money to continue operations.

"We are doing everything which is humanly possible to have the maximum security," Athens Mayor Dora Bakoyianni said. "We have to show that modern Greece is able to organize very good Olympic Games."

SUMMER BASH
SATURDAY MAY 8th, 3pm

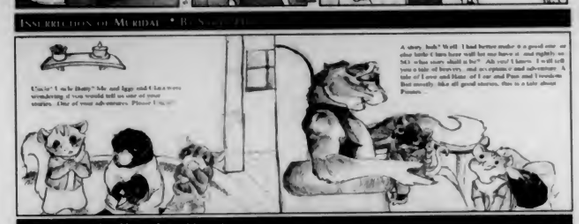
DJ HEAVEN &
Umass Fear Factor
VB Tournament
Dance Competition
Date Auction
Free BBQ & Drinks
at ΘX, 496 N Pleasant St
next to the Newman Center

Cherry Hill Golf Course & The Harp "10th Hole" at Cherry Hill

Have teamed up to present the... THE HARP
Friday Student Special!
Includes 9 Holes with food from the grill and DRAFT BEER or SODA
$15.00 per person- Noon-6pm every Friday
Carts Available
Great Food! Great Beer! Great Fun!

"A Course For Everyone"
No tee time necessary
• Just North of UMass Campus on Route 63- Montague Road
Call 256-4071 or 548-6900 for information
$1.00 OFF 9 Holes with Student I D any day, any time (1 coupon per person, not combineable)
$2.00 OFF 18 Holes with Student I D any day, any time (1 coupon per person, not combineable)

GRAND OPENING
Postal Connections
413-253-2311 • 375 COLLEGE ST (RTE 9 @ S.EAST ST)
WWW.POSTALCONNECTIONS.COM/165/
COME IN BEFORE MAY 8 & ENTER TO WIN A FREE HP SCANJET 3670, PC SCANNER
OPEN M-F 9-6 SAT 9-3
CURRENT SPECIALS!
$.04 B/W COPIES
$.49 COLOR COPIES
$2 OFF UPS OR FEDEX
•NOTARY •FAX •CUSTOM PACKING •PASSPORT PHOTOS• •LAMINATING

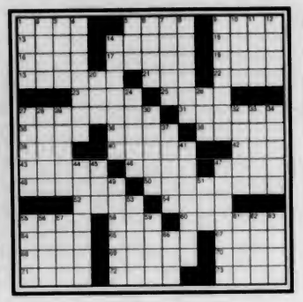


STUDENTS! ASK ABOUT OUR STUDENT MOVING PACKAGE & MAIL BOX RENTALS!

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
CINCO DE MAYO
Corona 12 pk bottles $10.99 + dep
Dos Equis 12 pk bottles $9.99 + dep
Tecate 12 pk bottles $4.99 + dep
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED



ACROSS
1 Rhine tug
5 Bible book
9 Shore up
13 Misses of baseball
14 Pac — of the NBA
15 Bathe
16 IRS agent (hyph.)
17 Girl watcher
18 Not quite closed
19 Fly-by
20 Quick bites
22 Ex-'s lecture
23 Has a cold
25 Baggypipe player
27 Polenta ingredient
31 Hearty entrees
35 Fit of shivering
36 AAA suggestions
38 — and error
39 LP successors
40 Bobbin candle
42 Express place
43 Swerves
46 Nasty mood
47 Baking powder ingredient
48 Suit measurement
50 Bright colors
52 Ghostly noise
54 Capital on Hesden
56 Tall person
58 Plaid
60 Vegetable sponge
64 Wall bristled about (2 wds.)
65 Exam score
67 Start of Caesar's boast
68 Garden herb
69 Archipelago part
70 Ms. Fanning
71 Tijuana dollar
72 Simon or Diamond
73 Dispatched

DOWN
1 Waiter or Domino
2 Gluck of opera
3 Dapped horse
4 Ordinary
5 Toupee's kin
6 House add-ons
7 Mild onions
8 Wrongs for wrongs
9 Serving dish
10 Elephant pointer, maybe
11 IT armed office
12 Expense account
14 Curtains
21 Cheerleads
26 Half-of-Farmer Mel —
27 Spiny plants
28 Utah city
29 Sly tactics
30 Tilts
32 Waitaway
33 On the blink
34 Shute with a bang
37 Cut the cake
41 Film flopsaul
43 Keepsake
45 Sandra — Paulo
47 Rockers
49 Edge
51 Sugarloaf pickle
53 They wrote in runes
55 Knock against
58 Aunt Bee's nephew
59 — Ha!
61 Gaes
62 Snorty
63 Imply
66 Computer key

© 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd. - N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Check out the Harp Pavilion!
WED. • Reggae Night
THU. • Special Brew
House Rockers
FRI. • Open Irish Seisiun
SAT. • The Johnny Stevens Band
Paper City Brewery Promo Night 9pm
May Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition."

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Meat Lasagna
- Chicken Nuggets
- Sweet Potato Quesadilla (vegan)

DINNER
- Roast Turkey
- Fish & Chips
- Thai Seitan (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 61
- Low: 43

THURSDAY
- High: 72
- Low: 49

FRIDAY
- High: 75
- Low: 43

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Glen Straub
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln
COPY EDITOR
Scott Eldridge II
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Jen Dimeglio/ Molly Eggleston/ Dave Pessah

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Don't be shady, you weird jerk.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Learn people's names and how to pronounce them correctly.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Be on extra alert, there is a conspiracy going on at work.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Dead moths do not make good pets.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Don't forget to use product, no one likes frizz.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Whatever you do, don't impersonate John Madden.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
All an obstacle really is, is a hurdle waiting to be jumped over.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Use sources for all papers, you can never document too much.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Call yourself Phil, even if it isn't your name.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Your voice is oddly soothing to many.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't pass out on a bus or on University drive.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You may think your so smart, but your wrong.

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"If liberty means anything at all, it means the right to tell people what they do not want to hear."

-George Orwell

Classifieds Sponsered by
WIFFLE ROCK
WWW.WIFFLEROCK.COM

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Meeting Notice Top of the Campus, Inc. (TOC, Inc.) will hold its Annual Meeting in Campus Center 805-809, Wednesday, May 12, 2004 at 2:00pm.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates now Renting 2 bedrm $1050/1100, 4 bedrm $2100 available 6/1/04 No last months rent, Free Heat & Hot Water, 2 full baths, AC. On busline Mon-Fri 10-5pm 253-7377

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Honda Accord LX 4 door sedan 138K miles good condition $2000 253-6784

EMPLOYMENT

THE RED LION INN Looking for an awesome summer experience? Join us at The Red Lion Inn in historic Stockbridge. Discover a unique opportunity in the gateway to the Berkshires. Seeking waitstaff, bussers, cooks and more. Call Dan Dwyer at (413) 298-5536 ext. 3. On Property Housing available! Join an international staff. Just an hour away from UMASS. Call Dan at (413) 298-5536 ext. 3.

Activism Summer Jobs For the Environment $3000-5000/Summer Join the state's largest public interest grassroots organization to protect our environment, public health, human rights and democracy. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Bobby 1-413-256-6434

Bueno Y Sano is hiring for positions for fall semester please apply in person Call for directions 253-4000

Painters wanted greater Springfield area 1-413-695-2645 or 888-277-9787

EMPLOYMENT

PART-TIME POSITIONS 20+ hours/wk; Set your own schedule. Conduct surveys over the phone at our Hadley location – NO SALES! Evngs/wkends $11hr(dent/401(k); PVTA accessible. Email myrivian@fieldmarktinginc.com or apply in person, First Floor 100 Ventrue Way, Hadley, MA (888)423-5381

BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Summer teenage bicycling trips. USA, Canada, Europe. Salary plus expense paid. Student Hosteling Program, P.O. Box 419, Conway, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, www.bicycletrips.com.

Play sports! Have fun! Save Money! Sports Camp in Maine. Coaches needed: Tennis, Basketball, Baseball, Water-sports, Ropes Course, Golf, Archery, and more. Work Outdoors and Have a Great Summer! Call Free: (888) 844-8080 or Apply: www.campcedar.com

EMPLOYMENT

Spa manager East Hampton Part-time nights and weekends $90/shift 413-695-3765

CANTONESE, JAPANESE, KOREAN, MANDARIN Earn $75 Individuals fluent in Cantonese, Japanese, Korean, and Mandarin needed to participate in a test development activity. Participants will provide responses to the Listening, Reading, Language Structures, Cultural Understanding, Language Acquisition, Speaking, and Writing sections of tests for these languages. Participation is by appointment May 3 – May 14. For more information call Pam Giglietti, National Evaluation Systems, Inc. 256-0444.

Students wanted for a summer painting job. $400 - $600/ week. Experience not needed but a plus. All hired will go through a paid training program. Call 888-277-9787 or go to COLLEGEPRO.COM. Work with friends.

EMPLOYMENT

FRENCH, GERMAN, HEBREW, ITALIAN, LATIN Earn $50 Individuals fluent in French, German, Hebrew, Italian, and Latin needed to participate in a test development activity. Participants will respond to approximately twenty-five multiple-choice questions, and provide responses to Writing and Speaking sections of tests for these languages. Participation is by appointment May 3 – May 14. For more information call Pam Giglietti, National Evaluation Systems, Inc. 256-0444.

Lowell Area Driven Leader needed to be crew chief for one of the state's largest exterior house painting companies. Must be hardworking, independent & have own car. Exp. preferred, but not necessary. Call Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Painters Wanted in Danvers area want a challenging Job outdoors w/good $$$! Seeking driven, Hardworking Individual w/own car to be a painting crew member. No exp. necessary Call: Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Hardworking individuals living around 93/95 belt South of I-90 for fulltime painter positions. Challenging job requires independence, own car. $10-$12 base rate. Call Will @ 617-699-8970

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413)584-4746

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley 5 Bedroom Plus home, 2 baths w/ laundry hookup. Large yard, minutes from UMass. 549-4270

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female roommate wanted to share 2-bd apt in Sunderland. $418/mo. Includes heat, hot water, and cable. Available 6/1 or earlier Call Lauren @ 860-604-6068.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst 548-9992

SERVICES

Math/Physics tutor available, $30/hour, $20/hour (travel); Call Dr. Kline (413-552-1805)

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Bdrm Apt. in Cliffside Call 665-1218

The Boulders 2 bedroom apt. available June 1st. August 15th fall option 413-478-3915

Live downtown this summer! Large 4BR 2-floor apt next to Amherst HS. Washer & dryer included. 5 min. to bus stop & town. ONLY $362.50 per room + utilities. Available 6/1 thru 8/15. Contact Rob: agraff@student.umass.edu/ 978-808-7322

2 bedrooms, fully furnished apartment, 1 full bath. Available June 1st. September 1st. Call Rachel Szyman @ 781-264-1512

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MAY 5, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

All Saints' day

Siena sends Minutemen to fifth consecutive home defeat

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

Senior second baseman Kevin Roberts homered on the first pitch of the game and starting pitcher Josh Burnett worked seven strong innings as Siena downed the Massachusetts baseball team 7-5 in non-conference action yesterday at Earl Lorden Field.

The leadoff homerun was the second hit against the Minutemen in as many home games, while the loss was their 10th in 11 contests and fifth straight in Amherst.

Siena	7
UMass	5

The Maroon and White return to action on Thursday, when it will travel to Brookline for a rematch of the opening round of the Baseball Beanpot with Northeastern. First pitch is scheduled for 3 p.m. at Friedman Diamond.

Junior righthander Mike Crane started and took the loss for the Minutemen, giving up five hits and three earned runs while walking five and striking out four to fall to 1-1 on the season.

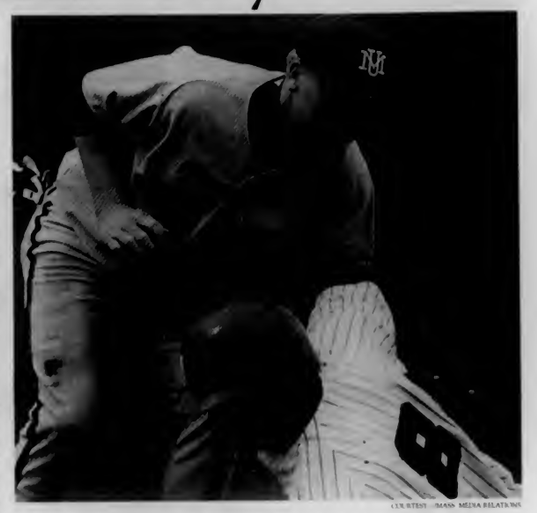
Freshman righthander Devin Barnett pitched well in relief of Crane, allowing one unearned run on two hits in two-and-2/3 innings.

Closer Scott Ratliff did not fare as well, surrendering two runs on a hit and two walks in 2/3 of an inning before sophomore Jeremy Demers took over and recorded the final two outs.

Burnett allowed two runs on six hits, struck out one and walked a pair to earn the win and improve his record to 4-3 on the season.

Sophomore catcher Frank Curreri was the offensive leader for UMass, going three-for-five — including a two-run homerun in the sixth inning — with three runs batted in and two runs scored. The homerun was Curreri's sixth on the season, good for second on the club, while the RBI's give him a team-leading 42 on the season.

Catcher Tony Cipolla paced the Saints attack, going three-for-four with a pair of runs scored. Leftfielder Shawn Hampton and Roberts also contributed a pair of hits, while centerfielder Matt Gidaly collected a pair of RBI on a pinch-hit single.



Leading 1-0 heading into the fifth inning, Siena posted a run in the fifth and two in the sixth to take a 4-0 lead.

The Minutemen cut the deficit in half in the bottom of the sixth, as Curreri launched a one-out double to center, plating two and making the score 4-2. However the Saints then pushed their lead to 5-2 with an unearned run in the top of the seventh.

UMass fought back in the bottom of the eighth, using a Siena error and an RBI single by senior tri-captain Matt Reynolds to pull within one at 5-4.

After Siena tacked on a pair of insurance runs in the top of the ninth to take a 7-4 lead, the Maroon and White made one last attempt to tie the game. With two outs and no runners on base, senior tri-captain Mike Athas began the furious rally with a single down the right field line.

After senior Cullan Maumus walked, Curreri connected on his second double of the afternoon to score Athas and set up runners on second and third with two outs before Siena reliever Josh Courage struck out Reynolds on three pitches to end the game.

COURTESY MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior second baseman Cullan Maumus and the Minutemen have lost nine of their last 10 games.

Lee leaves UMass

Center not expected to play in 2004-05

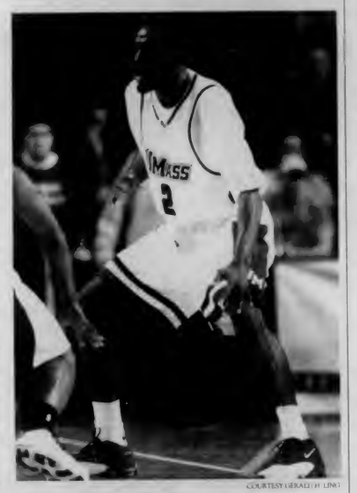
Junior center Gabe Lee has formally withdrawn from the University of Massachusetts due to personal reasons and is not expected to compete for the Massachusetts men's basketball team during the 2004-05 season, according to a published release from head coach Steve Lappas.

Lee, a 6-foot-9 210-pound native of Camilla, Ga., started the first 14 games of 2003-04 for the Minutemen, averaging 9.1 points, 6.3 rebounds and 3.2 blocks per contest. However his season was cut short after a severe ankle injury suffered Jan. 14 at St. Bonaventure kept him out for the remainder of the season.

"We will continue to support Gabe Lee in sorting through some matters in his personal life," Lappas said in the release.

After being heavily recruited out of high school by schools such as Connecticut, North Carolina and Cincinnati, a shoulder injury landed Lee in prep school at nearby Northfield-Mount Hermon for a year before he arrived at UMass prior to the 2001-02 season.

After sitting out his freshman season at UMass as an academic non-qualifier, Lee cracked the Maroon and White's lineup and started 13 of 28 games during the 2002-03 campaign.



A dominant shot-blocker, Lee lead the Minutemen with 46 blocks in '02-03, and was ranked first in the Atlantic 10 and ninth in the nation with 44 blocks this season — an average of 3.2 per game — before succumbing to injury.

Lee also averaged 9.1 points per game and 6.3 rebounds per game in 14 games this season, his first as a starter.

The loss of Lee could hurt the Minutemen up front, where bigger teams often exploited them this season without Lee in the lineup. However next season's recruiting class includes a pair of big men in 7-foot former Connecticut high school star Jeff Salovski, as well as Canadian forward Oliver Lamoureux.

In addition, 6-foot-8 swingman and former Top 100 recruit Lawrence Carrier will join the squad after sitting out this season due to academics.

— Mike Marzelli

COURTESY GERALD H. LINK

Gabe Lee has decided to leave school for personal reasons.

Roddick upset in first round of Italian Open

By Victor Simpson
Associated Press

ROME — Andy Roddick's visit to Rome was a rough one, starting with a fire in his hotel and ending with a first-round upset in the Italian Open.

"It's tough to put it out of your mind. You know it's going to creep in," Roddick said after losing to Guillermo Canas in straight sets Tuesday.

The U.S. Open champion was beaten 7-6 (7), 6-1, wasting three set points in the tiebreaker, then putting up little resistance in the second set.

Not the kind of performance Roddick hoped for in his preparation for the French Open, the only Grand Slam tournament played on a clay court.

Three tourists died in a dawn fire Saturday in the five-star hotel where Roddick and several other players and tennis officials were staying. They were evacuated and moved to another hotel.

"I wasn't concentrating for one reason or another," the American said, although he didn't directly point to the fire as a distraction.

On court, Roddick said, "I was rushing things. I definitely don't think I put forth my best effort today, so it's a little disappointing."

In contrast, top-ranked Roger Federer, playing his first clay-court tournament of the year, kept focused and eliminated Jonas Bjorkman 7-6 (4), 6-3.

Federer was a finalist in Rome last year and has since won Wimbledon and the Australian Open.

Also advancing were last year's Italian champion, unseeded Felix Mantilla, No. 8 Nicolas Massu, No. 12 Jiri Novak, and No. 14 Martin Verkerk.

Roddick was erratic, committing 35 unforced errors to only 11 for Canas, who won the first set when Roddick netted a shot at his feet.

Canas pulled away in the second set, breaking Roddick's serve three times.

"I played well, within my level," said Canas — who was described by Roddick as "not the ideal opponent you'd want to play if you're having an off day."

Roddick, a first-round loser at the French Open the past two years, makes no secret that red clay is not his favorite surface, although he was a finalist on green clay in Houston two

See RODDICK on page 8

ELSA KRINSKY/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Undefeated Kentucky Derby winner Smarty Jones, shown here running a practice lap at Churchill Downs with jockey Willie Martinez, may not run in the second leg of the Triple Crown.

Kentucky Derby winner Smarty Jones may skip Preakness Stakes

By Beth Harris
Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. — Kentucky Derby winner Smarty Jones has some work to do to even make it to Baltimore in two weeks for the second leg of the Triple Crown.

"If he does go back to the track and I don't like the way he's training, then he's not going," trainer John Servis said Sunday, a day after the Derby victory. "If I'm not as confident as I was this week, we'll skip it. There are too many races down the line."

Smarty Jones, the first undefeated Derby winner since Seattle Slew in 1977, was scheduled to be shipped to Philadelphia Park on Monday or Tuesday to resume training.

If all goes well, Servis said he would send him to Pimlico a few days before the May 15 Preakness Stakes.

Derby runner-up Lion Heart is expected to race at Pimlico, while fourth-place finisher Limehouse, The Cliff's Edge (fifth) and Borrego (10th) also are being considered.

Also expected for the 1 3-16th-mile Preakness are Eddington and Rock Hard Ten, two colts who hadn't won enough money to get into the Derby field; Cheiron; and Water Cannon.

Cheiron is trained by 21-year-old Kristin Mulhall, who sent out Imperialism to a third-place finish in the Derby.

"The intelligent thing to do would be to run Cheiron in the Preakness and freshen Imperialism and run him in the Belmont," said Steve Taub, who owns both Cheiron and Imperialism. "Whatever Kristin wants to do is what we will do."

Smarty Jones and Lion Heart turned what was supposed to be a wide-open Derby into a two-horse race.

Smarty Jones, with rookie Derby rider Stewart Elliott, aboard, caught the pacesetting Lion Heart near the top of the stretch and then pulled away to win the 1 1/4-mile race by 2 3/4 lengths.

"My horse ran a great race, but he (Smarty Jones) was the better horse on the day," Lion Heart trainer Patrick Biancone said, already back at Keeneland with his colt. "I have a world of respect for him. Smarty Jones could be anything."

While Smarty Jones is 7-for-7, with five starts this year; Lion Heart has just five career races — three this year.

Servis said the Pimlico course known for tight turns and a speed bias won't give Lion Heart an edge. However, he said Lion Heart "can easily go forward in a big way" since he's so lightly raced.

The Preakness is limited to 14 starters, but there has not been a full field since 1992.

What is marking up UMass?
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

Women's softball to face Boston rival
SPORTS, PAGE 10

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, MAY 6, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 134

Bustamante sworn in as SGA president

MATTHEW REILLY/COLLEGIAN

Eduardo Bustamante is sworn in as the Student Government Association's president at last night's meeting in the Campus Center basement.

Senate unanimously passes $1.8 million budget

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Staff

Eduardo Bustamante was sworn in as president and a $1.8 million budget was passed at last night's Student Government Association meeting.

"It felt great, you know? I am excited more than anything else. I am excited and optimistic," Bustamante said about being officially sworn in by the associate chief justice.

"I want to thank all the students who came out. I see myself as having a responsibility to the student body to make serious change because that's the way the students voted and the platform I ran on," he said.

Bustamante said he hopes to move into the presidential office as soon as he can so he can get started working for students. He presented his cabinet nominees to the Senate last night along with a letter to the body.

Matt Murphy, who will take office as student trustee on July 1, stood by Bustamante while he was being sworn in.

Jared Nokes, who stepped down as President to resume his duties as Speaker of the Senate, started the applause for Bustamante. A beaming Bustamante received cheers, ovations and hugs while walking across the room.

"[Nokes has] been a stand up guy since the most recent election. He talked to me about logistics of transferring and got up and congratulated me. I respect that," Bustamante said.

Support for Bustamante came from both sides of the aisle this time. Sen. David Bettencourt, a self-proclaimed Republican who has often found himself on the opposite side of issues as Bustamante, said he was excited by his election.

"I am ecstatic about our future. I am ecstatic of the caliber and intelligence [Bustamante] brings to the SGA," he said.

On the elections report, there is some controversy in the Northeast Governor race between Matthew Pearlson, who won the race in the first election, and Ahmed Nasaf, who won the race in the second election. The commissioners said Pearlson is planning to bring his complaint to the judiciary branch about funds for

See SGA on page 2

MATTHEW REILLY/COLLEGIAN

Patrick Higgins, chair of the ways and means committee discusses the budget at the SGA meeting last night.

UMass Board of Trustees approves parental notification

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees approved parental notification at yesterday's meeting at the Amherst campus.

In the terms approved by the Board, parents of students who have committed a second violation of the alcohol abuse policies will be notified. Before this change, the policy stated that parents are notified after the third offense when the student has already been kicked out of housing.

This policy change had been recommended by the Alcohol Task Force last December and made its way to the Board yesterday. The Board had to approve this change because it is a change in the Code of Student Conduct.

"If I was a student, I'd be angry," Chancellor John V. Lombardi said laughing. "But as a parent, I am for it."

He said, "Parents are pretty strong on it."

Student Trustee Hannah Fatemi also supported parental notification.

"A change in policy will allow for a change [in] the culture here at UMass and promote more parental involvement," she wrote in a press release. "This change will add a further intervention to our drug/alcohol-sanctioning program. This policy change will go to benefit those students whose behavior is putting them at risk of housing removal."

She said she hopes this will prevent a third abuse, which removes the student from on-campus housing.

At yesterday's meeting, held in the Massachusetts Room of the Mullins Center at 9 a.m., parental notification was not discussed. Jared Nokes, speaker of the senate, who was present at the meeting, said he was disappointed that it passed so easily. He said he had sent a letter to each of the trustees expressing the concern voiced by students against the change.

Fatemi was not surprised by the lack of the discussion. She described the meeting as "more of a formality" because most of the details were "hashed out" in a committee meeting.

The Committee on Academics and Student Affairs (CASA) met two weeks ago in Boston to discuss parental notification in addition to two other changes made to the Code of Student Conduct, which included addressing riotous behavior and broadening the definition of firearms.

"We discussed why these changes are occurring right now," Fatemi said of the CASA meeting.

She stressed that these changes "did not just come through." She said there was much discussion involved at the CASA meeting.

CASA includes all five student trustees from the five UMass campuses and around seven to eight Board trustees, according to Fatemi.

The Board also approved UMass Amherst to purchase five fraternity houses, and approved of some professors earning tenure. The latter was done in a closed executive session.

Jack Wilson, president of the UMass system, announced that currently in the house budget in Boston, UMass has a $394.8 million budget, up from $331 million last September. He said the Senate has not yet acted on the budget.

"We're pleased with the distance we've come," he said.

Grace Fey, chair of the board, took time to applaud the student trustees of the five campuses.

"These are very special people who took risk to be elected," she said. "They have served this University in exemplarity fashion."

Each student trustee received a traditional UMass chair to thank them for their service.

"I think this year has been overshadowed by the many problems in Student Government," Fatemi said after the meeting. "Many — view Student Government as ineffective, but you need to get involved in the community. They really care about the University."

All the members of the board sat behind a U-shaped set up that was roped off from the audience. The audience included faculty representatives from each campus, along with two guards. Policemen were waiting outside the Mullins Center.

According to Nokes, last year there was an interruption of the Board meeting, which occurs five times a year rotating the campus location. Union members came and demanded more funds to be allocated to fund the contracts, Nokes said.

SCOTT ELDRIDGE III/COLLEGIAN

Fillin' the bus

Brian Metzger, a junior mechanical engineering major and Elsa Chan, a junior civil engineering major, pose during the 11th annual "Fill-a-Bus" charity event in front of the Student Union.

U.S. general apologizes for Iraqi abuse; prisoners protest

By Jim Krane
Associated Press

ABU GHRAIB, Iraq (AP) — The commander of U.S.-run prisons in Iraq apologized yesterday for the abuse of prisoners by American guards and said he will invite observers from the Red Cross and Iraqi government into Abu Ghraib prison.

Inmates shouted protests about mistreatment as Maj. Gen. Geoffrey Miller led journalists through the lockup, the scene of photographs that showed Iraqi prisoners being abused by smiling U.S. guards.

"I would like to apologize for our nation and for our military for the small number of soldiers who committed illegal or unauthorized acts here at Abu Ghraib," Miller said. "These are violations not only of our national policy but of how we conduct ourselves as members of the international community."

Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt, the spokesman for the U.S. command, also apologized.

"My Army has been embarrassed by this. My Army has been shamed by this," he said. "And on behalf of my Army, I apologize for what those soldiers did to your citizens."

President Bush addressed the Arab world on television, but stopped short of saying he was sorry. He said the prisoner abuses were "abhorrent" and do not represent "the America that I know."

"There will be investigations. People will be brought to justice," the president told the U.S.-sponsored Al-Hurra television network. He also gave a brief interview to the more popular Arab satellite channel Al-Arabiya.

On Tuesday, the Army disclosed that it was conducting criminal investigations of 10 prisoner deaths in U.S. custody in Afghanistan and Iraq — beyond two already ruled homicides — plus another 10 abuse cases.

A U.S. intelligence official, who requested anonymity, said the CIA inspector general is investigating two more deaths involving CIA interrogators. That brought to 14 the number of prisoner deaths blamed on Americans or under U.S. investigation.

Miller said there were "some deaths" at Abu Ghraib and they were being investigated.

Army Col. Foster Payne, head of military intelligence at Abu Ghraib, said treatment of prisoners has come under intense scrutiny since the departure of the Army's 800th MP Brigade and the 205th Military Intelligence Brigade.

Although Payne and Miller did not describe methods now used to obtain information, former inmates say they've undergone electric shock, beatings, prolonged handcuffing and hooding, sleep deprivation, and "stress positioning" — being made to stand or sit in uncomfortable positions for hours or days.

"Those acts are illegal and cannot be used," said Payne, commander of the Texas-based 304th Military Intelligence Brigade. "If people are doing them they are doing them without guidance."

Miller, former commander of the U.S. prison at Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, said he would halt or restrict some interrogation methods, especially eight to 10 "very aggressive techniques."

Those include hooding, stress positioning and sleep deprivation, which he said are now banned without specific approval.

Interrogations take place inside a pair of windowless plywood huts. Inside each hut are 12 booths with heavy steel loops on the floor for leg shackles.

The Abu Ghraib prison sprawls over the lush farm landscape west of Baghdad, its tall concrete walls bristling with razor wire and guard towers. All but a few prisoners live

See IRAQ on page 3

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
News Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Features Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
Photography Editor S. J. Fort
News Editor Ferron Saltsiker
Photography Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Production Manager Kristen Weiss
Accounting Marty Pappas
Production Manager Mark Lagatic
Systems Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Renee Brand
Customer Operations Linda Wallack
Classified Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Circulation Distribution Josh Riggins
Financial Analyst Richard Pacheco
Graphic Production Rachael Bruno
Business Account Executive Charlie Higgins
Arts & Living Assistant Meghan Healy
Arts & Living Assistant Cameron J. Woods
Copy Editor/Managing Paige Crum
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photography Amelia P. Lincoln
Assistant Sports Mike Martelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the academic year, except during University holidays and vacations. The Collegian is independently owned and operated by its student staff. Advertising revenue finances the publication. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Index. Became The College Signal in 1903. Became Collegian in 1918 and the Massachusetts Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1947. The Collegian has been printed by Journal Graphics since 1994. For business and information, call (413) 545-3500. Hours are 8:30 A.M. and 3:30 P.M.

Bush administration requests $25 billion for military

By Alan Fram
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Bush administration asked Congress yesterday for a $25 billion down payment for next year's U.S. operations in Iraq and Afghanistan, a retreat from the White House's earlier plans not to seek the money until after the November elections.

The money — half of what White House officials have said they expect to need for 2005 — is designed to carry the military through the first months of the new budget year, which starts next Oct. 1. Congress is likely to be adjourned for much of that period, and the Army in particular would be expected to face a cash crunch unless funds were approved beforehand.

"While we do not know the precise costs for operations next year, recent developments on the ground and increased demands on our troops indicate the need to plan for contingencies," President Bush said in a statement. "We must make sure there is no disruption in funding and resources for our troops."

White House budget chief Joshua Bolten and Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz went to the Capitol to describe the proposal to House Speaker Dennis Hastert, R-Ill., Senate Majority Leader Bill Frist, R-Tenn., and other top Republicans.

"I certainly expect so," Frist told reporters afterward when asked whether Congress would approve the funds. "It's for our troops."

The proposal comes amid an intensified Iraqi insurrection that has inflicted steady casualties on Americans and forced the Pentagon to plan on keeping more troops in the country next year than the administration had planned.

It also comes with the administration and the military facing widespread criticism at home and abroad for the abuse of Iraqi war prisoners.

The White House, too, faced growing demands from lawmakers of both parties in recent weeks that the money for Iraq needed to be approved before Congress adjourns this fall.

Democrats criticized the Bush proposal because they said it was well short of what will really be needed.

Rep. David Obey, D-Wis., top Democrat on the House Appropriations Committee, said the request would fall short by least $40 billion. With this year's expected record deficit looming as a campaign issue this fall, Obey said the shortfall was intentional.

"What it demonstrates is that they tried simply to avoid showing any of the costs before the election," Obey told reporters. "Now they are asking for the least they can possibly ask for ... concealing the full costs."

The administration will seek more money for next year "when we can better estimate precise costs," Bush said.

Democratic presidential candidate Sen. John Kerry said it was too early to tell if he would support the proposal. The Massachusetts senator said U.S. troops "need to get what they need," but he faulted the administration for failing to provide them promptly with body armor and humvee trucks.

Underlining how Iraq has become a political issue, the Democratic National Committee took the unusual step of commenting on a spending proposal, saying it was insufficient and misleading.

"The troops deserve our full support, but that does not change the fact that this president has a staggering credibility problem on Iraq," said DNC spokesman Jano Cabrera.

The administration provided few details, but officials said all the money would be for the military. The funds would add to the federal deficit, though all $25 billion probably would not be spent next year.

Even before yesterday's request, Congress had provided $165 billion for the Pentagon for Iraq, Afghanistan and anti-terror efforts at home and abroad since the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks, according to an October 2003 report by the Congressional Research Service.

Most of that money came from an $87.5 billion bill last November, and a $79.5 billion measure enacted in April 2003.

Unlike those bills, administration officials did not characterize the new request as urgent, participants in yesterday's meeting said. House Appropriations Committee Chairman Bill Young, R-Fla., said the $25 billion would probably be attached to the regular defense spending bill for next year, which he said would be completed by the time Congress adjourns for the fall elections.

In February, Bush's budget omitted any funds for U.S. military and reconstruction activities in Iraq and Afghanistan next year. Bolten said at the time that the administration's 2005 request for Iraq could be up to $50 billion and said the request would not come until at least January.

For months, administration officials stood by that timetable, insisting they had enough money to last until the new year.

In recent weeks, administration officials raised the possibility that they might need extra money for the final weeks of this fiscal year; many members of Congress said they believed billions will be needed.

Lawmakers leaving yesterday's meeting said administration officials said they expected to make it through this year's final five months if they are given authority to shift funds among different accounts in the Pentagon's budget.

As recently as Monday, a senior administration official played down the need for money right now for U.S. forces in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Bush "has not been told that there is a resource problem," said the official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

That official also said there was currently enough money for reconstruction in Iraq.

Of $18.4 billion provided last November for rebuilding that country's economy and government, less than $2.8 billion has been spent or is owed to contractors, according to the Coalition Provisional Authority, the U.S.-led agency governing Iraq.

Motion to take Collegian funds fails flyers. If the justices find fault in the race, then the Northeast race would be held again.

SGA from page 1

There were several ties in the area government, but only one could be broken because only one person was at the meeting. Three ties remain.

The Senate also passed unanimously the $1.8 million budget proposed by the Ways and Means Committee last week. Patrick Higgins chaired this committee and stood and answered questions for 26 minutes to ease any questions that the Senators might have had.

"I was so excited [that it passed unanimously]. I think it was a great budget, and I think that the groups are really going to have an opportunity next year to do a ton of great programming," Higgins said.

He went on to say that he thought the advocacy agencies would be helped out a lot by new computers and additional support services provided by the SGA.

"I felt like we worked out a lot of problems. Some people still had some questions about some [Registered Student Organizations] that they are involved in, but that's always the case," Higgins said.

There was some discussion during the meeting about Sigma Lambda Upsilon, which received only a $25 budget. Higgins noted that at the time, there were only two active members and one was graduating. He said he felt that they would come back to Ways and Means during the appeals processes, but he said they did not.

The senators in the end did not seem bothered by this or the fact that the Republican club received an increase in funding, which they discussed.

As noted in Tuesday's Massachusetts Daily Collegian, a motion was brought to the Senate last night by Nokes and Sen. Michael Sheridan to either reprimand the Collegian for its decision to print the editorial written by Rene Gonzalez on Pat Tillman, or to distance the SGA from the editorial decision The Collegian made by asking for money allocated back.

It asked the Collegian to pay back $10,000 for a past legal settlement and to pay for its financial advisor, among other details.

Jason Bissonnette, a former high-ranking SGA official, told the Senate the motion presented violated the SGA's bylaws.

"This is a violation in the bylaws. This motion was triggered by the Pat Tillman article," he said.

Dan Lamothe, managing editor of the Collegian, silenced the room when he spoke. Nokes had earlier said that Gonzalez's article was not protected in the bylaws under the free speech clause because it was not the Collegian's staff opinion.

"Speaker Nokes said that speech in The Collegian that is Rene Gonzalez's is not the Collegian's speech. He's right, it's not. However, he is very easily forgetting the difference between staff opinion and the voice of one student."

Lamothe pointed out that Nokes had just sworn to uphold the SGA bylaws earlier in the meeting when he was sworn back in as speaker of the Senate, but by supporting the motion "he has already let that down."

Nokes said The Collegian could be more Independent from the SGA, which he said he was 100 percent sure they wanted.

"Why is my money going towards this [type of editorial decision]? The Collegian had the right to print it. Rene Gonzalez has the right to write it. But I don't need to fund it," he said.

The motion failed with eight voting for, 24 voting against, and one senator abstaining.

The Senate later approved of a motion that condemned the views expressed by Gonzalez. Bettencourt was concerned about the number of e-mails the SGA had received and said senators needed to listen to their constituents.

In other business, the Senate was unable to override Nokes' veto of a change to the bylaws and a motion about the Pledge of Allegiance.

"In eight months, from an elected president, we saw two vetoes. In three weeks, we see five vetoes," Sen. Ayutunde Onikoro said in defense of his motion on the Pledge of Allegiance that Nokes' vetoed.

"Once again, the voice of the student Senate is silenced by the executive," Chris Eckel, associate speaker of the senate, said.

The Senate also voted to overturn the picketing code in the Code of Student Conduct, a part of the code that limits how students can protest at the University. According to Senator Dan Pozmanter, the code was put into effect in the early 1990s. He said the University does not need its own separate code to deal with protests.

"Let's stick to state law. Let's stick to federal law, and let them deal with that," he said. "I don't think there should be a picketing code."

"The people who would break this policy do not know it exists. The picketing code is not about prevention. It is about getting back at people. If you get arrested under state law, then you deserve it," Pozmanter said.

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
DC DESIGN
Daily Collegian
Daily Collegian
Daily Collegian
Daily Collegian

Make Finding a Job Easy!
Come to the Job Search Workshop today!
10:30 am - 104 Career Services Building
Can't come today?
This workshop is also offered TOMORROW Friday, May 7
10:30 am, 1:00 pm and 2:30 pm
All workshops at 104 Career Services Building (across from the Newman Center)
CareerServices
For more information, go to www.umass.edu/careers or call us at 545-2224

Rent One of Ours
No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
POTTERS AUTO & TRUCK RENTALS
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
79 Sunderland Road, North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

HermanMiller AUTHORIZED DEALER
MHEC Vendor
LEXINGTON GROUP
Buyers & Sellers of Quality New & Used Office Furniture
♦ Design & Space Planning ♦ Installations
♦ Furniture Rental & Leasing ♦ Panel Systems New & Remanufactured
Eric Bascom 413.746.3064
eric@lexingtongroupinc.com
380 Union St., West Springfield,MA 01089

Where are YOU living next semester?

CHECK OUT PUFFTON VILLAGE!
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off-street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.
PUFFTON VILLAGE
1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413-549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

www.dailycollegian.com

NEW ON TUESDAY:
LAST SAMURAI
CALENDAR GIRLS
CHASING LIBERTY
ELEPHANT
GIRL WITH A PEARL EARRING
PETER PAN
TRIPLETS OF BELLEVILLE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Bruegger's
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Around the nation

New York

Walt Disney Co. rejects Moore's new film

NEW YORK (AP) — Michael Moore's "Fahrenheit 9/11," which criticizes President Bush's handling of the Sept. 11 terrorist attacks and connects the Bush family with Osama bin Laden's, won't be released through Miramax Films on orders from parent company Disney.

Moore believes The Walt Disney Co. is worried the documentary will endanger tax breaks the company receives from Florida, where Bush's brother Jeb is governor.

The director says on his Web site that he was told Tuesday that Disney had "officially decided to prohibit our producer, Miramax, from distributing my new film."

But in a statement yesterday, Disney spokeswoman Zenia Mucha said Moore has known since May 2003 that Miramax would not release his film.

Whenever it was decided, the timing couldn't be better to stir up discussion: "Fahrenheit 9/11" is making its world premiere as one of 18 films screening in competition at the Cannes Film Festival, which begins May 12.

Reed Saxon/Associated Press
Michael Moore.

—Associated Press

Washington

House votes against complicated tax

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted yesterday to spare millions of middle-income families next year from a complicated tax invented in the 1960s to capture rich tax evaders.

The force of inflation is pushing more middle-income households into the alternative minimum tax each year. About 3 million individuals and families paid it this year.

The House voted 333-89 to prevent the tax from ensnaring 9 million more taxpayers next year and imposing $17.8 billion in extra taxes.

The House bill slows the tax's spread into the middle class by keeping the amount of income exempt from the tax at this year's level, $40,250 for individuals and $58,000 for couples. Without action, the exemptions fall back next year to $33,750 for individuals and $45,000 for couples. The bill will not become law until it is passed by the Senate and signed by President Bush.

—Associated Press

Washington

CVS calls for legalizing drug imports

WASHINGTON (AP) — Breaking with others in his industry, the chief executive of CVS Pharmacy called yesterday for legalizing imports of prescription drugs.

The statement by the nation's largest wholesale purchaser of prescription medicines came a day after the Bush administration's health secretary said legalizing imports appears inevitable.

Support is also growing in Congress, even among Republicans who previously opposed importation but now say constituents are clamoring for relief from soaring prescription prices.

Ryan is the first executive of a large drug store chain to support importing drugs from countries where prices are controlled by governments so that people can fill prescriptions more cheaply than they can at U.S. pharmacies. Ryan said such a move would be a recognition of reality — a growing, somewhat shadowy business enterprise that he said is valued at $2.5 billion to $3 billion a year, far more than other estimates of the cross-border drug trade.

—Associated Press

Around the world

Greece

Bombings hit Athens 100 days before Summer Olympics

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — Greece's attempts to calm security fears about the Summer Olympics were rocked by three bombs that exploded before dawn yesterday — 100 days before the games begin.

The government assigned top anti-terrorist agents to investigate the bombings, which caused no injuries after damaging a suburban police station.

Officials insisted there was no link to the Aug. 13-29 Olympics and were likely carried out by self-styled anarchists or other domestic extremists.

The timing of the blasts, however, offered multiple Olympic ties.

Yesterday began the 100-day countdown to the opening ceremony. A Greek delegation, led by the public order minister and the head of the Greek police, is in Washington for talks on how to safeguard the first summer Olympics since the Sept. 11, 2001, attacks on the United States.

On Monday, the IOC is to begin its final review of Athens' preparations, which have been beset by construction delays and other glitches.

Petros Giannakouris/Associated Press
Three police officers stand outside the Panathenian marble stadium yesterday.

—Associated Press

Israel

Israel's attorney general lifts freeze on funding; Sharon works to push forward Gaza withdrawal plan

JERUSALEM (AP) — Israel's attorney general has lifted a freeze on funding for settlement construction in the West Bank and Gaza Strip after approving a monitoring system to ensure government money is not used for illegal projects, the Justice Ministry said yesterday.

The announcement came hours before the watchdog state comptroller released a detailed account of how the Housing Ministry has funneled millions of dollars for illegal settlement construction, including unauthorized outposts.

Also yesterday, Prime Minister Ariel Sharon was working on ways to push forward with his Gaza withdrawal plan after his Likud Party overwhelmingly rejected the proposal in a referendum this week.

In Gaza, there was new violence between the Israeli army and Palestinians. One Palestinian man was killed and 16 people were wounded, including a news photographer. Palestinian security sources said.

Israeli Prime Minister Ariel Sharon

—Associated Press

Afghanistan

Two foreign contractors helping United Nations killed

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — Two foreign contractors helping the United Nation prepare for landmark elections and their Afghan driver were killed in an attack in a remote eastern province, senior Afghan officials said yesterday.

The foreigners killed in Tuesday's attack were employees of Global Risk Strategies, a London-based security firm, said Farooq Wardak, the Afghan government's top election official. He didn't have the men's names or nationalities.

"I confirm that there was an attack by a number of people and two foreigners and one Afghan were killed," Deputy Interior Minister Hilalludin Hilal told The Associated Press.

Officials at Global Risk in London and Kabul had no immediate comment. A U.N. spokesman also declined to comment.

The company is surveying parts of rural Afghanistan as part of U.N. plans to register voters for September elections.

U.N. Wires Associated Press

—Associated Press

Hundreds of Iraqis protest prison

IRAQ from page 1

in fenced-in camps inside the walls, where rows of dirty tents line a field and men mill about chatting, washing or praying.

The prison was a notorious center for torture and killings during Saddam Hussein's rule.

As Miller spoke to reporters in cellblock 1A, where the photos showing prisoner abuse were taken, five women inmates yelled and waved their arms through the iron bars.

"I've been here five months," one woman shouted in Arabic. "I don't belong to the resistance. I have children at home."

At a tent camp used for detainees with medical conditions, prisoners ran out shouting. Some hobbled on crutches; one man waved his prosthetic leg overhead.

"Why? Why?" he shouted in Arabic. "Nobody has told me why I am here."

Another prisoner produced a bullhorn and read a statement in English.

"The problem of the Iraqi prisoners isn't only what is written in the news," the prisoner shouted. "Iraqi people need freedom, their dignity and their rights."

He complained of "random capturing from the streets," soldiers stealing property during raids on homes, "illogical questions with no relation to reality" and "mental and psychological interrogations for no obvious reasons."

Prison authorities did not allow the journalists to speak to or photograph detainees.

Outside the prison on the western edge of Baghdad, several hundred Iraqis protested the treatment of prisoners, gathering outside the main gate and chanting, "Democracy doesn't mean killing innocent people."

An AP reporter initially said there were about 2,000 demonstrators, but later AP estimates put the number at several hundred.

Running Out of Room? Roomate Invading Your Space?
Brand new concrete and steel College sized storage units $26/mo
Greenfield Secure Storage
1135 Bernardston Rd.
413-775-0074

STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE UMASS, AMHERST
HELPING STUDENTS PROTECT THEIR RIGHTS FOR 30 YEARS
Free Legal Advice Referrals Representation and Counseling for UMASS Students
Student & Workers Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
CALL 545-1995 or stop in at 922 Campus Center

STRUTTED

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

GRAPHICS
the Collegian is hiring for next semester

Come talk to Scott, Shannon, or Rachael or call 545-1864
105 Campus Center Basement
Freshmen and Sophomores are encouraged to apply

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MAY 6, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Disney's censorship will deprive America

If the people at ABC wonder why the network is floundering, they might want to look past their prime-time lineup, beleaguered as it may be. They may want to start asking questions of their parent company, the Disney Corporation.

In yesterday's New York Times, it was reported that Disney will block the Miramax film company, a Disney subsidiary, from distributing director Michael Moore's new film, "Fahrenheit 911," on the grounds that it is "against the interests of" the company, according to a senior executive. Essentially, it boils down to Disney's reluctance to release the film because it is too controversial, because it paints President Bush and his administration in a bad light.

Michael Moore has shown an uncanny knack for going against the grain. His boisterous speech at the Oscars a year ago was just one example of how the film director has been able to shout his often-controversial opinions from the nearest hilltop.

His films, such as "Bowling for Columbine" and "Roger and Me," as well as his books, "Stupid White Men" and "Dude, Where's My Country?" have created as much positive fervor as they have criticism. It is no secret that Moore's new film will very likely contain plenty of controversial material, and the Times reports that it criticizes Mr. Bush, and links the Bush family to that of Osama Bin Laden.

This is clearly not a film that will sit well with the Bush Administration.

Moore, who has become a thorn in the side of many people and corporations, is known for his no-holds-barred style, his gritty investigative reporting, and of course, his extremely anti-Bush stance. Moore's films and public appearances are often outrageous, and his outspoken style often lends to an air of sensationalism about his views.

However, he puts together very cogent arguments; he makes very clear points. While he often goes after people in high places, he has an obvious connection to the American common person. Moore has become a voice for the jobless, for those affected by the school gun tragedies, and for those who have felt generally alienated by the U.S. Government.

Now, that voice is being silenced in America, even as it thrives overseas, as a selection in the Cannes Film Festival. The only body that can disobey the First Amendment is the government. Any production company or media group has free reign to publish or not publish what it wants. Disney is certainly within its rights to say that Moore's film is unsuitable for distribution, and to refuse to even consider bringing the movie to light.

However, what is being lost here is the purpose of the First Amendment. Literal readers will say that the amendment is solely intended to protect the people from governmental censorship. And that may be true. But it should be asked: Why was the amendment written in the first place? The abstract concept is that dissenting, disagreeable opinions should hold the same value as the popular ones.

Michael Moore's film dissents from what the Bush Administration's general opinion, and because getting on the ugly side of the White House is such a frightening concept, Disney has backed off. It is a shame that the Disney management cannot see how important a film like Moore's is and how well it would do the company to be presented.

It is not important because the views expressed are right or wrong — this should not be a partisan battle. It is important because it gives another look at the most important topic in America for the last two years: the Bush Administration and its foreign policy. What Disney does not seem to be taking into consideration is the will and ability of the American people to sift through information and make its own decisions.

It is unfortunate that this low-level existed, and one can only hope that Moore's film finds a new home at a more courageous production company, so the American people, and not a few wealthy men in a boardroom, can make their own decisions.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

No sweat: Buy American

Gilad Skolnick

We've all heard it: the same ranting about how tiny, poor children work for hours upon hours a day in sweatshops for pennies to make our clothing. But it's easy to brush it aside. We don't know who these children are, and quite frankly, it's so impossible to find clothing that isn't made in a sweatshop. The shirt tag is so small and easy to ignore; some of our feeble friends even cut it off.

On the other hand, how can you sleep at night knowing you're walking around in something that was made by people for practically hardly any wages — just enough money so people can afford food, shelter and make it to the next day? How can you look at yourself in the mirror?

The common argument for sweatshops is that at least the people working in them have a job. It's said that if it wasn't for Gap or Nike building some sweatshop in Nicaragua or Mexico, then all those people would be unemployed.

That doesn't make it the right thing to do though.

Not to mention, if you (the U.S. resident) buy clothing made in the United States, then you're supporting your own economy; you're putting money back into your country. People can work in factories in the United States and make a living wage, instead of being either unemployed or flipping hamburgers in McDonalds for minimum wage.

Because of recent backlash of buying clothing from sweatshops, several companies have come up with the great idea of moving factories to the Marianas, a group of islands near Indonesia under American control. Many of U.S. laws in the States, such as a minimum wage, have not yet come into play in these areas. "Socially conscious" companies, such as Gap, Target and J.C. Penny, have flocked to these islands. There, they can make clothing with "made in the USA" labels, while at the same time paying slave wages.

But workers from nearby countries are promised high wages. In return, their companies pay a fee of about $7,000. The employees work to repay this fee, making them into indentured servants — or basically slaves.

According to Web research, they often must sign "shadow contracts" and waive basic human rights, including the freedom to join unions, attend religious services, quit or marry. Other sweatshops exist in our very own USA, in such places as New York City or Los Angelos. Often there, new immigrants lured by the promise of a better life are kept locked all day in factories illegally, subjected to terrible conditions and pay.

So you must be thinking, how do I, a confused and befuddled college student, find clothing not made in sweatshops?

So you must be thinking, how do I, a confused and befuddled college student, find clothing not made in sweatshops?

First, I'd like to suggest you try this new spiffy World Wide Web thing. Enter the Internet superhighway and go to sites such as Buyamerican.com, unionjeancompany.com and americanapparelstore.com. Each has clothing often made in the continental USA — by union workers who get livable, fair wages.

Moreover, companies like New Balance make many of their comfortable shoes in the United States, some even in Massachusetts, according to nbwebexpress.com. This is unlike Nike and Reebok, companies that don't make a single shoe in the United States, but can justify charging around $50-$70 a pair.

If you still fear the unpredictable Internet, you can walk over to the University of Massachusetts UStore. The people working there are fairly polite, and all the clothing is sweatshop free. That's part of the reason it's so expensive. Most of the UMass clothing is made in the USA, and the clothing that isn't made here is at least made by people who are fairly paid.

Across the country, the American textile industry has almost completely collapsed, as companies make more profits by paying their employees in China next to nothing. The U.S. factory workers, then, can only find lower paid retail jobs where they make much less an hour, and have less money to purchase things.

The prices don't even go down when companies move their factories abroad. Abercrombie and Fitch, if anything, constantly jacks up clothing prices. At the end, what goes around comes around: the jobless factory workers have less money to spend on your goods and services.

Who are we to complain about horrible ways people live in the world or the world's terrible conditions and poverty when we're causing it? This is not a democrat or republican issue, but something that both sides should be interested in. Next time you need some new clothing, I urge you to try being a bit more patriotic, and perhaps think about your school spirit.

Gilad Skolnick is a Collegian columnist.

Funeral for a friend

Thomas Naughton

I should have known something was wrong when I didn't receive the standard five phone calls from Billy, the guitarist of my band, on a day we were supposed to practice. Billy is a pushy guy; he knows how to get what he wants from people while still being pleasant. He's my only straight best friend. Not that I only run with gays, but coming from a small town, I never expected to have a friend like him. I called him to check up on things.

"Billy, what's up?" I said.

"Not much," he replied, and then paused for a time.

"Well, after I didn't hear from you every hour on the hour, I got worried, so are we practicing?" I asked trying to break through the awkward tension that had grown out of his uncharacteristic quietness.

"Well, no I don't think so, man, my ... well, something happened ... my dad died today."

I almost vomited after hearing this. I didn't even know Billy had a dad. I only knew his mom and that his parents were divorced. Billy never talked about his dad to me. I didn't know what to say.

I talked to him a little while longer and offered to go to his house, but he said he wanted to be alone. I hung up the phone in a haze. I knew I should go to his house despite what he said. When you play music with someone or create some kind of art with someone, it's rare that some kind of indestructible connection doesn't form. Billy and I complete each other's sentences musically; we think along the same lines. We're connected in a way that I can't appropriately articulate. It's not friendship; it's not sex; and it's not family. It's something different.

Because of this connection, I found myself in my car headed for Billy's house, praying silently in hopes that he wouldn't be mad at me for showing up. His girlfriend greeted me, and we both went downstairs. Billy kind of filled up when he saw me, ready to cry, the way you do when you see friendly faces during a rough time.

His father's death meant so many things. It meant that he really was the "man of the house" even though he basically played that role already because of his parent's divorce. But now it was different. He is William L. O'Brien Jr., his father's namesake. The weight on Billy, an eternally skinny boy, was clear in his puffy eyes and his soft voice.

I hugged Billy; I hugged him not only for the grief he was bearing, but also because it was kind, because he needed to have a friend be there for him, because it was the right thing to do. While hugging this guy who's friendship I never expected, I realized how strong my friends are, how strong people are and how dangerously lucky I am.

I am lucky because I have no idea what it is like to lose someone as close to me as a father or a best friend, unlike my friends, unlike many people I come in contact with daily. I have no grandparents; they passed before I could really and truly understand what was happening. A young man who killed himself while I was in high school was only an acquaintance of mine. I was there for my friends who were really devastated by his terrible departure, but I had no idea what it was like.

I know that someday I will have the unfortunate occasion to lose someone close to me, and I know it will be devastating. I look at my friends who have dealt with traumatic experiences in life and stayed strong in the face of such trauma, and I am amazed.

I think of my friend Airline (yes, his name is Airline) who doesn't know his mother and whose father has passed away. He is one of the most brightly energetic people I know, and it's amazing to me. It's not that I think that people who have lost their parents would or should be in a constant state of paralyzing grief, but if I lost my parents, I would be in terrible shape. Airline may not be as happy as he lets on, but his ability to even attempt to put on a front impresses me.

I think of my friend, Anne, who is one of seven or eight (or perhaps more) children, all by different fathers. She has led a considerably normal life with her biological father who loves her dearly. Her ability to deal with her mother's history of drug abuse, alcoholism, careless sex and the resulting births of children into such an environment dumbfounds me. She has no relationship with her mother, and she doesn't want to. I see in her this need to be what her mother wasn't, someone who will make it.

I guess we are all the sum of our experiences, traumatic and otherwise, but for someone who holds onto pain so hard, I am continually inspired by people who can let go of this pain, who can hang onto the world around them when those who they have needed have gone away.

I drove up to the wake for Billy's father with a lump in my throat. I didn't want to see his mom in black; I didn't want to see Billy looking tired and horribly sad, having not slept in days; I didn't want to see Billy's younger brother, Mike, hanging around by himself; I didn't want to see the body of a man I never met in a casket.

I saw all these things as I walked in, and I wanted to cry so bad at that moment. I wanted to cry because it wasn't fair, because it's never fair. A young man, not even 18, should not be spending time with his dad while he lays lifeless in a casket. I walked over to Bill. I hugged him again, this time harder, in comfort and private wordless anger at fate or God or whoever who had brought Billy to this place.

It's been a year since his father's death and I know Billy thinks of him every day. He is still the same pushy Billy; he can live his life, of course, because he is a strong person, because we learn from pain that we must continue living. There are some moments, however, when I can see it, when I can see Billy re-living the moment he learned that his dad had died. I am frightened when I see that in his face because I know I will share experiences like that in my own life. But what happens later calms my fears — Billy comes out of it; he comes back to his normal self, and he goes on living.

Thomas Naughton is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

The Yankee nation speaks out

ANGRY AT GENERALIZATION

The article "The problem with Yankees fans" that appeared on Tuesday sparked some fury inside me that made me realize why people in this world are so ignorant. It is because people like Michelle Rivera who wrote the article attack a whole generalized group of people.

I found it very insulting for someone to say Yankees fans are all moronic and that she hates them all. Excuse me, you do not know me to say that you hate me just because I am a Yankees fan, and I am far from being moronic. I was not the one startling the riots in Southwest at the beginning of the year because the Red Sox had just won. So to say that us Yankees fans are moronic and have no class, I'll just say it takes one to know one.

And you're right, it is only May. And I will continue to say it until I am blue in the face! As long as a Sox fan continues to rub their victory in my face, my response is and will always be, "so what ... it's only May."

In response to the comment about the Yankees caps: GET OVER IT! Everyone has the right to wear whatever hat they want. Have you ever heard of freedom of speech? Would you yell at people who wear BC, UConn or any other colleges' caps at UMass? Who are you to tell me what I can and cannot wear?

And so what if you see a blonde wearing a Yankees cap who doesn't know any of the players' names. I could say the same for the blonde wearing a Sox cap who can't name two players, excluding Pedro. All I can say is, either deal with the Yankee fans at UMass, or get out!

Jess Kilson
UMass student

LONG LIVE THE EVIL EMPIRE

Although I usually try to stay out of this debate, I feel that as a life-long Yankees fan it is my duty to speak up for my team. Michelle Rivera's rant was a typical example of what makes Red Sox fans poor losers.

She criticizes Steinbrenner for buying talent. May I remind everyone that Major League Baseball is not a game; it is a business, a business based on making money. Realistically, Steinbrenner is a hell of a businessman. Success is never guaranteed; it is earned by the organization. It's always nice to watch a player grow within an organization, or at least stay with a team for a long period of time, like Mattingly, Derek Jeter, Mariano Rivera, Bernie Williams, Jorge Posada, Tino Martinez, Paul O'Neill, and the recently departed Andy Pettitte all did.

As far as our "it's only May" response, if Red Sox Nation didn't act like they won the World Series after taking two regular season series from the Yankees, then there would be no need for the comment. I know you will never be gracious losers, but at least try to be gracious winners. For the record, the Red Sox technically do suck. Although they've had many chances, they've been winless for 85 years. They're pretty good at choking. To say that the Yankees suck is just stupidly ironic.

Rivera's question about "What right do you think you have parading around in a Yankees cap" doesn't even deserve a response, although maybe Hitler would have something to say about that because he wasn't a big fan of differences in opinion either. Regarding the blonde girls in Yankees hats, all I can say is that there is a difference between real fans and people who simply wear the merchandise. It's what happens when teams consistently win: they garner a bandwagon following. So why don't we discuss the real problem? Girls who wear pink Red Sox hats. Every time I go to Fenway a sea of pink surrounds me. If you're going to represent your team at least do it in their actual colors!

I suppose that, come October, we will see who sucks this year. Thankfully I will not be around to see what idiotic response will come next from Red Sox Nation when things don't go their way. Until then ... Long live the Evil Empire.

Ryan Kelly
UMass student

CHOOSE LOVE, NOT HATE

Michelle says that there is nothing she won't do to support the Red Sox, but making biased comments with little to no creditability doesn't support Boston, the Red Sox, their fans, baseball, or anyone else.

Michelle, the baseball season is six months long. Saying it's only May is a valid statement. Nothing is certain till September. If Michelle's comments weren't so filled with hate, perhaps she'd realize that.

As for the "Red Sox Suck" chants, that is obviously a direct response to Red Sox fans constantly chanting "Yankees Suck." Enough said.

Michelle's final paragraph is truly disturbing. Yankees hats can be worn in Massachusetts, and Red Sox hats can be worn in NY. There are no boundaries to hat wearing. Be proud of your team where ever you are. But the Yankees interlocking NY stands for more than just the Yankees; it is a symbol for NY. It's great that their logo can mean more to people than just a baseball club. And to insult former Mayor Guiliani and the FDNY as well as the NYPD is simply disgraceful.

I question Michelle's commitments. It seems like she is more concerned with hating the Yankees than loving the Red Sox. Michelle chooses hate over love, a scary choice. It shows where your heart truly is. If Do you want the Red Sox to win, or are you simply content with the Yankees losing? I'm a student at UMass who has witnessed the Red Sox nation up close. But I don't hate the Red Sox, I just love the Yankees.

Peter Bernstein
UMass student

PRIDE FROM JERSEY

Coming from New Jersey, I like many others, have been criticized about being a Yankees fan. It was extremely hard to become friends with other students from Massachusetts because as soon as they found I was from NJ, it all went down hill. So don't tell me that Yankees fans are so horrible!

Comments from Sox fans that the Yankees buy their wins is ridiculous. The Red Sox have the second highest payroll. And you can't tell me that they aren't trying to buy a championship because it's obvious that they are.

What really ticked me off was "enough with the Police Department and Fire Department Yankees cap already." I'm guessing since Michelle isn't from the Tri-State Area, that she didn't know anyone killed by the 9/11 attacks. A lot of my friends lost friends and family and a majority were police, fire fighters and EMTs helping out. I am not saying that people outside weren't affected because I know they were. I am just saying that something like that should never be brought up in defense of the Red Sox.

For all you Yankees fans (and other teams of course) wear your team's logos and wear them proudly!

Karalyn Walk
UMass student

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MAY 6, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Multicultural Film Festival ends with Oscar nominee

By Randy Allain
Collegian Correspondent

A semester-long campus film festival will culminate in the showing of an Oscar-nominated documentary tonight.

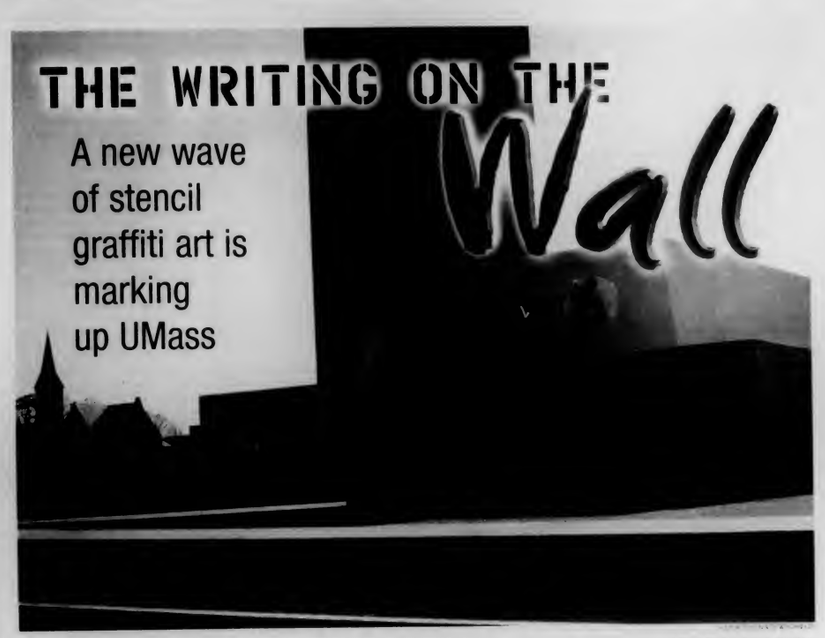
The Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival, organized by the University of Massachusetts Interdepartmental Program in Film Studies, will screen "My Architect" as the final film in this year's series.

The film tells the story of architect legend Louis I. Kahn, who died alone and bankrupt in a Penn Station bathroom in 1974. Kahn is famous for buildings he designed throughout the world: the Salk Institute for Biological Studies in southern California; the National Assembly Building in Dhaka, Bangladesh.

The story is told by Kahn's illegitimate son, director Nathaniel Kahn, through visits to buildings his father designed as well as his old hangouts. Through his filming, the director is able to get a better sense of his father, whose obituary didn't even list him as a survivor.

This well-renowned film is the perfect choice to round out the semester-long event, according to festival organizers.

"We try to choose a film that we know is going to be a crowd pleaser," said Nancy Inouye, assistant curator of the event. According to Inouye, "My Architect" fits well into this year's theme: "The Global Lens."



The festival presents a wide scope of issues by focusing on international co-productions, as well as providing a special forum for documentary film. It is composed of various independent, documentary, animated and avant-garde films. Each film is shown with an introduction by someone involved in the film's production or an expert in its subject matter.

"It really enriches the experience," Inouye explained.

"My Architect" is co-sponsored by the Art department and will be introduced by Max Page, an Associate Professor of Architecture and History.

Page's involvement follows a festival pattern of involving

See FILM on page 7

The University of Massachusets campus has suddenly become a canvas for the newest wave of graffiti art to hit major cities such as New York and Los Angeles. One example, shown above, marks a bench on top of the Campus Center steps. Below is a closer look a the unique stencil graffiti art.

By Nate Walsh
Collegian Correspondent

Stenciled graffiti has been appearing mysteriously around campus, leaving people to question whether it's vandalism or the work of a guerrilla artist.

In the past two months, stenciled images of a mustached man aiming a gun, skulls and even a car with a caption reading, "turbo-love for living" have appeared around campus. They've been found on staircases around central dormitories, on cement walls near the Campus Center

Hotel and the Fine Arts Center. Though little is known about the artists or artists, he or they are getting attention.

"They're defacing the campus," said Larry Snyder, associate director of the Physical Plant Building and Grounds Services. "It detracts from the looks of the campus."

Snyder said he and his staff worry about campus "curb appeal" and prosecuting, because the graffiti costs monies. Mobilizing the grounds crew to clean graffiti off walls "takes painters out of buildings," said Snyder.

But not everybody sees the graffiti as vandalism.

"I don't really know what the phantom UMass stencil guys is all about," said Larry Kaufman, a junior music major. "He's just pimping his gear, homeslice," says Kaufman, trying to explain the motives behind the artist.

Images such as these resemble a wave of graffiti arts that began appearing more frequently in the global mainstream art world in the last few years in major cities such as London and Los Angeles. For examples, artist Shepard Fairey started up in Rhode Island by making stickers and stencils of the face "Andrew The Giant" with the caption "obey" under his face. He reproduced the image everywhere and brought "obey giant revolution" to the masses, covering the urban cityscapes with his artwork. This "revolution" swept across the country without a real message ever being attached to the image.

Fairey uses his art to make people question things. The way people perceive his art may be different from the traditional way the public may be used to seeing art. His Web site (obeygiant.com) states: "The medium is the message." The interpretation of Fairey's work carries many ideas.

According to Kaufman, "He's making a statement using iconography. He wants the viewer to question why certain, specific images infer something larger than the image itself. It's just there. It doesn't mean anything. It means whatever you want it to mean."

The United Kingdom responded to Fairey's work with it's own heralded mysterious graffiti artist: Banksy, who made headlines last October by sneaking an oil painting to which he added a twist of his own, into the Tate art museum. According to the United Kingdom's Guardian Unlimited, Banksy vandalized a painting featuring a rural setting by painting blue and

See GRAFFITI on page 6

Ten seasons. Six friends. One ending.

Brace yourselves.

It's been a rough few weeks and in the next 24 hours it's only going to get worse.

I'm sure that everywhere you turn you, like me, are being inundated with "Friends"-mania.

You, like me, may be sick of hearing the cliches or listening to the people at the table next to you in the Bluewall debate the Ross/Rachel drama.

If you still watch you too may be annoyed by the way that the characters, especially Monica and Ross, seem to have become caricatures of themselves.

And if you don't watch anymore, or never did, you probably can't wait for this whole thing to be over. But regardless of what terms you're on with them, the finale of "Friends" is a moment of television history.

I am by no means an avid television watcher. In fact, I haven't really gotten into a "new" show since "Will and Grace" premiered on NBC a few years back. In high school, I had a whole list of TV favorites, shows I made it a point to watch, but in the past three years at college two jobs, five classes and an actual life have greatly interrupted that schedule. Of the shows that I used to watch on a regular basis just two made it into my college days: "Sex and the City" and "Friends."

Meghan Healy

Like many of my actual friends, the loss of TV's favorite "Friends" is both a blessing and a point of sorrow for me. On the one hand ... it's time. It's been time for a couple seasons now. Yet with the demise of "Friends" it seems comes the death of the 30-minute sitcom.

It seems like America doesn't want to get in, get their laughs and get out any more. Our expectations for television shows are higher than ever. We, as viewers, are not content with the standard few laughs, cut to commercial, a few more laughs, cut to another commercial, learn a valuable lesson, roll credits formula of sitcom making any longer.

We want a broad range of emotions to be touched upon. We want quality writing, elaborate special effects. We want all the thrills and excitement of a feature film without the establishing of plot or characters ... and minus the cost. Thanks to the new trend of hour-long dramas, viewers are handed digestible bits of movie-quality TV we can consume without leaving our dorms or homes.

Yes, the new trend in television seems to be hour-long dramas. On an average night TV watchers tune into "24" and the 400 variations of "Law and Order." They spend an hour at "The OC" and with firefighters and doctors on shows like "Third Watch" and "ER." The slew of semi-scripted voyeurism that is reality television seems to be taking over American networks 60 minutes at a time. From weekly serials like "Joe Millionaire" and "Survivor" to shows like "American Idol," which appears on Fox twice a week. And what's more, most of the sitcoms that are worth their time/slots seemed to be aimed at a family demographic.

Beyond the wit of shows like "Will and Grace" and "Malcolm in the Middle" few sitcoms have proven to have the longevity or attraction of the "Friends" crew. As far as 30-minute, prime time situation come-

See FRIENDS on page 7

Campbell returns to his cheeseball comedy roots

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

"Bubba Ho-Tep" has a premise so spectacularly strange, so out-of-the-box bizarre, that it seems as though the movie was intentionally designed to play at your local midnight show. Based on the short story by the horror writer Joe R. Lansdale, the movie — bless it's skewed little heart — is a brazenly eccentric cult movie cocktail: one part cheeseball horror, one part comedy, and one part poetic drama, all stirred into one Fringe Cinema Margarita.

'Bubba Ho-Tep'
Directed by Don Coscarelli
Starring Bruce Campbell, Ossie Davis
Vinegar Syndrome Films
Rated R
92 mins
Grade B+

It's no surprise that "Bubba Ho-Tep" seems to be such a from-the-kit cult thriller; it was directed by Don Coscarelli — the guy who gave us the flying silver balls and yellow-blooded demon dwarves of the four rather incoherent "Phantasm" films — and stars Bruce Campbell, the square-jawed mascot for B-list actors and underground films everywhere (he's probably best known as Ash in Sam Raimi's deviously witty "Evil Dead" films.) Campbell, who looks like he could be the hero on the cover of a '50s pulp magazine, also happens to be a terrific actor. If Campbell hadn't been given the lead in the bizarre mishmash that is "Bubba Ho-Tep" then the film would have been just another low-budget curiosity. Cambpell manages to ground the film in a real world soulfulness that gives it renewed life.

In the world of Lansdale and Coscarelli, Elvis Presley never really died. Existentially detached from his fame and popularity, a bored King switched places with an impersonator named Sebastian Haff. Now Elvis is aging and decrepit, whittling away his days in a rotten East Texas old age home, barely able to walk after a fall broke his hip and wondering exactly what the growth on his, uh, manhood is.

Coscarelli frames this old age home with an acute sense of place. The home is tired and worn, with a skeletal staff and tiny population of doddering, forgotten residents. With its barren, dully wallpapered walls, all bureaucratic purposefulness and little humanity, the home has the feel of the last stop of the dying. This is the land where the old are hustled away to be forgotten.

Elvis cannot get anyone to believe that he really was the King — no one, except for Jack (Ossie Davis), an elderly African-American man who's convinced he's really John F. Kennedy (he was dyed after a failed assassination attempt by Lyndon Johnson.) The two crotchety old men are brothers-in-misfithood and they develop a sense of purpose in their waning lives when they uncover a horrific mystery: an ancient Egyptian, soul-sucking mummy is prowling the halls and corridors, stealing life from the easy prey at it's disposal.

"Bubba Ho-Tep" is indeed a movie in which a septuagenarian Elvis and an old black JFK battle an evil desiccated cadaver. It's the silliest of premises, but Coscarelli, to his infinite credit, doesn't let the movie slip into cartoonish ridiculousness (too much.) In fact, he uses the broad supernatural plot to develop his commentary on the stage of aging in the world today, who older people are generally abused, forgotten and condescended too, as if they were trash to be discarded.

"Bubba Ho-Tep" is a very (intentionally) funny motion picture, but, unexpectedly, is a very moving one too. Campbell gives Elvis a damaged dignity mixed with a randy, sharp wit and he has a great deal of chemistry with Davis, who gives equal footing to his equally ludicrous-sounding JFK character; each man has been developed as a real human being and not as a caricature.

Ironically, the one area where "Bubba Ho-Tep" stumbles is in its horror. The titular monster has blackened skin stretched taught over angular joints and it looks good — but it isn't scary. It comes across more as a really well made wax attraction at a Halloween theme park ride. The giant scarab beetles that Ho-Tep employs as his minions look like they flew in from an Ed Wood film: when they fly, they look very, very fake.

But here's the thing with the strange, wacky, offbeat world of "Bubba Ho-Tep": here you get to see a cult classic being born.

New wave of graffiti art hits UMass

GRAFFITI from page 5

COURTESY NATE WALSH

Examples of the stencil graffiti art is visible all over campus such as the one above on a call-box outside the greenhouses.

white police tape over it. He later glued the painting to the museum wall, where it went unnoticed until it fell to the floor hours later. The Bristolian artist has also taken credit for doing such attention-getting acts as painting a sign reading "DESIGNATED RIOT AREA" on a statue in a city park.

These artists raise the age-old question: What is art? Art can adapt to almost any form. In the case of graffiti, it's illegal. It can be considered vandalism, yet that doesn't mean that it isn't art. Banksy has been heralded for his art that appears to be vandalism.

But does UMass have its own Banksy? If so, there are a few words of advice that Banksy offers to stencil artists.

"Remember crime against property is not real crime," states Banksy's Web site. "People look at an oil painting and admire the use of brushstrokes to convey meaning. People look at a graffiti painting and admire the use of a drainpipe to gain access."

Banksy's Web site talks very candidly about the illegality of his art, but the fact it's illegal doesn't seem to deter him.

"The time of getting fame for your name on its own is over," Banksy's Web site (banksy.co.uk) had posted as a message to aspiring stencil artists. "Artwork that is only about wanting to be famous will never make you famous. Any fame is a byproduct of making something that means something."

Such artists are known but to a few, and for that reason, this type of art form seems less about making a name for oneself, and more about the art speaking for itself. People don't hear the artist's name first and then respond, as happens in other media; the art itself must stand alone. In addition, art is placed like advertisements, brought to the people so the people don't have to seek it out. As a result, the illegality of the art form seems to create something pure in the world of commercialized art.

Both Shepard Fairey and Banksy have been labeled by some as "sell-outs" for profiting from their art, and garnering a name for themselves.

In fact, Shepard Fairey has recently started his own clothing line.

"What I try to emphasize is the street art as the primary focus, not the clothing line," Fairey stated in an interview with Art Prostitute magazine. "The clothing line is designed to augment the street art, not the other way around."

The UMass graffiti artists may not be selling T-shirts, but the work slowly is being noticed. The mark of the graffiti artist is all around you. Look closely at your surroundings the next time you're out on campus. And graffiti artists should also remember that not everyone is receptive to their art, and that it can carry negative consequences.

FRUGAL FRIDAY!

JOIN US FOR OUR SPECIAL SALES EVENT
FRIDAY, May 7TH

ONE DAY ONLY!

BUY 1 CLOTHING OR GIFT ITEM and get an item of equal or lesser value 50% OFF!*

UMASS AMHERST University of Massachusetts UNIVERSITY STORE
Campus Center • Phone: (413) 545-2619
www.umass.bkstr.com

*Does not apply to sale items, regular priced merchandise only. Not valid with any other offer.

The International Award Winning
Commencement Ball 2004
Friday, May 21, 2004
7:00 pm to 12:30 am, Student Union Complex
A Night to Remember!

Former Vice President Gore to launch cable news channel for youth

By Alan Sayre
Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — An investor group headed by former Vice President Al Gore said Tuesday it is buying a cable channel and launching a news network that will offer "irreverent and bold" programming for young adults.

The group is buying the Newsworld International channel from Vivendi Universal Entertainment for an undisclosed sum. The deal with Gore's company, INdTV Holdings, was announced during a cable industry convention in New Orleans.

Newsworld International is a 24-hour channel broadcasting international news produced by the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. It is seen in about 17 million North American households, according to Vivendi.

www.dailycollegian.com

What do YOU care about?
Here's your chance to learn how to DO SOMETHING about it...FREE
The Massachusetts Democratic State Convention comes to UMass Amherst!
Hasbrouck Auditorium • Saturday, May 8 • 10am-5pm
No charge
No delegate credentials required
Your valid college ID is all that is needed to get you access to this program.
Meet and greet
Legislators, Democratic Party officials, fellow activists from throughout Massachusetts.
Express your views
Ample opportunity for questions and discussion at all training sessions.
Free training sessions on campaigning and organization
Sessions all day long presenting the special challenges and opportunities for younger activists
• 10:30am Campaigns 101 You've volunteered on more campaigns than you can count and now you're finally in charge. A how to for first time campaign managers
• 1:15pm Being the Youngest Person in the Room Working in politics can be intimidating, especially when you are the new kid on the block. A discussion on making your voice heard when you are the youngest person in the room
• 2:45pm Running Young and Winning Young people make great candidates and elected officials...have you thought about running? A session with elected officials under the age of 35
More info: www.massdems.org
Paid for and authorized by the Massachusetts Democratic Party Phillip W. Johnston, Chair
MASSACHUSETTS DEMOCRATIC PARTY

'Eve' takes a critical look at her friends, men and herself

Q: I was dating this guy for a while, and he was really nice to me. He looked good, smelled good, was smart, fun to talk to, and was great in bed. Until one day he stopped calling me. Just like that. He didn't return any of my calls, ignored my text messages, and so on. So I moved on. I was really sad for a while, and then just left it. That was over two months ago. But now he sends me a text message a week ago, as if nothing happened, suggesting we meet. What should I do?

A: I think you have already answered your question. Don't go back to him. He seems like the type who is not quite worthy of your love and there is definitely better out there. What he did seems cruel and unfair to you.

But, if he is still persistent, you should ask him for an explanation and see what he says. Maybe whatever he says will make you feel better, but I don't think it's a good idea to get involved again.

Original Sin
Eve

I am fortunate enough to have two very close friends that get along with each other. However, our clandestine relationship provokes a lot of criticism from one another that cannot always be ignored. But isn't that what friends are for? I respect a friend that judges my decisions, and I expect to be heard in return. And I admit, it is frustrating when a close friend refuses to hear and I, in return, must pick up the pieces. It is hard for me to keep my mouth closed when I see a friend making a bad decision. Sometimes, they cannot see. So maybe now they might hear.

There we were; the three of us sitting around a rectangular table, anxiously waiting for the first person to speak. I could not help but start when I noticed a new ring with a crystal setting on my girlfriend's right hand.

"Please tell me that was an heirloom," I said in dismay. But she did not have to answer, for she knew I already had a good idea of what it was. I met her last year and we have been inseparable since. She is an incredibly loyal friend and a wonderful girlfriend in a relationship. But no one is perfect. She needs a guy to make her feel confident. Any guy. And apparently this new guy is her newfound security blanket.

"I don't like him, but why not take a present if he wishes to give it to me? Don't I deserve this after all the pain I have been through?" I had to take a very deep breath before I could answer. I cannot believe she said this. How could a friend of mine justify using a nice guy for her convenience? And since when is it OK to put principle morals on hold and excuse it by one past bad experience? I didn't know what to say, but I guess she is not quite ready to hear. So I stopped talking.

Our other friend knew it was his neck on the block when he tried to compare his situation to hers. We both glared at him in astonishment and the conversation turned to him. He is our gay friend, who enjoys girl talk and man hunting. We spend most of our time comparing our experiences with men and previous dates. However, he is technically forbidden on the dating scene. He has a long-distance relationship with a wonderful man, but tends to forget this in the heat of the moment.

"How can you be with other men if you claim to be in love?" He excuses his actions by assuming his boyfriend may be doing the same. "But what if he isn't? What if he has been good all along? How would you live with yourself?" And how could anyone justify cheating on another person? I could never intentionally hurt someone I love, and it saddened me to see that he forgot the hurt I felt when it happened to me. My girlfriend and I agreed that their relationship ended at his first dishonest act. It is just a matter of time before he loses.

In all fairness, I have more character flaws than both of them together. And my friends are not afraid to share. I can be selfish at times, I am critical of myself and others, and I am frivolous with my heart. There is a lot more, but my biggest flaw is my taste in men. It is rare a friend will approve a guy I date, and it is common they become frustrated when I let a good guy pass me by. And most of the time, I find it hard to listen. As our battle of the sexes came to a close, we toasted to friendship. And I can only hope that one day we might toast to good friends with utilized advice.

Eve is pen name for a love guru attending UMass who knows the ins and outs of every relationship. You can ask Eve for advice by e-mailing her at eve_originalsin@yahoo.com. "Original Sin with Eve" runs every Thursday in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

Multicultural Film Festival concludes various facets of the Five College community. Earlier films were co-sponsored by UMass Afro-American Studies, Judaic and Near-Eastern Studies, and theater departments; the Political Economy Research Institute (PERI); Amherst College English and Russian departments, and Mount Holyoke film studies and History departments.

FILM from page 5

This is the 11th consecutive year that the Multicultural Film Festival has occurred on campus during spring semester. Although it is organized through the Film Studies department, the festival receives support both from across campus and throughout the Five-College system. Every year this support allows the festival to set a high standard to live up to.

"My Architect" lost the 2004 Oscar for best documentary feature to "Fog of War" by Errol Morris and Michael Williams. Although Kahn's film was recognized in the glamour of the Oscars, festival organizers feel that the film exists outside of the commercially-driven world of Hollywood cinema.

"[The festival] is presenting the best of new international fiction, documentary and experimental filmmaking beyond the Hollywood paradigm," according to the festival's press release. "We challenge English language-dominated and box-office driven productions, and invite our audience to explore and debate these vibrant multinational co-productions and collaborations."

"These are not [films] you are going to see at the multiplex," said Inouye.

The festival's success this year could be seen in the turnout for, "Still, The Children Are Here," for which both the producer and director visited campus.

"There were so many people, we were turning them away at the doors," Inouye said.

Similar success came with the visit of Israel Horovitz, the father of Beastie Boy Adam Horovitz. An award-winning playwright, Horovitz spoke as part of the film festival series and taught two master classes during his time on the UMass campus.

Plans for next year's events will not begin until the summer, according to festival coordinators.

"We spend the summer and fall [attending film festivals] because we show generally all new films," Inouye said. Coordinators will attend several major international film festivals, including the Los Angeles and Toronto film festivals.

The last installment of the festival can be seen at 7:30 p.m. tonight in the Isenberg School of Management, room 137.

'Friends' ends a 10-year run

FRIENDS from page 5

dies are concerned, after these two you're pretty much at the bottom of the barrel.

So, the tragic thing about "Friends" signing off is not that there will be nothing to watch on Thursday nights, but that the last moments of the series will truly symbolize the end of an era. In the 10 years since Rachel, clad in a sopping-wet wedding gown, ran into the Central Perk, few other sitcoms have really clicked with viewers. There is no suitable replacement for avid "Friends" viewers to cling to and it doesn't look like the prime-time lineups of major networks are looking very hard to find one.

Meghan Healy is a Collegian staff member.

ASSOCIATED PRESS/NBC/MARK SELIGER

Shown from left are Jennifer Aniston as Rachel, Matt Le Blanc as Joey, David Schwimmer as Ross, Lisa Kudrow as Pheobe, Matthew Perry as Chandler, and Courteney Cox Arquette as Monica. The series' hour-long conclusion airs on NBC tonight at 9 p.m.

RESCHEDULED

Comedian Margaret Cho will hit the stage of the Fine Arts Center Monday at 8 p.m. Rescheduled from May 3, the show is being presented by the Distinguished Visitors Program. Tickets for the show are $30 for UMass students with proper ID, $35 Five College students with ID and $25 for general public.

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors

Beer:	Wine:	Liquor:
Coors & Coors Light 30 pk cans...$18.49*	Moet & Chandon 750 ml...$29.99	Johnnie Walker Red 1.75 liter...$32.99
Rolling Rock 2/12pk btl...$15.99*	Casa Lapostolle Cuvee Alexandre Chardonnay 750 ml...$12.99	Johnnie Walker Black 750 ml...$27.99
Busch & Busch Light 30 pk cans...$13.99*	Beaulieu Vineyards Napa Valley Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 750 ml...$11.99	Ciroc Snap Frost Vodka 750 ml...$24.99
Keystone 30 pk cans...$13.49*	Sterling Vineyards Sauvignon Blanc 750 ml...$9.99	Hennessy Cognac 750 ml...$23.99
Coors Light 20 pk btl...$12.99*	Beaulieu Vineyards Coastal Zinfandel 750 ml...$8.99	Tanqueray #10 Gin 750 ml...$22.99
Millwaukee's Best 30 pk cans...$10.99*	Barton & Guestier Reserve Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 750 ml...$7.99	UV Vodka 1.75 lt...$15.99
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl...$10.99*	Jacob's Creek Cabernet, Shiraz, Merlot, Chardonnay 750 ml...$6.99	"99" Schnapps 750 ml...$11.99
Red Stripe 12 pk btl...$10.99*	Wild Pig Chardonnay and Shiraz 750 ml...$5.99	Malibu Coconut Rum all flavors 750 ml...$11.99
Heineken 12 pk btl...$10.99*

*all beer prices plus deposit

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 5/6 THROUGH 5/12
Now Open Sundays Noon to 11pm

Not only is the Alumni Association a great way to keep in touch with other UMASS graduates, but also a way to reap these key benefits: Kaplan Test Preparation Courses- Preparing for grad school? You will receive a $100 discount on Kaplan test preparation courses for the GRE, LSAT, GMAT, MCAT & DAT. Further details on website!
Sign Up located at Textbook Annex during Cap & Gown pickups (May 3- 21) and at the Campus Center Commencement Ball Ticket Sales (April 26-May14)
UMASS Alumni Association www.UMassAlumni.com (800) 456.UMASS
Alumni Relations, Memorial Hall, University of Massachusetts, 134 Hicks Way, Amherst, MA 01003

STA Travel's Best of Summer
> This ain't your parents' summer vacation.
»Europe
The total trip: 7 countries...11 days
• INT air to London From Los Angeles or New York From $1,355
• Contiki's European Magic, an 11-day tour through Belgium, Netherlands, Germany, Austria, Italy, Switzerland and France
TRAVEL DATES from LA from NY
Apr 01 Jun 15 $1,485 $1,385
Jun 16 Aug 31 $1,725 $1,585
Special Student Airfare: Apr - Jun / Jun - Oct
London $315 $527
Paris $315 $527
Amsterdam $315 $527
Cheap Sleeps:
London St. Christopher's Village $28/night
Paris Aloha Hostel $34/night
Rail:
Eurail Flexipass (10 days in 2 months) $498
Eurailpass (15 days) $414
»Australia (and New Zealand)
Oz Explorer: Sydney to Cairns your way
• Air to Sydney From Los Angeles or New York, return from Cairns From $1,259
• OZ Experience Caboer Bus Pass: a flexible hop-on/hop-off pass from Sydney to Cairns For travel up to 12 months
TRAVEL DATES from LA from NY
Apr 01 - Jun 15 $1,259 $1,588
Jun 28 - Jul 20 $1,378 $1,628
Special Student Airfare: Apr - Jun / Jun - Oct
Auckland $315 $527
Sydney $315 $527
Melbourne $315 $527
Cheap Sleeps:
Auckland Central Backpackers $18/night
Sydney Wake Up! Hostel $23/night
Melbourne Bakpak Hostel $29/night
Cairns Billabong Hostel & Resort $20/night
»Adventure
"Best of Peru" 9 days of Inca & Machu Pichu
• INT air to Lima From Los Angeles or New York From $1,595
• Tucan Travel's Peruvian Trails: a 9-day exploration of the Incan Empire and the famous Inca Trail
TRAVEL DATES from LA from NY
Apr 01 Jun 30 $1,660 $1,595
Jul 01 - Aug 15 $1,725 $1,680
Special Student Airfare: Apr - Jun / Jun - Oct
San Jose $315 $527
Bangkok $315 $527
Cape Town $315 $527
Cheap Sleeps:
San Jose Pangea House $14/night
Bangkok Vengtip Hotel $10/night
Cape Town Ashanti Lodge $14/night
Santiago La Casa Roja $8/night
STUDENT
The airfare listed on the right side of this advertisement are for departure from Boston. The packages on the left of this advertisement are accessible from your local metro area but the rates will be more or less than those advertised prices. Check with your local STA store for rates departing from your local metro area. All fares are subject to change and availability. Taxes and other applicable fees are not included. Restrictions & blackouts apply. Fares are valid for students and youth under 26. ISIC/IYTC card may be required.
Check out our "Best of Summer" and "Let's Go" brochures
BOOK YOUR TRIP NOW!
Room 224 Campus Center Way
1 Campus Center Way
University of Massachusetts
(413) 256.1261
STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com
ONLINE • ON THE PHONE • ON CAMPUS • ON THE STREET

Bonds unaffected by steroid talk, may retire after 2005

JEFF CHIU/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Barry Bonds, shown hitting a home run off of Florida's Brad Penny, says talk of steroids in baseball doesn't effect his performance.

BONDS from page 10

Stadium?

"If George wanted me, he would've paid for me a long, long time ago," he said. "I'm a bad influence for George, I guess."

After he's done playing, Bonds said he wants to stay involved in baseball, on his own terms.

"I'll probably go help college kids," he said. "I don't want to coach, I just want to help."

For now, though, Bonds has plenty of games left.

And while many people track his home runs, others are wondering whether he could become the first big leaguer to hit .400 since Ted Williams in 1941.

"I've never seen it done. It's too difficult," he said. "It could possibly be done, but it'd take a lot."

Bonds said a lot has changed on and off the field since Williams achieved the feat. Along with more hectic travel schedules, there are different strategies — opponents using more pitchers, plus intentional walks.

Bonds has drawn 44 walks, including 22 intentional passes, in the Giants' 27 games. He said the game still was fun despite teams taking the bat out of his hands.

"Pick your poison," he said. "You can walk me or see it go."

Bulger signs new deal

ST. LOUIS (AP) — Marc Bulger agreed to a four-year contract with the St. Louis Rams.

The Rams did not disclose terms of the deal.

In 15 starts last season, Bulger threw for an NFC-best 3,845 yards on 336-of-532 passing.

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Former Penn State quarterback Kevin Thompson was signed by the New York Giants as a free agent.

Thompson, who did not play in 2003, has played in one NFL game. A former co-captain at Penn State, Thompson was signed by the Cleveland Browns as a rookie free agent in 2000 and completed his only NFL pass.

BASEBALL

SEATTLE (AP) — The Seattle Mariners released right-hander Kevin Jarvis.

The Mariners also recalled right-hander Rafael Soriano from a minor league rehabilitation assignment and placed infielder Willie Bloomquist on the 15-day disabled list, retroactive to Sunday, with a strained lower back.

The 34-year-old Jarvis was 1-0 with an 8.31 ERA in eight relief appearances this season.

SEATTLE (AP) — The Seattle Mariners exercised manager Bob Melvin's 2005 option despite their poor start.

Seattle beat Minnesota 4-3 in 16 innings, buandt remained last in the AL West at 10-16.

Melvin managed the Mariners to a 93-69 record last year, but the team missed the playoffs for the second straight season.

HOCKEY

EAST ST. LOUIS, Ill. (AP) — St. Louis Blues forward Mike Danton pleaded innocent to charges that he conspired to kill in a murder-for-hire plot.

Danton is charged with conspiring and using a telephone across state lines to attempt a murder.

A pretrial hearing was scheduled for July 12, and a trial was set for July 20.

Cohn set a detention hearing for Friday afternoon. Danton will remain in the Clinton County, Ill., jail until then. Federal prosecutor Randy Massey said the government will recommend that Danton remain jailed.

Danton's attorney, Bob Haar, is hopeful Danton will be released on bond.

PRAGUE, Czech Republic (AP) — Matt Cullen of the Florida Panthers had two goals and an assist, leading the United States to an 8-3 win over Denmark in a qualifying round game at the world hockey championships.

The Americans had already clinched a quarterfinal berth against the Czech Republic.

BASKETBALL

NEW YORK (AP) — Brooklyn basketball sensation Sebastian Telfair declared his eligibility for the NBA draft, ending months of speculation about his future.

The 18-year-old point guard had committed to Louisville, but signed with an agent and picked up a six-year endorsement deal with Adidas. Telfair said it was worth more than $15 million.

At 6-feet, he would become the shortest high school player ever selected in the draft.

TENNIS

ROME (AP) — Andy Roddick lost to Guillermo Canas 7-6 (7), 6-1 in the Italian Open, wasting three set points in the tiebreaker, then putting up little resistance in the second set.

Top-ranked Roger Federer, playing his first clay-court tournament of the year, eliminated Jonas Bjorkman 7-6 (4), 6-3.

Also advancing were last year's Italian champion, unseeded Felix Mantilla, No. 8 Nicolas Massu, No. 12 Iiri Novak and No. 14 Martin Verkerk.

But No. 9 Mark Philippoussis lost 6-2, 4-6, 6-4 to Tommy Robredo, who won his second career ATP title Sunday at Barcelona.

BERLIN (AP) — Jennifer Capriati breezed into the third round of the German Open by beating wild-card entry Julia Schruff 6-3, 6-1.

Other seeded players winning included No. 5 Nadia Petrova, No. 9 Vera Zvonareva, No. 10 Svetlana Kuznetsova and No. 13 Patty Schnyder.

—Associated Press

Terrorist threats make Olympics unattractive to some athletes

By Jim Litke
Associated Press

A few prominent Americans have already announced plans to stay home and watch the Olympics from the comfort and safety of their couches. So far, none of them have been athletes.

But stay tuned.

With 100 days to go before the opening ceremonies in Athens, the place is still a mess. Roads are ripped up and construction crews snarl city streets. Last week, as part of a campaign to clean up Athens, officials announced residents would be fined for everything from flicking cigarettes onto the sidewalk ($24 per butt) to spray painting an archaeological monument ($9,520).

What has Americans jittery, however, are the things they don't see.

"We were beginning to hear a lot of concerns about the preparations and whether we should go," Oregon Sen. Gordon Smith said during a Senate subcommittee hearing Tuesday in Washington.

And soon after, as if on cue, three bombs exploded outside an Athens police station in the pre-dawn hours Wednesday.

The series of timed blasts happened over the span of a half-hour and caused serious damage, but no injuries. An anonymous caller to an Athens newspaper provided several minutes warning, but no motive or claim of responsibility. Because the attacks occurred just before events planned to mark the 100-day threshold, and they took place near hotels where Olympic officials plan to stay — everybody was left to draw their own conclusions.

What was a whisper just a few weeks ago is likely to become the subject of public debate. Smith made clear he backs sending a U.S. team to the Summer Games, but adds that he'd be more comfortable with fewer "general assurances" and a lot more details about the safety of athletes and spectators alike. One of his colleagues, though, has already heard enough.

Arizona Sen. Jon Kyle said the only place he will feel safe viewing the Aug. 13-29 Games is at home on a television set. As if that weren't unnerving enough, Kyle also happens to be chairman of the Senate committee on terrorism.

No one on the U.S. team, from the athletes who will take the field to the top of the U.S. Olympic Committee, has arrived at the same conclusion — at least not publicly — and most are taking pains to say just the opposite.

Tennis star Serena Williams had no idea that she would spark headlines around the world when she answered a hypothetical question by saying, "If it became a real concern to where I personally wouldn't feel comfortable, then I wouldn't go to Athens because I like my life, I like to live, you know, I like waking up in the morning."

But the next day, she told reporters, "I'm very disappointed in you guys. I woke up this morning and I'm on the cover of USA Today, saying, 'Serena is unsure if she's playing the Olympics.' I never said that. I'm 100 percent planning on going to Athens."

That was just one measure of how delicate a subject U.S. participation has become. During a telephone call over the weekend, acting USOC president Bill Martin said he'd heard nothing through official channels — or unofficial channels, for that matter — to suggest the matter was even on the table.

He acknowledged that news reports confirming the International Olympic Committee had taken out a $170 million insurance policy to protect against cancellation due to war, terrorism or earthquakes had resulted in some speculation, and that an interview former Olympic swimmer Mark Spitz gave the BBC only fanned those flames.

"I would say that about six months ago it was highly unlikely," the seven-time gold medalist said, "but each day as it goes on with current world affairs it becomes more probable than not that ongoing conversations will take place as to how important it is to put athletes in harm's way."

Martin attended a USOC dinner Tuesday night in Washington and could not be reached for comment on the latest developments. He planned to meet informally with Bush administration officials, but before leaving, Martin reiterated, "I can't imagine a scenario at the moment that would change our plans to participate in Athens."

After the U.S. decided not to send a team to the 1980 Moscow Games, a lawsuit brought by former Olympian and current American IOC member Anita DeFrantz ensured the final decision on participation would reside with the USOC. Martin insisted over the weekend that discussion hadn't begun, and even those U.S. athletes who raised concerns about safety have insisted those wouldn't keep them from competing.

Although he won nine Olympic golds during his career as a sprinter and long jumper, Carl Lewis told the congressional subcommittee that he still remembers the disappointment of being sidelined in 1980.

"Absent some clear and present danger, we should never take that course of action again," he said. "Our athletes have been training for much of their lives for this very special moment. Let's not take that away from them."

The most encouraging thing about the debate sure to follow in the next 100 days is that so far it's just that — a debate.

BIG Chill

Chillin at the Bluewall
Monday May 10th 2004
Bluewall 7pm

The famous "Trivia Night" featuring Mark from The Harp Irish Pub. Come play trivia and win $1500 worth of great prizes or win from our raffle. Cloud Nine Karaoke will also be there! Seniors get their first drink free!!

Ultimate Chill Disc Tournament
Tuesday May 11th 2004
Pond Lawn 4-8pm

Form your own team and compete to win the 1st Ultimate Chill Disc title. Only 16 teams can play so sign up ASAP! T-shirts will be given to everyone playing. First and second place teams receive fantastic prizes! Pick up and drop off the registration form at the resource room in the Student Union.

Big Chill Carnival and BBQ
Wednesday May 12th 2004
Library Lawn 3-7pm

Come chill outside with free rides and food for all UMass students. Music will also be provided by Cloud Nine.

Sponsored by: Student Activities Center/Student Affairs and Campus Life Campus Center and Auxiliary Services.

19 PLUS SATURDAYS
The best DJ's spinning todays hottest music for you!
Broadcasted Live on Kiss 95.7 FM
HIPPODROME
1700 main street downtown springfield, ma 413.7870800 www.hdrome.com
19 Plus receive $5.00 off admission
21 plus Free Admission with this coupon only

Kiss A Senior Goodbye

Let your Senior friends know you will miss them!

Give them a card and a champagne glass filled with Hershey® Kisses to say Goodbye!

Only $6.00 each or 2 for $10.00

Stop by the STARS table on the Campus Center Concourse or visit www.UMassAlumni.com/students for more information on how to order these great gifts!

STARS can be reached by phone at 577-1390 or by email at stars@stuef.umass.edu.

Hershey Kisses courtesy of hersheys.com

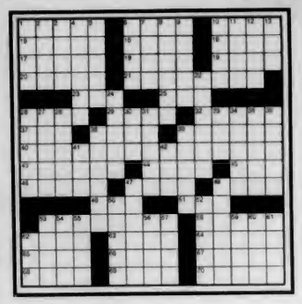
Quote for the Day

"I don't know the key to success, but the key to failure is trying to please everybody."

-Bill Cosby

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS



1 Take it all off
6 Music notation
10 Spouse
14 Fibrous plant
15 Tiered
16 Mad scientist's aide
17 Penthouses
18 Soprano's rendition
19 Fawn or doe
20 Garret
21 Calmed
23 Isaac Newton's title
25 Week
26 Wood nutcrackers
29 Border on
32 Spoor
37 Bridge wearer
38 Tyrant
39 Comic — Pearl
40 Dieter here (2 wds.)
43 Cream puff ion
44 Eyes
45 Get the message
46 Tossed bundle
47 Palace Prize city
48 Lincoln one
49 Watch pocket
51 Corporal: briefly
53 Hammerlock pro
58 Was fond of
62 Colorado ski resort
63 Aura
64 Stage whisper
65 Rainbow shapes
66 Spinning game piece
67 Pine tree product
68 Kid
69 Actress — Russo
70 Height: to a clager

DOWN

1 Humane org.
2 Blow run
3 Kind of squad
4 Mischievous
5 "Mary Poppins" star
6 Please
7 Main money formerly
8 Draw out
9 Knack
10 Long stint
11 Film script writer James —
12 Drove a nail
13 Be 26 Down
22 Charity
24 Shaving need
26 Joint problems
27 Sponge off of
28 Pie ingredient
30 Cutlery
31 Yens
33 Prop. workers
34 Ouzo flavor
36 Type of vinegar
38 Entered data
41 Bingo
42 Georgia city
47 Drivers' org.
48 Ripken of baseball
47 Lily brother
48 Rackets
50 Different
52 Nurse

1-9-05 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
UPSTAIRS at the ABC
NO COVER CHARGE
Karaoke
Yellow Brick Ed
Jazzbeat Bluespoetry
www.amherstbrewing.com
24 North Pleasant Street
Amherst Center 253-4400

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Shepherds Pie
- Captain's Catch Sandwich
- Lentil Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Southwest BBQ
- Roast Beef
- General Tso's Chicken
- Penne with Spinach & Tomato (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast
For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 73
- Low: 50

FRIDAY
- High: 78
- Low: 65

SATURDAY
- High: 65
- Low: 41

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe/Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Mathew Reid
COPY EDITOR
Erika Loules
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Scott Pihl
PRODUCTION STAFF
Samantha Nielsen/Meghan Heah

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You deserve way more respect than you've been getting lately.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Read the book. You're only hurting yourself by just watching the movie.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You're so close to your goal. Don't screw it up now, like you always do!

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Be aware of sharp projectiles being hurled at your head.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
A three-hour nap in the middle of the day does wonders for your spirits.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
The Yankees don't suck. Neither do the Red Sox. Can't we all just get along?

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Be unique. Wear a bright yellow shirt with a big elephant on it.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Go play in the rain. Just be careful not to drown.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Be prepared for the surprise of a lifetime.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Have some Mountain Dew for dinner. Delicious!

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
If you bite the hand that feeds you, you'll end up going hungry.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Yes, that dress does make you look fat. Sorry.

Classifieds Sponsored by
Wiffle Rock
www.wifflerock.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Puffton Village 2 Bdrm Apt Avail. Lease begins in June Free Heat and Hot Water Call (914) 393-9505

Mill Valley Estates now Renting 2 bedrm $1050/1100, 4 bedrm $2100 available 6/1/04 No last months rent. Free Heat & Hot Water, 2 full baths, AC. On busline Mon-Fri 10-5pm 253-7377

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

AUTO FOR SALE

Ford Probe SE 1996 51075 Call 413-687-7510. Moreza@cns.umass.edu

Honda Civic EX 99 40K Manual 68K mi. AC Alarm Great condition $8200 545-1291

1992 Honda Accord LX 4 door sedan 138K miles good condition $2000 253-6764

EMPLOYMENT

Spa manager East Hampton Part-time nights and weekends $90/shift 413-695-3765

EMPLOYMENT

THE RED LION INN Looking for an awesome summer experience? Join us at The Red Lion Inn for a fun-filled hot active season as part of our family. 100+ staff. Servers, hostesses, and a few others needed. On Property Housing available! International staff. Just an hour away from UMASS. Call Eva@ (413) 298-1677

ATTENTION LAX PLAYERS Play & Coach - Have fun - Make $$$ Top Boys Sports Camp in Maine looking for staff to instruct & coach LAX Awesome Summer! Work with kids! Top salaries, FREE rm/bd/trvl allow. Apply online ASAP: www.campcobbossee.com

Resort Real Estate Sales Assistant. World renowned multi-million dollar real estate development company seeks motivated and confident individual to market high-end real estate at The Greenbrier Resort in White Sulphur Spring, West Virginia. Ideal candidate is very comfortable speaking on the phone & interested in pursuing a career in luxury real estate. Immediate openings available. Please send resumes to Mitch Johnson-mjohnson@gbrx.com

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Office Help Needed! Amherst Leisure Services is looking for a summer registration clerk to begin mid to late may. Duties include: customer service, accepting registrations and payments for numerous programs, data entry, answering phones, filing, and other clerical duties in a busy recreation department. Preferred hours are M-F 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m., but may be flexible. Pay range is $7.44 - 8.61/hr. depending upon experience. Apply at: Town of Amherst Leisure Services, 70 Boltwood Walk, Bangs Community Center, Amherst, MA 01002 Resumes and letters of inquiry may also be sent to: dgemarasp@town.amherst.ma.us For further information, call Pat r 413-256-4065.

Painters Wanted in Amherst Area. No Experience Necessary Call Alison@413-627-9043

BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Summer teenage bicycling trips, USA, Canada, Europe. Salary plus expense paid. Student Hosteling Program, P.O. Box 419, Conway, MA 01341 (800) 344-6132, www.bicycletrips.com.

EMPLOYMENT

Activism
Summer Jobs
For the Environment
$3000-$5000/Summer Join the state's largest public interest grassroots organization to protect our environment, public health, human rights and democracy. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Bobby 1-413-256-6434

Boerio Y Sano is hiring for positions for fall semester please apply in person Call for directions 251-4300

PART-TIME POSITIONS
20+ hours/wk. Set your own schedule. Conduct surveys over the phone at our Hadley location. NO SALES! Evngs/wknds. hhlyldent@401(k). PVTA accessible. Email myivian@hcldmarktingnts.com or apply in person, First Floor 100 Venture Way, Hadley, MA (888)423-5181

Lowell Area Driven Leader needed to be crew chief for one of the state's largest exterior house painting companies. Must be hardworking, Independent & have own car. Exp. preferred, but not necessary. Call Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

EMPLOYMENT

CANTONESE, JAPANESE, KOREAN, MANDARIN Earn $75
Individuals fluent in Cantonese, Japanese, Korean, and Mandarin needed to participate in a test development activity. Participants will provide responses to the Listening, Reading, Language Structures, Cultural Understanding, Language Acquisition, Speaking, and Writing sections of tests for these languages. Participation is by appointment May 3 - May 14. For more information call Pam Gigliotti, National Evaluation Systems, Inc. 256-0444.

FRENCH, GERMAN, HEBREW, ITALIAN, LATIN Earn $50
Individuals fluent in French, German, Hebrew, Italian, and Latin needed to participate in a test development activity. Participants will respond to approximately twenty-five multiple-choice questions, and provide responses to Writing and Speaking sections of tests for these languages. Participation is by appointment May 3 - May 14. For more information call Pam Gigliotti, National Evaluation Systems, Inc. 256-0444.

EMPLOYMENT

Painters Wanted in Danvers area want a challenging Job outdoors w/good $$$? Seeking driven, Hardworking Individual w/own car to be a painting crew member. No exp. necessary Call: Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Hardworking individuals living around 9395 belt South of I-90 for fulltime painter positions. Challenging job requires independence, own car. $10/$12 base rate. Call Will @ 617-699-9970

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for turns. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413)584-4746

Painters wanted greater Springfield area 1-413-695-2645 or 188-277-9757

Students wanted for a summer painting job $400 - $600/week. Experience not needed but a plus. All hired will go through a paid training program. Call 888-277-9787 or go to COLLEGE-PRO.COM. Work with friends.

EMPLOYMENT

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hr or 888-477-6668 www.hasperiences.com

"Partending" $80/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided 1-800-965-6520 Ext 162

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom house 2 1/2 miles On bus line 549-6686

Hadley 5 Bedroom Plus home, 2 baths w/ laundry hookup. Large yard, minutes from UMass. 549-4270

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female roommate wanted to share 2-bd apt in Sunderland $418/mo. Includes heat, hot water, and cable. Available 6/1 or earlier. Call Lauren @ 860-604-6068

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

SERVICES

PREGNANCY TESTING HIV Testing Birth Control and Emergency Contraception Abortion and Limited Early Pregnancy Health. Planned Parenthood Amherst 549-0725

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Bdrm Apt near Amherst Ctr. 665-1218

The Pavilion 2 bedroom apt available June 1st. Rent at 1450 call 1-413-548-0015

Two bedroom in the summer. Large 4BR, 2 bath apt next to Amherst Ctr. Washer & dryer included. 5 min to bus stop & town. ONLY $580 per room + utilities. Available 6/1 thru 8/15. Contact Rebagan@student.umass.edu 978-580-7323

2 bedrooms, fully furnished apartment, 1 full bath. Available June 1st September 1st. Call Rachel Bowman @ 781-264-1517

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED! Extremely generous compensation paid. Non smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.fertilityalliance.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MAY 6, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A Bay State battle

UMass to head east to face rival BC

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

As the final weekend of the regular season winds down for the Massachusetts softball team, coach Elaine Sortino is finding more aces in her deck of cards heading into an afternoon contest with Boston College in Chestnut Hill, especially in one Denise Denis.

Earlier this week, the junior left fielder out of Middle Grove, N.Y. became part of a rare minority of players that can say they were selected Player of the Week having not started one game in that time period.

As a bench player last week, Denis hit .556 with five hits, two doubles, one home run and eight runs batted in to rack up Atlantic 10 Player of the Week honors.

"I'm just coming right off the bench and then just getting in there, being thrown right in there. I think that kind of adds a little bit more to [the recognition], because of that," Denis said.

Simply put, whenever the Minutewomen need a run, they turn to Denis, who through Sunday was batting .298 with two home runs and 14 RBI.

Last Saturday against Fordham, down 3-2 with two outs and the bases loaded, Denis launched a line drive into the right center gap that scored three, putting the Minutewomen in the lead for good.

Two Sundays ago against Temple, down 6-5 with two runners on, Denis came through again with a two-run double to right that scored two and put the Maroon and White up for good.

Down 5-3 on April 23 against Maine, Denis was once again the straw that broke the camel's back. With the bases loaded yet again, Denis slammed a three-run double into left-center that served as the game winner.

But this is not the Denise Denis of old, who in 2002 and 2003 combined batted .237 with no homers and just 11 RBI.

No, rather, it seems Denis, like many others, has finally found their niche.

"I just finally started relaxing up at the plate, and just started getting my timing down, and I just knew I had to step up to my team this year," Denis said.

"Having Denise as an ace in your pocket is a great card to play," Sortino said. "I think mentally she's really taken her game up to another level, and I think that's the difference we see.

"The pitchers really have to bring it to her to get her to swing, and she's developed a more mature eye and deliberate aggression at the plate. I think that's the difference, quite frankly."

Denis will be one of the many options Sortino will be able to turn to this weekend, as the young hitting corps of KJ Kelley, Hilary Puglia, KC Budrewicz and Jamie Cahalan have been lighting up opponents all year long, so much so that they have been touted as one of the best groups in recent years.

"I think this is probably one of the greatest teams UMass has ever assembled and it's a young team; they're really starting to come into their own," Sortino said.

On the other side of the ball, the pitching staff may have finally found a third ace to rely on.

Through 4-1/4 innings of game two last Sunday against Quinnipiac, junior Barb LaFogg pitched a perfect game, finishing the day with a one-hit shutout in a 3-0 win, her first win of the year.

Jenna Busa also tossed a three-hit shutout in game one to improve to 13-7.

"Our pitching has become more formidable every week. I think this week will be better the next week, and hopefully next week is going to still be better than this week," Sortino said.

Perhaps some of that improvement is a testimony to an exceptional coaching staff, which includes assistants Danielle Henderson, Adi Blackmon and Kaila Holtz, who just yesterday was named to the Canadian Olympic softball team and will compete this August in Athens.

The Minutewomen currently lead the all-time series against the Eagles, 32-4.

Jenna Busa tossed a three-hit shutout in game one of a doubleheader sweep of Quinnipiac last Sunday.

Retirement on horizon for Bonds?

By Ben Walker
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Barry Bonds was adamant: Baseball's steroids scandal has not affected him one bit.

"Does it look like it?" the San Francisco star asked. "It doesn't faze me at all."

Bonds did not play Tuesday night because of a sinus infection. He was sent from Shea Stadium back to the hotel during the Giants' 6-2 loss to the New York Mets.

But before the game, the slugger leading the majors with 10 homers and a .463 batting average brushed aside questions about the drug-distribution case in which his personal trainer, Greg Anderson, has been indicted.

"There isn't anybody investigating me, as far as I know," Bonds said. "I ain't being investigated."

At one point, Bonds even lifted his T-shirt to reveal his stomach.

"Do I look like I got ripped abs?" he said.

Bonds said he wasn't worried about an asterisk tarnishing his accomplishments — his six MVP awards and 668 career home runs.

"My records aren't going anywhere," he said. "I'll be fine, trust me."

Anderson is one of four men charged in an alleged ring involving the Bay Area Laboratory Co-Operative. All four have pleaded innocent and no athlete has been charged.

Bonds repeatedly has denied using illegal steroids. There is one supplement he does take.

Pointing to the top of his locker, he said, "I have creatine right up here."

Out of the starting lineup, Bonds spent 45 minutes at his locker talking about possibly retiring after the 2005 season, his future and George Steinbrenner.

Sniffling to suppress his cold, he laughed at times and bristled at others, particularly when pressed about BALCO and Anderson.

"He'll always be a friend of mine. Always. We grew up together," Bonds said.

More than halfway through the session, Bonds cackled and added this caveat: "Half the stuff I say, I don't believe."

Bonds entered the three-game series at Shea Stadium only 88 homers from breaking Hank Aaron's record of 755. But he claimed he wanted to leave the game after next season, regardless where he stands on the homer list.

"I want to leave. I want to do something else," he said.

Bonds declined to say exactly what else he'd like to do. But as he approaches 40 this July, he said he'd like to spend more time watching his two daughters and one son grow up.

At his current pace, Bonds might break Aaron's mark before next season is over. But if he's close, Bonds said he likely would not be tempted to return.

"Probably not," he said. "Don't need to."

Bonds is signed through the 2006 season. But if he does not reach 500 plate appearances next season, the Giants can void the final year of his contract — he's set to make $18 million in 2006.

If Bonds reaches 1,500 plate appearances combined from 2003 to 2005, including 400 or more in 2005, the Giants lose their right to void the deal. Despite that, Bonds would not gain the right to walk away from his contract.

"I don't try to predict the future," he said.

Bonds said he'd be amenable to becoming a designated hitter someday, meaning a shift to the American League.

"DH is fine for me," he said, adding he'd want to do it for a California team.

So does he see any chance of joining Steinbrenner's collection of stars at Yankee

See BONDS on page 8

Minutemen will travel to face Huskies

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

After five consecutive home losses and only one win in its last 11 games, the Massachusetts baseball team will be looking to right its ship when it hits the road this afternoon for a non-conference matchup with Northeastern.

First pitch is scheduled for 3 p.m. on Friedman Diamond in Brookline.

The contest will mark the second meeting of the season between the two Bay State Rivals. The Huskies edged UMass 4-3 in the first round of the 2004 Baseball Beanpot on April 20 at Campanelli Stadium in Brockton.

It was the first of nine straight losses for the Minutemen, and a game that featured a controversial balk call against UMass closer Scott Ratliff in the bottom of the eighth inning that allowed the eventual winning run to cross the plate.

The Huskies went on to finish second in the tournament, falling to Boston College in the championship game, while UMass finished fourth after falling to Harvard 7-4 in the consolation game.

For the Maroon and White, the game will also serve as a precursor for the weekend and what will be a very important Atlantic 10 series with Temple at Earl Lorden Field.

With both teams currently tied for fourth in the A-10 East at 6-9, wins will be vital for positioning in the A-10 tournament, and a sweep of the three games could potentially mean a jump to as high as second place in the division.

With that in mind, UMass head coach Mike Stone will save top starters Eric Chown, Matt Torra and Keith Doherty for the weekend and use his younger pitchers this afternoon.

Nevertheless, whoever is on the mound for the Minutemen will not completely control the team's fate.

"It's not just one or two guys out there who are the reason we're struggling," Stone said. "We're not making plays as a team, and by that I don't mean we're making errors, there are just things we need to be doing that we're not doing, and its hurting us.

After being held mostly in check by Siena starter Josh Burnett in Tuesday's 7-5 loss, Stone also hopes that the offense will receive a jumpstart as soon as possible.

"We're not hitting like we're capable of," the veteran coach said. "I don't know what it is, but whatever it is we need to fix it as a team or we're going to be in trouble."

Three players who will be looking to duplicate their performances from Tuesday are senior second baseman Cullan Maumus, sophomore catcher Frank Curreri and junior right-fielder Jason Twomley.

Maumus, who has missed most of this season with a broken arm, and Twomley both went 2-for-3 against the Saints, while Curreri was the offensive star, collecting three hits in five at-bats, including a two-run homerun and a pair of doubles.

The Huskies, meanwhile, are coming off of a 12-6 win over Harvard on Tuesday that saw them hit six homeruns as a team.

Leading the charge was left fielder Mike Steinberg, who led off the game with a round tripper and went on to hit three on the afternoon.

In addition, five Huskies recorded at least two hits in the game, while four had at least two runs batted in.

Kentucky Derby winner Smarty Jones receives heroes welcome

BENSALEM, Pa. (AP) — Sal Sinatra never had a day like this.

The racing secretary at Philadelphia Park was scurrying around the barn area Wednesday morning, trying his best to maintain order on the first day of the Smarty Jones onslaught.

"We're working on the fly," Sinatra said. "We've never really had anything like this. It's just overwhelming."

At a track known for claiming races instead of champions, the morning unfolded without a hitch in greeting its Kentucky Derby winner.

There was a "Welcome Home Smarty Jones" cake and a big sign on trainer John Servis' barn congratulating him and owners Pat and Roy Chapman.

And there was a rare concession by horsemen that allowed Smarty Jones to have the track all to himself on a chilly and sunny morning.

"At 8:30, the track will remain closed for 15 minutes to let Smarty Jones train," bellowed a voice over the loudspeakers near Barn 11.

Ever hear of anything like that before?

Never, said Servis.

"They came to me with the idea, and it's awesome," Servis said, still smiling even after the long drive home from Louisville. "It shows you how much Philly Park loves this horse."

—Associated Press

TED S. WARREN/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Total control?

New Boston Celtics head coach Doc Rivers, above, has said that director of basketball operations Danny Ainge has been granted final say in all team personnel matters.

The Daily Collegian

FRIDAY, MAY 7, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 135

Doctor Spock brings art to Northampton
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 5

UMass seniors prepare for last game at Garber
SPORTS, PAGE 10

Judge defends mix of religion and state in courthouse

By Sara-Megan Walsh
Collegian Staff

Ray Moore, the Alabaman Supreme Court judge removed from the bench after refusing to remove a monument of the Ten Commandments, spoke yesterday in the Campus Center about the First Amendment and the separation of church and state.

"We fail to understand the relevance of God in our country," Moore said. "I feel that's our problem. Perhaps we're tired of God."

Beginning with the history of the United States in the colonial era, Moore shared the history that formed the basis for the First Amendment.

"The first thing [the founding fathers] did under the First Amendment was acknowledge God," claimed Moore. "The first act of the government was to pray. The first act of Congress was to appoint chaplains. Our first action after World War II was to establish a National Day of Prayer."

"Every time we say 'separation of church and state', we get this feeling," Moore said. "For a Christian it says something ugly, it means we're separate from God."

To examine whether or not this separation of church and state truly does exist, Moore referred to a letter written by Thomas Jefferson that brought forth the concept of separation.

"God gave us rights," he said in summation of the letter. "Government is to secure the rights God gave us. Government should be abolished if it doesn't uphold those rights."

"Did [Jefferson] separate God and the government or did he intimately bind the two? " Moore asked.

He elaborated on his belief that church and state are intricately bound together by giving examples where religion becomes part of the institution of our nation.

"How can the President swear in the Chief Justice on the Bible if the country doesn't acknowledge God?" Moore asked.

Moore's examination of the laws governing the separation between church and state relate directly to the court case, which forced a national examination of where the line between the two should be drawn.

On Feb. 18, 2002, Moore refused to abide by the order to remove a monument of the Ten Commandments from the Alabama Supreme Court House. The 2.5-ton monument installed in the courthouse in 2001 appeared to be two stone tablets inscribed with the Ten Commandments as well as famous quotes from our founding fathers. After court proceedings, Moore was removed from the bench in November of 2003.

"The issue in my case was not the Ten Commandments. The issue is can the state acknowledge God," said Moore. He stated that, "There's a reason I didn't obey federal law ... I'm sworn to do that, to acknowledge God is part of my duty."

Moore went on to show excerpts of the Alabama and Massachusetts constitutions that contained the word God, therefore recognizing him.

"How can the Federal Government acknowledge God in three branches then tell the state it can't?" he asked.

On a final note about the monument, Moore said: "Placing a monument in a building isn't making anyone believe anything. You are free to ignore it."

GERALD HERBERT/ASSOCIATED PRESS

An unidentified girl runs past a building allegedly set ablaze by Christians following continued fighting between Christians and Muslims communities in Yelwa, north central Nigeria, Wednesday.

500 killed in Nigeria

By Sunday Alamba
Associated Press

YELWA, Nigeria (AP) — Militants from a predominantly Christian tribe killed at least 500 people in two attacks on a Muslim town in central Nigeria, a senior Red Cross official said yesterday.

An exact toll from the raids Sunday and Tuesday was unavailable, but Red Cross workers who interviewed witnesses and families of victims "estimate 500 to 600 dead," said Umar Abdu Mairga, head of the Nigerian Red Cross team visiting the mostly Muslim town of Yelwa after the assaults by the Tarok tribe.

Thousands of people fled the fighting, and at least 158 people were wounded. About 100 people also were missing, many of them women and children allegedly abducted, Mairga added.

Police, who tend to downplay casualty tolls to stem retaliatory attacks, earlier reported 80 killed.

Religious, ethnic and political enmities — often intertwined — have fueled outbreaks of communal bloodshed resulting in more than 10,000 dead since President Olusegun Obasanjo was first elected in 1999, ending 15 years of repressive military rule.

Violence in central Nigeria has erupted in cycles since September 2001, when fighting between Christians and Muslims in the once-peaceful city of Jos killed more than 1,000 people. Hundreds more have been killed in fighting since then.

Few parts of Yelwa, a town of cattle herdsman and semi-nomadic traders, were left untouched in the latest raids; attackers with jerry cans of kerosene burned several mosques and hundreds, possibly thousands of homes and vehicles.

One charred corpse was still visible on the main street Thursday. Yakubu Haruna, a town councilor, estimated the toll would rise to 600 people, many of them buried by family members in fields and scrub forest surrounding the town.

On Wednesday, villagers showed an Associated Press reporter what they said was a burial site for 280 people killed in the raids — a 160-square-foot area of freshly upturned soil, located behind a mosque in a field smelling of decomposing bodies.

In Yelwa, the Red Cross provided medical treatment to 58 wounded, and at least 100 others were evacuated and treated in other locations, officials said.

Ambrose Nanlong, a 68-year-old community leader in Shendam, said some "Christian boys" from Shendam and nearby Kawo helped attack Yelwa to avenge what he called a raid by Muslim militants on Kawo.

That account could not be independently confirmed.

In February, Muslim militants in Yelwa were blamed for killing nearly 50 people, many of them Christians who took refuge in a church.

Associated Press writers Dulue Mbachu and Glenn McKenzie in Lagos contributed to this report.

Bush apologizes for torture

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush apologized yesterday for the abuse and humiliation of Iraqi prisoners by U.S. soldiers, saying the scenes of mistreatment had made Americans "sick to our stomachs."

A day after he stopped short of apologizing, Bush told Jordan's King Abdullah II: "I was sorry for the humiliation suffered by the Iraqi prisoners and the humiliation suffered by their families.

"I told him I was as equally sorry that people seeing those pictures didn't understand the true nature and heart of America," Bush said, standing in the Rose Garden alongside Abdullah.

The president's statement went beyond his comment Wednesday that the abuse of prisoners was "abhorrent" and "does not represent the America that I know."

His lack of an apology Wednesday was striking, and his spokesman said later that the president was sorry. Bush gave voice to that sentiment Thursday.

Scenes of mistreatment have been broadcast around the world, drawing international condemnation and prompting outrage in the Middle East. Bush said he discussed the pictures with Abdullah.

Bush said he told the king: "Americans like me didn't appreciate what we saw, and it makes us sick to our stomachs.

"I also made it clear to his majesty that the troops we have in Iraq who were there for security and peace and freedom are the finest of the fine."

For his part, the king said, "We're all horrified by the images" of torture and abuse.

He said he was confident that American investigations would find the guilty parties. The abuse by some soldiers "doesn't reflect the morals and values" of the United States, Abdullah said.

Describing a meeting he had Wednesday with Rumsfeld, Bush said, "I told him I should have known about the pictures and the report" done by the Pentagon two months ago. The president said he had assured Abdullah that "people will be brought to justice in a way commensurate to how our system works."

—Associated Press

Fuel prices cause trucker protest

YOON S. BYUN/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Gil Palmer, of Norfold Va. an independently conracted trucker, protests outside of the Portsmouth Marine Terminal in Portsmouth Va. yesterday.

By Sonja Barisic
Associated Press

NORFOLK, Va. (AP) — Hundreds of independent truckers protesting high fuel prices and low pay began a two-day boycott Thursday at one of the busiest cargo ports on the East Coast.

"It's a shutdown. We want attention," said Sandy Tyson, who has been hauling cargo from the Hampton Roads port for 14 years. "The truckers here do not have a voice."

Independent truckers handle about 80 percent of the cargo at the port, but the initial impact of the boycott was not immediately clear. The port has terminals in Norfolk, Portsmouth and Newport News.

Linda Ford, spokeswoman for the Virginia Port Authority, the state agency that owns the terminals, did not immediately return a telephone call seeking comment.

About 200 truckers were outside the Portsmouth terminal by midday, said Jim Stewart, a port division representative for the International Brotherhood of Teamsters. The union is trying to organize independent port truckers nationwide.

Stewart estimated another 300 truckers stayed home to honor the boycott. "They're tired of not being paid for what they do," he said.

The union did not organize the shutdown but is backing the truckers, Stewart said.

The boycott follows similar protests in California, where since last Friday hundreds of truckers stopped hauling goods to and from the Oakland harbor, threatening to disrupt the flow of goods at the nation's fourth-busiest port.

At the Hampton Roads port, truckers want a fuel surcharge to compensate for rising diesel costs, Tyson and Stewart said. They also want a public registry showing how much companies they contract with are paid by shipping lines. They are also concerned about congestion and long delays at the terminals.

"It's a slow death," Tyson said. "We can't afford to shut down, but we can't afford to continue to run, either."

Tyson said she earned $76,000 last year but was left with just $15,000 after deducting the costs of running her business. "I have no medical, I have no savings, I have no retirement, I have no dental," she said. "I can't do it anymore."

Bin Laden offers gold for killing of US, UN officials

By Maggie Michael
Associated Press

CAIRO, Egypt (AP) — A statement attributed to Osama bin Laden offered rewards in gold valued at nearly $136,000 Thursday for the killing of top U.S. and U.N. officials in Iraq.

The transcript of an audio recording dated Thursday appeared on two Web sites known for militant Islamic messages. The Web sites gave links to hear the statement, but none were working. The authenticity of the statement could not immediately be verified.

Bin Laden had never been known to offer rewards for missions he had described as followers' religious duty to carry out.

"You know that America promised big rewards for those who kill mujahedeen (holy warlors)," the transcript read. "We in al-Qaida organization will guarantee, God willing, 10,000 grams of gold to whoever kills the occupier Bremer, or the American chief commander or his deputy in Iraq."

It was referring to L. Paul Bremer, the chief U.S. administrator in Iraq, and top military officials.

"For security reasons, the rewards will be given as soon as conditions permit, God willing," the transcript read. "As for those who die while killing an occupying solider, the great prize will be for us and for him when God grants him martyrdom, and the smaller prize (the gold) will be for his family."

The statement also promised the same reward for the deaths of U.N. Secretary-General Kofi Annan and his envoy to Iraq, Lakhdar Brahimi.

"The United Nations is nothing but a Zionists' tool, even if it worked under the cover of providing humanitarian aid," the statement said. "... Whoever kills Kofi Annan or the head of his commission in Iraq or a representative like Lakhdar Brahimi, he will be awarded the same prize of 10,000 grams of gold."

The statement promised a lesser prize — 1,000 grams of gold — to anyone killing a citizen of countries it called "the masters of the veto like Americans and Britons" — a reference to nations with veto power on the U.N. Security Council.

And it offered 500 grams of gold to anyone killing citizens of countries it called "slaves of the Security Council who are in Iraq, like Japan and Italy."

With gold selling Thursday on London exchanges for $387.60 an ounce, 10,000 grams of gold was valued at $135,660, 1,000 grams at $13,566, and 500 grams at $6,783.

The statement appeared on two Web sites, the Ansar Islam Forum and the Islamic Research Center. Both are clearing-houses for statements by al-Qaida and other Islamic militant groups.

The transcript also denounced U.S. plans to hand sovereignty to Iraqis on June

See BIN LADEN on page 2

Kerry gets tough on education

By Nedra Pickler
Associated Press

COLTON, Calif. (AP) — John Kerry said yesterday that if elected president he would make teachers meet higher standards, his latest effort to appeal to the political center as his Republican rivals try to paint him as a liberal Democrat.

With the presidential election hanging on a small group of independent voters, Kerry also has taken the right-of-center position of promoting corporate tax relief. This week, he started airing biographical television ads that showcase his friendship with Republican Sen. John McCain of Arizona and on Friday he addresses the centrist Democratic Leadership Council.

"He's staking his ground in the moderate domain and trying to inoculate himself from the inevitable attacks as the liberal from Massachusetts," said Democratic consultant Dane Strother, who isn't working for Kerry.

Kerry's move to the middle is a step often made by presidential

See KERRY on page 2

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundos
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Parrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Comics Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reed
Features Editor S. J. Port
News Editor Ferron Saltiker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merrett
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marry Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagatic
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resource Renee Brand
Assistant Operations Linda Wallach
Assistant Advertising David Boe
Assistant Business Jaclynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kiggins
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Rachael Bruno
Graphics Adviser Charlie Higgins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Amelia F. Lincoln
Assistant Sports Mike Marselli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts's autumn semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Two-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been headquartered since January 1984. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Gold offered for killing US officials

BIN LADEN from page 1

30, calling them a trick to end the resistance that has killed hundreds of U.S. soldiers.

"The so-called handing sovereignty over to Iraqis is an overt trick, to anesthetize the people and abort the militant resistance, and (such a trick) will not deceive the true mujahedeen of the sons of Iraq," the statement said.

"There is no sovereignty for Iraq as long as a crusader solider remains in its land, and no sovereignty for Iraq as long as it is not ruled by Islam."

It urged Iraqis to fight a holy war against their U.S.-appointed Governing Council, which it called a "puppet" of the U.S.-led coalition and "a tool to pass their plans to the people and a way to show their hatred of religion."

"Therefore, jihad (holy war) is obligatory for all Muslims in Iraq," the statement read.

The statement was titled: "A Word from the emir of the Islamic armies, Osama, to the nation and especially to brotherly Muslims in Iraq." It used language similar to previous bin Laden statements, laden with Quranic verse.

Democrats clamp down on education candidates of both parties as the election draws near. The presumptive nominee often asks Democratic audiences to help him win over independents and "non-Bush Republicans," and Strother says polls show corporate tax cuts and higher standards for teachers are popular among those voters.

KERRY from page 1

During a speech at California's Colton High School, Kerry called for greater accountability from teachers — one of President Bush's signature issues. Teachers should have to pass tougher tests and their pay should be based on performance, the Democrat argued.

"Some people who choose to go into teaching will be great, but some will not," Kerry said. "It's like any profession — not everybody always has the ability to make it."

Kerry pledged to spend $50 billion over 10 years on his effort to improve teacher quality, including awards up to $5,000 to teachers who increase student achievement or make other improvements. He said he wants to recruit or retain 500,000 teachers during his first term as president and give a $5,000 minimum bonus for those who teach math and science or work in high-need schools.

Campus Perspectives

By Samantha Louras

What are your plans for the summer?

"I'm going to Chatham to dig up clams."
Joe Thonus
junior
Linguistics major

"I got an internship in Connecticut called Sikorsky working on information technologies."
Junisa Grear
junior
Computer Animation major

"Working at the Mullins Center."
Nathan Cartei
senior
Physics, Math and Political Science major

"I'm going to take some classes at a college on Long Island."
Rich Eisman
sophomore
Undeclared major

"I work with special needs adults in Amherst."
Sarah Hakanson
senior
Psychoanalytic Philosophy major

"I took an internship at Walt Disney World."
Christine Cho
freshman
Psychology major

FREE
T-SHIRT & DVD
www.1-800-GO-GUARD.com/baldr

Be a Leader in the Army National Guard, and get the respect of soldiers who will look to you for leadership. You'll also get career training, money for college and opportunities to develop management skills – plus special training to prepare you for advanced positions. Most Guard members train part-time, so they're ready to respond if their community or the Nation needs them.

If you have at least 60 college credits and meet other requirements, you can apply to Officer Candidate School. The Guard offers flexible Officer programs that can help you stay in school or let you work full-time.

Graduate as an Army Guard Officer.

ARMY NATIONAL GUARD
YOU CAN

1-800-GO-GUARD Ext 195 www.1-800-GO-GUARD.com/baldr

Astronauts land safely

European Space Agency/Associated Press

NASA astronaut Michael Foale, right, with Dutch colleague Andre Kuipers eat Dutch cheese for breakfast aboard the International Space Station in this undated photo from the European Space Agency.

By Anneli Nerman
Associated Press

STAR CITY, Russia (AP) — American astronaut Michael Foale, just back from six months aboard the international space station, said Wednesday that only a demanding work program would justify spending a full year in space.

Russia is pressing NASA to agree to extend crew stints on the space station from the current six months to one year, which would free up places on its Soyuz crew capsules for paying space tourists.

Staying in orbit for a long time is not worth it in itself, Foale said during a news conference at Russia's space training facility outside Moscow.

Foale suggested that a rigorous program, including spacewalks and experiments, could justify extending the time limit in orbit.

"If there is a strong orbital program that utilizes the fact that you are spending a year in space then there is value in it," he said.

Foale's crew mate, Russian cosmonaut Alexander Kaleri, agreed.

"If there is work, it's possible to fly as long as necessary," Kaleri said. "If there is no work, there is no worse punishment."

Russia's Soyuz and Progress cargo ships have been the only link to the space station since the U.S. shuttle fleet was grounded following the loss of the shuttle Columbia in 2003.

Russia, facing the need to mobilize its scarce resources to keep the station supplied and manned, has halted construction of its own segment on the station and some commercial projects, including selling space trips to rich tourists.

Kaleri and Foale returned to Earth on Friday, along with European Space Agency astronaut Andre Kuipers of the Netherlands, who spent nine days on the station.

The three men, who have been undergoing medical tests and recuperating at Star City since, looked relaxed and upbeat.

"The flight was very good. The main thing was that the station functioned normally and we fulfilled the whole program," said Kaleri, who was flight commander of the two-man space station crew.

Kaleri said he and Foale managed to find enough free time to watch the traditional Saturday night movie.

Kuipers, who made his first space flight, said he was very pleased and hoped there would be a second.

Foale hinted that his repeated stints in space had left him slightly jaded.

"There must be a new aim, a new challenge," to entice him into returning, said Foale, who has been in space six times.

Libians produce death sentence for doctors in AIDS killings

By Khaled Al-Deeb
Associated Press

BENGHAZI, Libya (AP) — Libya sentenced five Bulgarian nurses and a Palestinian doctor to death by firing squad after convicting them yesterday of intentionally infecting more than 400 children with the AIDS virus in an experiment to find a cure.

Relatives of the children shouted for joy as the sentences were handed down, but Bulgaria's justice minister called the verdicts "absurd." Some human rights groups say Libya concocted the experiment story to cover up unsafe hospital practices.

Under Libyan law, death sentences produce an automatic appeal, and European leaders suggested they were exerting pressure on the government of Moammar Gadhafi to reverse the verdicts. Gadhafi has been trying to present a new image to the world after decades of supporting terrorism.

Nine Libyan hospital officials were acquitted of negligence by the five-judge panel.

A sixth Bulgarian, a doctor, received four years in prison for changing foreign currency on the black market. He stood trial for infecting patients with AIDS, but his verdict did not mention that charge, and no explanation was given for the change. All six Bulgarians and the Palestinian had pleaded innocent.

As soon as the sentences were announced, five relatives of the infected children shouted: "Allahu Akbar!" — "God is great!" The defendants, wearing civilian clothes in the dock, did not react.

"I thank God for this sentence," said Abdel Razek al-Odaibi, father of an infected child. "If there is a greater sentence than death, I would have wished it for them."

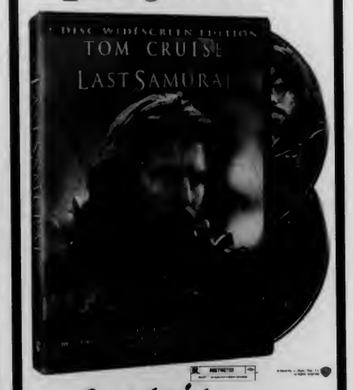
Al-Odaibi brought his infected son, 6-year-old Akram, to court. Other relatives stood outside, the courtroom too packed to hold them.

Initially, Libya claimed the infections were part of a conspiracy by the CIA and Israeli intelligence, but it later backed away from those allegations.

Prosecutors said the health workers of intentionally infecting more than 400 children with HIV-contaminated blood as part of an experiment to find a cure for AIDS. Twenty-three of the infected children have reportedly died.

Some human rights groups have accused Libya of concocting the experiment story to cover up unsafe practices in its hospitals and clinics. They, and European governments, have said confessions were extracted by torture.

"The verdict is based solely on confessions made by some of the defendants under duress," said Bulgarian government spokesman Dimitar Tsonev.



"This verdict is absurd," said Bulgaria's justice minister, Anton Stankov. "It lacks evidence and justice."

The defendants have said they were jolted with electricity, beaten with sticks and repeatedly jumped on while strapped to their beds. Two of the women said they were raped.

"It is only by means of a fair trial that follows due legal process that the truth will emerge about how these children became infected with the HIV virus and those responsible be held fully to account," Amnesty International said in a statement.

R&P
Liquors and Fine Wines
Huge selection of micros, imported beers, and wine!
505 West Street
Amherst, MA 01002
413-253-2442

TO RENT OR OWN!
THE LAST SAMURAI

Captain VIDEO
2 LOCATIONS TO SERVE YOU
BEHIND BRUEGGER'S - DOWNTOWN AMHERST
19 MONTAGUE ROAD - NORTH AMHERST

Soldiers seize government office; suicide bomb detonates

By Denis D. Gray
Associated Press

NAJAF, Iraq (AP) — U.S. soldiers seized the governor's office yesterday in the holy city of Najaf, wresting control from Shiite militiamen loyal to a radical cleric in battles that left an estimated 40 insurgents dead.

In Baghdad, a suicide car bomber killed five Iraqi civilians and an American soldier at the edge of the heavily guarded Green Zone that houses the U.S. headquarters. The blast wounded 25 people, including two U.S. soldiers.

Amid concerns that U.S. troops were about to move directly against anti-American cleric Muqtada al-Sadr, his militiamen dug in in Najaf, taking positions behind earthen mounds leading into the city center and firing a barrage of mortar shells and small arms fire at the U.S. base here late Thursday.

American soldiers responded with a heavy barrage of 120mm mortar fire. U.S. jets streaked across the blackened night sky, and two large plumes of smoke could be seen rising over the east bank of the Euphrates.

Earlier Thursday, gunmen took cover behind buildings as American helicopters flew overhead. An increased number of fighters were seen in the city center as the militia attempted to regroup after losing the governor's office.

"We will fight until the last drop of our blood," said Dhia Shami, as he stood behind a dirt barricade.

"We expect the Americans to retreat," said fellow militiaman Malek Holeicha. "We are fighting for our faith. They don't have any faith."

At the city's Imam Ali shrine, one of the holiest sites in Shiite Islam, a coffin wrapped in an Iraqi flag was brought in — apparently one of the dead from the fighting.

"This is a martyr for Muqtada," mourners chanted.

The Najaf fighting came as chief U.S. administrator L. Paul Bremer announced the appointment of Adnan al-Zurufi as governor of Najaf province, a step that is part of the campaign to regain control of the area from al-Sadr's militiamen. His al-Mahdi Army seized government buildings and police stations throughout the province on April 4.

The United States is planning to hand some sovereignty to a transitional Iraqi government June 30 and is looking to end al-Sadr's uprising, which has left parts of southern Iraqi outside of coalition control.

U.S. troops have been stepping up their assaults on al-Sadr's followers, raiding offices and buildings where weapons are stored in several southern cities in increasingly bloody skirmishes. Moderate Shiite leaders have called on al-Sadr's militiamen to abandon Najaf, isolating the cleric and making it easier for U.S. forces to act against him.

On Thursday, U.S. forces moved to outlying areas of Najaf, drawing militants from the city center and enabling other troops to seize the two-story governor's office without resistance.

An estimated 40 militiamen were killed in gunbattles outside the city, said Capt. Roger Maynulet, a tank company commander with the Army's 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment.

After the soldiers took the building, heavy gunfire was heard near the governor's office and smoke was seen rising. Gunmen fired from rooftops as motorists fled through deserted streets, honking their horns.

One U.S. convoy of Humvees leaving the area was ambushed twice in 10 minutes by insurgents firing rocket-propelled grenades and automatic rifles from rooftops. An AP reporter who witnessed the attacks saw five militants who appear to have been killed in retaliatory fire.

Elsewhere, coalition troops exchanged gunfire with dozens of al-Sadr militiamen in Karbala, 50 miles north of Najaf. Militiamen took ambush positions behind cars and a discarded desk a few hundred yards from the city's main Shiite shrines.

A witness told Associated Press Television News that troops fired on the insurgents and ended up destroying four buses of Pakistani pilgrims, which were seen burning. The witness said "three or four" Pakistanis had been killed.

"We're going to demolish them — and even Bush," shouted one masked man, waving a Kalashnikov. "We're going to win, by God's will."

Militiamen also fired on Italian troops farther south near Nasiriyah, wounding one, the Italian military said.

In the past two days U.S. soldiers estimate they have killed about 80 militiamen. One U.S. soldier was killed Wednesday.

"I think we are going to gain momentum from now on," said Lt. Michael Watson, a platoon leader with the 2nd Armored Cavalry Regiment in Najaf.

The Baghdad bomb exploded outside a 3-foot-high concrete blast wall that protects a U.S. checkpoint.

The U.S. soldier slain by the bomb was the 21st U.S. serviceman killed in Iraq in May. The suicide bomber also died.

An Internet statement signed by a group linked to al-Qaida claimed responsibility.

The statement, on a Web site known for militant Islamic messages, was signed by the military wing of the "Monotheism and Jihad Group," which is believed led by Abu Musab al-Zarqawi. The Jordanian is wanted by the United States for allegedly organizing militants to fight U.S. troops in Iraq on behalf of al-Qaida. The statement's authenticity could not be confirmed.

Also Thursday, the U.S. military said two U.S. soldiers were killed and two were wounded when a roadside bomb exploded in Baghdad just before midnight Wednesday.

Meanwhile, a blindfolded man described as an Iraqi-American being held hostage in Iraq was shown pleading for help on an Arab TV station.

The man, speaking English, gave his name as Aban Elias and said he was from Denver.

"I am a civil engineer working here in Baghdad," he said, adding that he worked for the Pentagon.

Elias, shown on Dubai-based Al-Arabiya TV, appealed to Islamic associations to work for his release.

With the tape came a statement from a previously unknown group calling itself "The Islamic Rage Brigade." The group said Elias was kidnapped on May 3. It made no demands.

AP correspondent Hamza Hendawi contributed to this report from Baghdad.

Tickets Available
at the Box Office
or call:
413-545-2511
800-999-umas or online at:
www.fineartscenter.com

THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS, AMHERST
DISTINGUISHED VISITORS PROGRAM PRESENTS:

COMEDIAN:
MARGARET CHO
MAY 10, 2004.
FINE ARTS CENTER, UMASS /// 8:00PM
Ticket Prices // $10 Umass students w/ID
$25 General Public
$15 Five College students w/ID

Co-Sponsored by: The Arts Council, UVC TV-19, The Finance Comitte, The Ways and Means Comitte, Student Affairs & Campus Life Office, And Southwest Area Government in conjunction with Southwest week.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

FRIDAY, MAY 7, 2004

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Six Flags' ride safety must be questioned

Last Saturday, tragedy struck at Six Flags New England when 55-year old Stanley J. Mordarsky fell from the Superman Ride of Steel to his death. The ride, which goes up to speed of 75 miles per hour and consists of several large drops and turns, has only a lap bar for restraint.

However, this issue is not just a case of adequate safety precautions. Mordarsky, who liked to visit the park several times a year, suffered from cerebral palsy and was also overweight. According to his 82-year old mother, Germaine Mordarsky, he should never have been let on the ride in the first place.

"How could anybody as heavy as he was go up and spin up in the air like a yo-yo?" she said. "He was so sickly and handicapped. I just can't believe it."

The park defended its actions by saying that it has to comply with regulations of the federal Americans With Disabilities Act. The act states that disabled people may be allowed on rides as long as they can board by themselves, and according to park officials, Mordarsky could.

The real issue here is the safety of the ride itself. Despite its Saturday morning safety checks, something clearly went wrong, and regardless of Mordarsky's condition, steps must be taken to prevent something like this from ever happening again. His death is certainly disturbing, as hundreds of people a day waited in line for a taste of Superman, the fastest roller coaster in the world. And anyone could have been the victim of its lax safety features. The focus here should not be on whether he should have been on the ride to begin with, but on why he never made it off.

There is currently an investigation underway and the ride is closed until the issue can be resolved and the safety concerns put to rest. The park is cooperating and will hopefully be held accountable for the incident once proper inspections are complete.

Information from cnn.com and foxnews.com was used for this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Speakers must challenge, not simply support

Eric Reinach

On far too few occasions here at UMass does the student body get the chance to attend a lecture that brings history to life. Even less frequently we are invited to attend a presentation that itself is a historic event. On Thursday, April 29 the student body was fortunate enough to be graced by the presence of our tribal historian in residence, witnessing just such a moment in history.

Jean Foggo Simon traveled thousands of miles to deliver a rich narrative describing the life of her people, members of the Pequot, Wampanoag, and Narragansett tribes who originally inhabited this area of the Northeast before being enslaved and traded like cattle. Despite years of slavery, the speaker and her family have established a successful life in St. David's Island, Bermuda, far away from their ancestral homeland. Encouraged by British oppression to forget their history and live in abject poverty, these St. David Indians lived a life without knowledge of their rich cultural heritage.

Pushed to smaller and smaller sections of their island, a place Ms. Foggo Simon vividly describes as a prison without walls, these transplanted Natives fought a battle for survival. Only recently, due in large part to the speaker's diligent research, have the St. David's Indians rediscovered their roots. Before our eyes the class witnessed a reunion of a local Pequot and Narragansett representative, Tall Oaks, with the speaker and several members of her family. The realization of suppressed roots is a great step forward in banishing ignorance promoted by colonial oppression, a sight I wish more of the students here witnessed.

You may be asking yourself, what can I learn from this?

We, as students, need to recognize and support such lectures that celebrate (and create) history. Perspectives on such taboo subjects as modern day repression and slavery rarely get the voice they so richly deserve.

Personally my view is that we, as students, need to recognize and support such lectures that celebrate (and create) history. Perspectives on such taboo subjects as modern day repression and slavery rarely get the voice they so richly deserve. The audience for Ms. Foggo Simon's lecture should not be confined simply to a Contemporary Native American Issues class and the faculty members who supported placing her in the tribal historian role. More students should actively explore events on campus and take the time to indulge in what they supposedly came to college for in the first place: learning.

So my advice is to look with a skeptical eye at lectures by dubious dignitaries such as Roy Moore, the so-called "Ten Commandments" judge (in a country that supposedly heralds the separation of church and state). We students are better served by speakers that challenge, not support, entrenched and often ignorant notions of the world. My views and correspondingly, a little piece of my life, changes when I witness speakers such as Ms. Foggo Simon and Tall Oaks create history right here at UMass. I encourage my fellow students to attend lectures in the Native Speaker Series as well as to look around campus and utilize the wonderful speakers that occasionally come here. You'll learn something, and perhaps even witness history come alive in front of you.

Eric Reinach is a UMass student.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

LACK OF COVERAGE FOR CAMPUS GROUPS

I flip through The Daily Collegian on a regular basis, and with each page I scan lies a heavy disappointing feeling in my stomach. It comes from the realization that only some events on campus actually get recognized and published by The Daily Collegian.

I attended the ninth annual "Queerfest" last week, sponsored by the UMASS Pride Alliance, yet the Daily Collegian failed to mention this event. Instead the Radical Student Union's Coca-Cola Rally, and the annual "Take Back The Night" were featured, both having been quoted by the Daily Collegian as having 75 attendees. While these events are important, I can't understand how The Daily Collegian can justify selecting certain events over others. Did they miss the huge event that took place in between the RSU'S Coca-Cola Rally and "Take Back The Night?" Did they miss all of the bouncy toys, the music, the cotton candy, or the 300 plus people that attended the event? How discouraging, especially considering all the hard work that students and advisors put in to make this event happen.

It was at this point that I began to think back about on all of the events that the UMASS Pride Alliance have sponsored and realized that none of its thirteen plus events received coverage. Ironic, a group that tries to end discrimination and promote equality to all continues to get the shaft. The Daily Collegian muting their voices and promoting intolerance by silencing the message of Pride Alliance. It's actually quite sad, because Pride Alliance is one of the most active Registered Student Organizations on campus. They put on amazing events all year round, with a very limited budget.

My goal by submitting this is to inform you how upsetting it is to see the school newspaper only supporting some events, while dismissing so many others, unless of course you pay for advertising. It is at that moment that you are willing to work with and print for anyone. I wonder how many other student groups' events don't get published or recognized by their fellow peers. Maybe some day while flipping through the Daily Collegian I will read about these events and be proud of our school newspaper, but at this time I am very disappointed to even call it the University of Massachusetts school newspaper, for I don't think it is an accurate portrayal of the University or the students that attend it.

Julie Callan
UMass student

IN DEFENSE OF THE RED SOX

This is in defense of Michelle Rivera's article, and to Red Sox Nation as a whole. Every point Michelle picked out is valid. I think her editorial made a lot of the Yankees fans upset because they know it's true. I think they just don't like getting called out, hearing that their team isn't respectable, as opposed to a team that's bought and crafted by some chronic money spender named The Boss. How does it feel, Yankees fans, to know that every other person in this country, not just Red Sox fans, feels that your team is just a team that is bought?

In response to "It's only April," we all know what month that was. April was the Red Sox's month, that's what it was.

Also, the Yankees don't respectably build their teams. You said that these guys were built and stayed in the organization long — Mattingly, Derek Jeter, Mariano Rivera, Bernie Williams, Jorge Posada, Tino Martinez, Paul O'Neill, and the recently departed Andy Pettitte. What about the MVP's that Steinbrenner bought for just a season (or less)? Does Jose Canseco ring a bell? I can name much more, but that just sums it all up. The Yankees are cheats, and the fans are just bitter for being called out all the time. I hope your 180 million dollar payroll comes back to bite you in the butt. Go Red Sox!

Christina Brown
UMass student

The actions of a few failed an entire nation

Jen Hodson

Due to the mistreatment of Iraqi prisoners near a prison in Baghdad, an Army general and her command staff may face the end of long military careers. In addition, six soldiers are now facing court martial in Iraq where they may be forced to serve possible prison time.

This all began when action had been taken last month by the United States Army to remove 17 soldiers from duty in Iraq, including a brigadier general. However, the severity of the situation had not been realized until just recently when photos of these Iraqi prisoners, and the mistreatment they had undergone broke in the New Yorker last week — showing images far more disturbing than anyone might of expected.

The word mistreatment is not a harsh enough word to be used to describe the acts that took place. Rather, these prisoners were abused and humiliated, as photos displayed images of them being forced to pose naked pyramids on top of one another and positioned to simulate sex with each other. One image even showed an Iraqi prisoner standing on a box with his head covered with wires attached to his hands. He had been told that if he fell off the box, he would be electrocuted. In most of these cases it was discovered that Americans were found to be laughing, posing, pointing, or giving the camera a thumbs-up.

Abu Ghraib, the prison where these heinous photographs were taken, was once known for it's reputation as being the centerpiece of fear, where prisoners were taken when under Saddam Hussein's empire. Many of them never came out alive, and those who did, could barely describe the torturous acts that they had seen or encountered there.

Acts that we had originally intended to prevent from happening further became part of a sort of déjà vu. These 17 soldiers not only failed to set an example for the Iraqis, but also misrepresented the hundreds of thousands of other American soldiers at war and people back home.

Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt, deputy director for coalition operations, spoke with Dan Rather in a CBS/60 Minutes II interview in which he talked more in depth on the situation. In response to the question asked by Rather, "What can the Army say specifically to Iraqis and others who are going to see this and take it personally?" Kimmitt was quoted saying; "The first thing I'd say is we're appalled as well. These are our fellow soldiers. These are the people we work with every day, and they represent us. They wear the same uniform as us, and they let their fellow soldiers down. Our soldiers could be taken prisoner as well. And we expect our soldiers to be treated well by the adversary, by the enemy. And if we can't hold ourselves up as an example of how to treat people with dignity and respect, we can't ask that other nations do that to our soldiers as well."

Kimmitt is right and he makes a good point by saying that when we expect to be treated a certain way in another country, we should also live up to the standards in that we hold for ourselves.

He added, "So what would I tell the people of Iraq? This is wrong. This is reprehensible. But this is not representative of the 150,000 soldiers that are over here. I'd say the same thing to the American people. Don't judge your army based on the actions of a few."

Kimmitt is right and he makes a good point by saying that when we expect to be treated a certain way in another country, we should also live up to the standards in that we hold for ourselves. The way people should be treated is not a double standard and we can't expect to gain positive results from acting with such negative consequences. Equally important, we shouldn't judge the remaining soldiers who are over there fighting for us, but use this as an example for something that should never be repeated.

In a CNN report, Abdel Bari Atwan, editor of Al-Quds Al-Arabi newspaper in London, responded to the images by telling the UK Press Association, "It is absolutely shocking. I think this is the end of the story, the straw that broke the camel's back, for America. People will be extremely angry. Sexual abuse is the worst thing in that part of the world. It is shocking to all Muslims. America has lost the battle completely. I believe there will be more attacks."

I personally think that the American soldiers who were involved in these acts should be held accountable for what they have done. However, we should also try and get to the deeper root of the problem by finding out why these few soldiers thought it was okay to act in such a negative manner. We can't change what's already happened here, but by making an effort to discover why these actions took place, we could further prevent it from happening in the future.

Information for this column was found from www.cbsnews.com and www.cnn.com.

Jen Hodson is a Collegian columnist.

The hypocritical candidate

Ben Duffy

Just for the record, I didn't vote for Bush in 2000. And just for the record, I don't plan to vote for Bush this time around either. That may come as a surprise to many, who know me as a pretty staunch conservative. The president's had a rough couple of years since he took office, and I've defended — indeed, in many cases still do defend — his policies, to include the war in Iraq. I have a few beefs with the president, but the one that lost him my vote was the business of his military service. What I find even more damning than the accusation that he was AWOL is that he forced his way into the National Guard during the Vietnam War using his father's political influence. National Guardsmen were rarely deployed to Vietnam, and the particular jet that the unit flew was considered too obsolete to send to the combat zone.

But that doesn't let John Kerry off the hook. It'll be a cold day in hell before I vote for him. In fact, I think his story is more important to tell, mostly because the liberal media has given him a free pass that they did not extend to the president. It seems that Kerry can hardly even take a breath without mentioning his military service in Vietnam, and yet the media has been loathe to turn the spotlight onto Mr. Kerry's service record.

John Kerry is a self-described war criminal. Yep. Check out this quote from NBC's "Meet the Press," April 18, 1971:

"There are all kinds of atrocities, and I would have to say that, yes, yes, I committed the same kind of atrocities as thousands of other soldiers … I took part in search and destroy missions, in the burning of villages. All of this is contrary to the laws of warfare, all of this is contrary to the Geneva Conventions and all of this is ordered as a matter of written established policy by the government of the United States from the top down. And I believe that the men who designed these, the men who designed the free fire zone, the men who ordered us, the men who signed off the air raid strike areas, I think these men, by the letter of the law, the same letter of the law that tried Lieutenant Calley, are war criminals."

Actually, from the text of it, it almost sounds as if Kerry is pointing the finger at the higher brass, despite the fact that it was he and his men who were actually doing the dirty deeds. Interesting … well that's the same defense that the Nazis used at Nuremberg in 1946. It didn't work for those guys, but apparently it worked for John Kerry.

It almost sounds as if Kerry is pointing the finger at the higher brass, despite the fact that it was he and his men who were actually doing the dirty deeds. Interesting... well that's the same defense that the Nazis used at Nuremberg in 1946.

His comment about Lieutenant Calley is even more puzzling. Who was Lieutenant William Calley? He was the man charged with the 1968 slaughter of My Lai village. He commanded the platoon that razed the entire village without a single shot fired in resistance. Opponents of the war knew the case well, and were actively trying to convince America that incidents like My Lai were commonplace. The problem is that Kerry and Calley were of the same rank, and held equivalent positions. Calley may have been an officer, but he was not a big shot by any means. If Kerry believes that Calley is responsible for all of the war crimes committed beneath him, then Kerry must take responsibility for whatever atrocities he committed personally, as well as those committed by his crew. There can be no passing the buck on this one.

Ironically though, I don't believe that Kerry really is a war criminal. Sure, he indicted himself on national television, but he had a different set of motivations at that time. Involved in Vietnam Veterans Against the War, he spent most of the early 1970s attending anti-war rallies that bordered on treason. His commitment to losing the war in Vietnam required that he paint a very negative picture of Vietnam for Americans. He wanted America to believe that My Lai was the norm, and so he even went as far as to say the he was guilty as well.

I wonder what Kerry would say if he were confronted with that quote today. He's been running for so long as Candidate Kerry the War Hero, I'm guessing that he might even deny that he ever said it. It might not be good for the polls if people thought that he used to burn down Vietnamese villages full of innocent civilians.

Who knows what really happened to John Kerry in Vietnam? For that matter, who knows what really happened to anyone in Vietnam? Were atrocities commonplace, or were they isolated incidents? Did the upper echelons of command condone them, or were they committed by rogue soldiers? Having never served in Vietnam, I'd have to say that I don't know. Even Vietnam vets themselves don't seem to agree on the point.

No matter, though. In either case, John Kerry is an extremely dishonorable man. If he is guilty of what he claims, then he's a despicable murderer. If it was all a lie, then he's guilty of smearing his fellow servicemen and doing the work of the enemy to break our American will to fight. I can't say that I want either type of man in the Oval Office come next January.

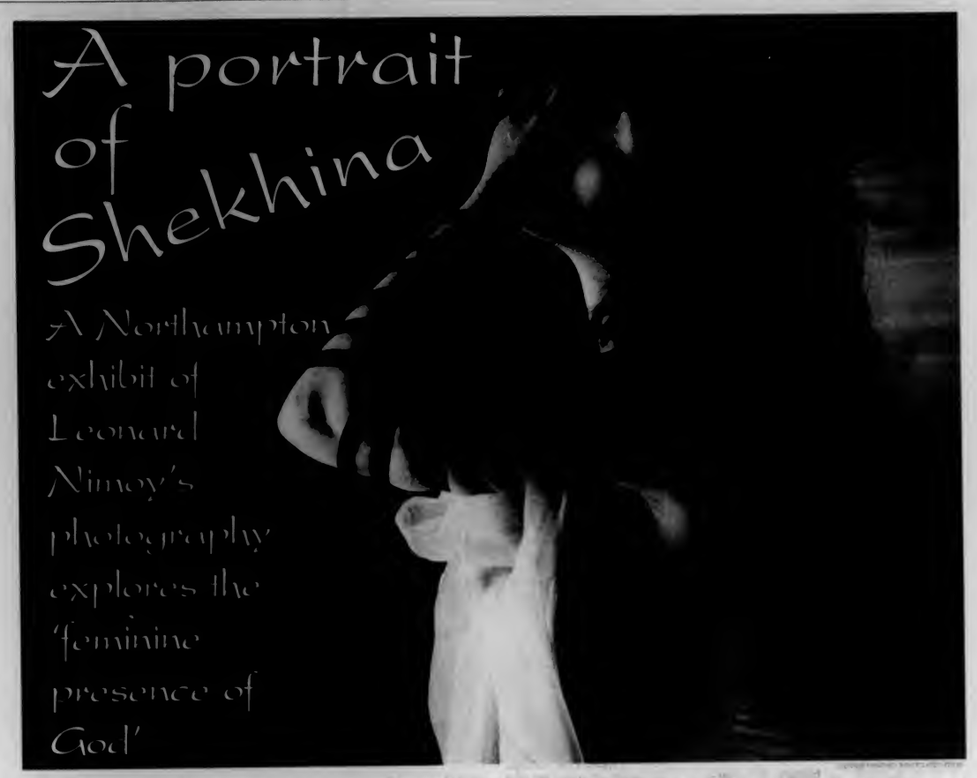
Ben Duffy is a UMass student.

Attention Collegian staff: End of the year party

Sunday, May 9, VFW, 9 p.m. -12:30 a.m.

Come join us for some good times, food and music

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian



ARTS & LIVING

FRIDAY, MAY 7, 2004

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A portrait of Shekhina

A Northampton exhibit of Leonard Nimoy's photography explores the 'feminine presence of God'

One of an exhibit of photographs is shown at the R. Michelson Art Gallery in Northampton, by actor Leonard Nimoy, best known for his role as Mr. Spock in "Star Trek." The women in Nimoy's photographs appear in a glow; black and white images awash in light. Some are nude, others are loosely covered with translucent robes or Jewish prayer shawls.

By Adam Gorlick
Associated Press

NORTHAMPTON (AP) — The women appear aglow; black and white images bathed in light. Some are nude, others are loosely covered with translucent robes or lewish prayer shawls.

They are Leonard Nimoy's embodiment of Shekhina — the feminine presence of God.

Best known for his role as Mr. Spock in "Star Trek," Nimoy left the screen to pursue other interests — most notably, photography.

In 2002, he published "Shekhina," a book of about 40 photographs that explore his interest in the feminine aspects of lewish divinity. Many of the images are on display this month at the R. Michelson Galleries in Northampton.

"At the heart of it all is the fact that I was trying to really completely enter into the world of the feminine," says Nimoy, 73.

"I didn't want to do misty, cloudy figures. I didn't want to shroud her. I wanted to make her flesh and blood, and I wanted to make her definitively female."

It's an idea that was planted with Nimoy when he was about 8 years old, although he didn't fully realize it until a few years ago.

During a segment of high holiday services at his Orthodox synagogue in Boston, members of the congregation stood before the assembly to deliver a special blessing. Standing with his brother, father and grandfather, Nimoy was told not to look at the men as they chanted the prayer.

But he took a peek, and saw the men swaying with their arms outstretched and their hands splayed in the manner he would later use as the Vulcan greeting in his "Star Trek" role. The hand symbol represents the first letter of a Hebrew word for God.

"These gentlemen are up there in a fervent, singsong, swaying presentation," Nimoy said. "It was like a revivalist meeting. The entire congregation had their eyes covered. But I was entranced by it."

For decades, Nimoy didn't know why the congregation was not supposed to look as the blessing was being given. A few years ago, he finally asked the rabbi at Temple Israel of Hollywood, the reform synagogue he now attends.

"There's a legend that the Shekhina — the feminine aspect of God — comes in to bless the congregation," Nimoy said. "But the light from the Shekhina could be overwhelming and you could not survive it, so you shouldn't look. I was taken by that when I heard the explanation."

With his collection of photos, Nimoy probes his understanding of Shekhina. Using professional models, actresses and dancers — not all of whom are Jewish — Nimoy sought subjects who possessed "an inner light."

"I needed models who could bring the sense of spirit to life," he said. "They needed to bring vitality."

One of them, Susan Bay Nimoy, is his wife.

But his use of nude and partially clad models donning a tallit and tefillin — Jewish prayer accessories traditionally worn by men — has ignited some controversy in the Jewish community.

"Shekhina" was banned from a Jewish book fair in Detroit last year, and Nimoy's appearance at a fund-raising dinner for the Jewish Federation of Greater Seattle was canceled shortly after the book was published.

"I can't say the controversy surprised me," Nimoy said. "But I didn't think I'd encounter censorship. To be banned at a book fair, to me, that's just wrong.

But his photos have been well received at many Reform synagogues and at art galleries and museums around the country.

In Northampton, a liberal college town that's home to the all-women Smith College, a line of people snaked out the gallery door last weekend when Nimoy attended the exhibit's opening.

"This is a perfect place for his work," said gallery owner Richard Michelson. "This is an area with a lot of liberal Jews who are interested in what he's doing and his approach to the feminine side of spirituality."

While Michelson attributes the jam-packed opening to Nimoy's celebrity, he said people walked away from the exhibit more impressed with Nimoy the photographer than Nimoy the Vulcan.

"I was a bit surprised about how little talk there was about 'Star Trek' and how much people were focused on his pictures and his approach to Judaism," Michelson said.

In Flames have struggled to maintain their heavy metal credibility throughout an image makeover. Their last album disappointed fans and "Soundtrack" doesn't fair much better.

Latest release finds heavy metal veterans In Flames without heat

By David Fonseca
Collegian Staff

In Flames. The simple mention of this band's name in metal circles is likely to illicit one of two emotions: either devotion, or righteous indignation.

This response is due mainly to the fact that the band that helped pioneer the Swedish melodic death metal scene along with acts like Soilwork and Dark Tranquility has spent the last the five or so years of their career doing something that most metal heads simply cannot stand: evolving.

This may seem like a rather harsh indictment of the scene that I hold so dear, however, but for the most part it's true. This is not to say we fear experimentation or minor additions to a band's sound. Metal is home to some of the most provoking music ever made though. But, when an act undergoes a complete face-lift comparable to the latest In Flames transformation, the response is generally not a pleasant one. The band's 2003 release, the aptly titled "Reroute to Remain" was not well received in the metal community and the latest album "Soundtrack to Your Escape" was given about as much chance for success as a one-legged man in an ass-kicking contest prior to its release. That being said, I was determined to give this album an objective listen. In Flames has always held a special place in my heart and I've always been a strong proponent of giving second chances, especially to bands with generally strong track records.

In Flames
'Soundtrack To Your Escape'
Nuclear Blast

My open mind was rewarded with the album's very strong opening track "F(r)iend." The song starts with what is one of the heaviest In Flames riffs I've heard in a quite a long time. It also features a strong vocal performance from lead singer Anders Frieden, who possesses one of the best mid-level screams in the business. This song is a perfect execution of the In Flames formula: moderately heavy and undeniably catchy.

Unfortunately it's pretty inconsistent from this point on. Track two, "The Quiet Place," the album's lead single, is only mildly effective. It sounds similar to Depeche Mode with the distortion cranked up a notch, but not in a good way. It also features an unfortunate attempt at clean vocals by Frieden who ends up sounding a little too close to Jonathan Davis from Korn for my liking.

The majority of the album follows this same pattern, with few exceptions. The track "Evil in a Closet" shows just how much In Flames has changed. Whereas the band once crafted complex arrangements like the breathtaking "Moonshield" to lighten atmosphere, "Soundtrack" sees the band opting for a much sparser and straight ahead approach. It may work for some, but is really not my cup of tea. Songs like "In search for I" and "My sweet Shadow" show flashes of the band's former brilliance, but all in all the bright spots come too few and far between for this reviewer.

"Soundtrack to Your Escape" is by no means a horrible album. If I were a fan of industrial/ nu-metal I would be all over this, as I'm sure many fans of that genre will be. Because, as far as industrial/nu-metal albums go, this isn't half bad. However, over the last 10 years I've come to expect something else, something it appears the band no longer cares to deliver.

There are a few worthwhile tracks on this album that I will probably go back to, and I will no doubt catch them when they come around on tour. Ultimately though, the only thing "Soundtrack to Your Escape" truly inspires in me these days is a desire to check out dust off their older albums.

Even though 'It's Not Funny' Cross keeps fans laughing with new disc

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

David Cross, for his slacker persona, is a comedian that cannot be accused of laziness. Known to comedy fans as half, with Bob Odenkirk, of the genius duo that created "Mr. Show With Bob & David," the too-short-lived HBO sketch series, Cross has also kept busy, and made himself more recognizable to the mainstream, with roles in everything from "Men In Black" to "Just Shoot Me" to "Eternal Sunshine Of The Spotless Mind." And while those roles pay the bills, or in the case of "Eternal Sunshine" are actually artistically fulfilling, Cross seems to always return to the place he started: stand-up comedy.

In 2002 Sub Pop records, best known for unleashing cutting-edge bands like Nirvana and Soundgarden upon the world, released his first comedy album (which was also Sub Pop's first) "Shut Up You Fing Baby." The double-disc set was an instant classic, an album that already ranks up with those by the likes of Richard Pryor and Bill Hicks. This past fall Sub Pop released a DVD, "Let America Laugh" that chronicled the tour that yielded "Shut Up.." and the lunatics and morons Cross encountered.

Only a few months later, Cross has culminated enough material for another stand-up set. "It's Not Funny," which was recorded this January in Washington D.C., finds Cross as sharp and hilarious as ever — tackling subjects from 9/11 to electric scissors. Cross is, as usual, no holds barred in taking viciously funny stabs at everyone from George W. (the "only evil, crazy thing" he hasn't done is kill and eat Jewish babies) to Paris Hilton ("rich, giggling ct") to Scott Stapp ("the lead singer of the third worst band in history" [Creed]), to the American people as a whole ("are we a nation of six year olds? Answer: yes").

David Cross 'It's Not Funny' Sub Pop

In conversation, Cross is no less acidic, although he is much nicer. In a phone interview with The Collegian, Cross was happy to answer all questions but enjoyed offering a bit of sarcasm with many of his answers. Cross volunteered that the long-awaited (by a rabid cult following) "Mr. Show" Season 4 DVDs would be released in September, although he then commented that although the discs were already completed and ready ship, HBO wanted to get them acclimated to a warehouse environment before thrusting the poor, defenseless discs into the world.

Cross also said that he is working on a script with "Mr. Show" co-stars Odenkirk and Brian Posehn. Cross said that the script, which will be a series of sketches tied together, is practically finished but Odenkirk and Posehn are working on the "wrap-around" portions — the story that will tie the pieces together — while Cross puts in his thoughts from afar while he was shooting the Fox sitcom "Arrested Development".

However Cross seems mostly focused on his stand-up act. While "Shut Up You Fing Baby" proved to be one of the funniest albums in many, many years, some critics complained about the length, saying that Cross's occasionally sprawling delivery of jokes, making them more like stories then punchlines, could have been trimmed down to one disc. Cross is more satisfied with the amount of content presented on "It's Not Funny".

Further, Cross notes that some people have complained about his political content. Again, one of Cross' best elements — his intelligent ability to question authority — is something that some listeners are turned off by. While "It's Not Funny" still has plenty of political content it is not quite as overwhelming as on "Shut Up..." Cross does still deal with important issues and is fearless in his mocking of the nation's leaders and anyone else who finds themselves in the comedian's crosshairs. However Cross sees humor as his main priority and if he can inform people and make them think — though he doesn't set out to change anyone's mind about their personal political beliefs — that is icing on the cake.

CYR/STAFF/CHRISTOPHER LO

Cross said that he would one day like to release another double album — one disc all political material and the other all "wacky" material. Until that day comes Cross has to bare the burden of those who don't care for all aspects of his material. Luckily he does not compromise his comedic version to make people happy. He has, however, mastered the art of balancing.

"It's Not Funny" sways from harsh and smart political commentary to tackling off social issues and religion to making fun of the sort-of lame, sort-of stupid people that he encounters in his everyday life to mocking himself.

While Cross' humor can sometimes be dark and coarse, if not downright offensive, he is adept at charming the audience as well. Even in the darkest moments – such as the jokes that involve abortion and Sept. 11 — Cross has a kind, caring backbone to his sarcastic, cynical demeanor.

No, David Cross doesn't seem like that type of guy that will be babysitting the neighborhood kids, but he certainly is not a student of the insulting, meatheaded, Andrew Dice Clay school of comedy. When Cross mocks the president it's not because he likes to make fun of people, or because the president is an easy target; it's because Bush is deserving of being torn apart. The same goes for all of Cross' scathingly hysterical material.

Cross deals with things from the mundane to the extraordinary and everything in between from the same point of view: a combination of cynicism, outrage, disbelief, sarcasm, and a general sense of 'what is wrong with this world.'

In one bit, Cross combines many of his most-used themes to discuss why church and state were meant to be kept separate. After comparing church to the sci-fi channel show "Crossing Over," Cross discusses President Bush's faith. "One of my favorite things about President Bush is that he is a born again Christian," Cross says, "which means...that he believes that ... probably two-thirds of this room is gonna burn in hell for all eternity. That gives me comfort as a rational, sane citizen of the free world." After the laughter dies down Cross continues, "I'm quoting [the president]: he has not made up his mind yet about evolution," Cross hems and haws, pretending to ponder evolution and then concludes, "that is a tough one. I mean on the one hand you've got the bible and everything the bible says and on the other hand you've got: facts."

It's Cross' attitude, wit, and fearlessness that might turn some people off — notably the easily offended, the extremely religious, or the right-wing — but everyone else will be tearing up with laughter. The comedian's quick mind and bold knack for calling foul on those who he sees as blatantly wrong make him one of the most intelligent voices around. His effortless ability to find humor in subjects of all kinds and his trademark, unintimidable style makes Cross one of the most distinct stand-ups working. Put those qualities together and you have another must-have comedy album from one of the funniest and most important comedians of our time.

Southwest Week to put stress to the test

By Yasmene Dawson
Collegian Correspondent

Recognizing that student stress levels are about to peak for the semester, University of Massachusetts officials have scheduled stress management activities at Southwest the week before finals.

The activities will be free for all students, with a focus on "having fun and managing stress, giving students positive outlets to blow off steam before finals," according to UMass health educator Tom Schiff. The activities will be held for four days from May 10-14.

"We know people's performance academically and in work are affected by stress," Schiff said. "When [people] get overwhelmed, their performance suffers. Those who participate will benefit directly from the events."

Schiff says the project targets Southwest because it is home to about 25 percent of the student body. Although the project will be advertised only in the Southwest buildings, "We won't be turning people away," Schiff said.

The activities include indoor and outdoor events; movies, silly games, a petting zoo, massage, acupuncture, low key athletics, juggling performances and yoga. Movies will be held nightly at 10 p.m. Yoga will be held at 7 p.m. on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Acupuncture will be held from 4:30-5 p.m. on Tuesday at John Quincy Adams and Thursday at Cance. A maximum of 20 people can participate in the acupuncture, first come, first serve.

Juggling performances will be held at dinnertime on Monday, Wednesday and Friday. If the weather is nice, the performances will be held at the pyramids or otherwise, in the ballroom of Berkshire Dining Commons.

Petting zoo animals include: farm raised angora goats, yaks, camels and llamas. The petting zoo, called "Yak on the Pyramids," will be held from 11 a.m. to 5p.m. Thursday.

Jean McKimmie, area director for Southwest-South, said Yak on the Pyramids, "will be a petting zoo where [the students] can pet and feed the animals."

Excitement seems to be the overall feeling among those who have caught wind about the project. Camille Britton, second-floor resident assistant in Kennedy, said that the project sounds like "a real good idea. I would love to see llamas!"

Britton is also excited about the other events the stress management week will bring to Southwest. "A masseuse sounds great and acupuncture is a good stress reliever. Bringing the students together to see a petting zoo in Southwest will be something to remember. It's a cool idea!"

Kelly Grasso, a junior nursing major who has lived in Southwest for two years said, "I think that this is a great idea. I wish they had something like this available on a regular basis for students with high stress levels to take advantage of throughout the semester. Especially the massage and acupuncture — I would be a weekly customer."

Sarah Hults, a senior psychology major who has lived in Southwest for two years, agreed. "This is a really great idea. The university should have more activities like this, not just before finals week, but throughout the course of the semester. Incorporating ideas like the petting zoo and a masseuse increases interest and student participation. This might be the only time to see a yak up close and personal!"

Kathleen Edison, a sophomore political science major who has also lived in Southwest for two years, said, "I think it will be really beneficial, not just for stress relief, but for general study habits. We live in tiny dorm rooms, so this is a study break out of our rooms."

Schiff wants "people to attend, and stress levels to lower as a result of participation, and [students] to do better on exams." Students interested in the upcoming events should look for posters in the Southwest area with activities, times and locations.

The BIG Chill

Chillin at the Bluewall
Monday May 10th 2004
Bluewall 7pm

The famous "Trivia Night" featuring Mark from The Harp Irish Pub. Come play trivia and win $1500 worth of great prizes or win from our raffle. Cloud Nine Karaoke will also be there! Seniors get their first drink free!!

Ultimate Chill Disc Tournament
Tuesday May 11th 2004
Pond Lawn 4-8pm

Form your own team and compete to win the 1st Ultimate Chill Disc title. Only 16 teams can play so sign up ASAP! T-shirts will be given to everyone playing. First and second place teams receive fantastic prizes! Pick up and drop off the registration form at the resource room in the Student Union.

Big Chill Carnival and BBQ
Wednesday May 12th 2004
Library Lawn 3-7pm

Come chill outside with free rides and food for all UMass students. Music will also be provided by Cloud Nine.

Sponsored by: Student Activities Center/Student Affairs and Campus Life Campus Center and Auxiliary Services.

Change your mind this summer:

- Get the Gen Ed courses you need
- Enjoy smaller class sizes
- Keep on track for graduation
- Choose from over 200 courses and degree programs
- AND take 6 credits or more and we'll waive the registration fee!

Watch for our money-saving coupon in your mailbox.

umass.edu/contined
413-545-2414

UMassAmherst Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.

Goten
Cooking at your table
New Hours
Mon Closed
Tues-Fri: 5-10pm
Sat: 12-10pm
lunch special: 12-3pm
Sun: 4-9pm
now accepting OCMP
On Rt 116 Sunderland / Call for reservations 413 665 3628

Minutewomen clip Eagles

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team always pulls out the win, no matter what the situation is.

Down two runs in the sixth, the Minutewomen tallied three straight runs to pull out a 3-2 victory over the Eagles to extend their winning streak to seven games.

"It was a good win," coach Elaine Sortino said. "We struggled a little bit in the beginning, we were shaky, but we held BC down good and pulled out the win."

The Maroon and White improve to 31-13 (11-1 Atlantic 10), while the Eagles fall to 31-22.

This time, it wasn't resident clutch hitter Denise Denis with the game-winner, but rather second baseman Kristi Stefanoni. Down one run with two outs in the bottom of the sixth, the sophomore approached a 2-2 pitch by hitting six straight foul balls. When she finally knocked it fair, it was a double to centerfield that just bounced off the centerfielder's glove, to score the winning run.

The Eagles were first to strike in the bottom of the third, when Kimmy Hopkins hit a two-run shot over the right field fence to make it 2-0. UMass had a chance to score in the fifth. With the bases loaded with two outs and Denis at bat, Denis did the unimaginable and struck out to end the inning.

"She had a good at bat," Sortino said. "She's only human, I don't expect her to be a robot. Sometimes it doesn't work out, what are you going to do?"

Barb LaFogg was pulled from the game after three innings, having given up two runs on four hits. Kelli Arnold was solid, giving up no runs and credited with the win (17-3).

The Minutewomen pulled through in the sixth, and never looked back. After a Pam Sulick bunt scored Jamie Cahalan, and with runners on second and third and no outs, freshman Brittany Thompson struck out KC Budrewicz and Amanda Morin for two outs. Facing an 0-2 count, Stefanoni was thrown a wild pitch, and Nicole Wilson slid home the second run.

After hitting six straight foul balls, Stefanoni slammed the game-winner into right.

BC had a golden opportunity to get a run back in the next frame, but Erin Mackey hit into a double play that was beautifully handled by Hilary Puglia.

"That was just an outstanding double play by her," Sortino said. "I think that play should have been on ESPN, that should be the play of the week."

The Eagles then went 1-2-3 in the bottom of the seventh to seal the come-from-behind victory for UMass.

Just yesterday Puglia was named the New England Intercollegiate Softball Coaches Association Player of the Year. The junior infielder currently leads UMass with a .338 average, 28 runs scored, 45 hits and nine doubles.

Kelli Arnold and Aisha Franke were also named to the NEISCA first team, while KJ Kelley was given an honorable mention.

On Sunday, the Minutewomen will have the opportunity to go a perfect 4-for-4 against the Eagles in 2004, when they return home for a doubleheader in their last homestand of the regular season.

The Eagles have struggled against the Maroon and White thus far this season. On April 15, KJ Kelley broke UMass' single season home run record with her 12th of the year and Kelli Arnold hurled her third shutout of the season as the Minutewomen blanked the Eagles 4-0.

CYR/STAFF/KARIN WINGER

Hilary Puglia leads UMass in hits (46), runs (28), and batting average (.338). The Minutewomen have a home double-header against Boston College this Sunday.

Team mourns fallen player

By John Wawrow
Associated Press

BUFFALO, N.Y. (AP) — Coach Mike MacDonald managed a slight smile, recalling how he watched Richard Jones grow up during the player's three years at Canisius.

That, MacDonald said on Thursday, was "the fun part," watching Jones go from being a raw freshman, who required help opening his first bank account, to emerging as a quiet, team leader and dedicated student.

"The fun part is when you see a kid go through what Rich went through and kind of grow up right before your eyes and be such a great kid," MacDonald said. "To me, that's the reward of coaching."

And that's what made Jones' sudden death on Wednesday shocking.

"It's terrible," MacDonald said. "This is as down as you can go."

Canisius College and its men's basketball program are in mourning. Jones, 21, died shortly after he collapsed during a workout with several teammates, and under the supervision of MacDonald and his assistants, at the school.

An Erie County medical examiner ruled drugs did not play a role in Jones' death.

The cause of death was listed as natural after an autopsy performed Wednesday. health department spokesman Kevin Montgomery said. Citing state law, Montgomery said he could not provide further details.

The ruling indicates that Jones' death was the result of an existing condition.

That didn't make it any easier for the midtown Buffalo-based, tight-knit, Roman Catholic school with an enrollment of 3,400.

"Nothing can prepare you for something like this," said Jon Ferris, who just completed his senior year on the team. "Time's the only thing that's going to heal this."

Athletic director Tim Dillon said the school, which announced Jones' death before holding a vigil on Wednesday night, has already provided counselors for players and students. Dillon said Canisius will dedicate, "a celebration of life" to Jones on Saturday evening at the school's chapel.

Dillon said he's been in contact with Jones' family, helping them arrange transportation to Buffalo and a memorial service, which has yet to be determined. Jones is a native of Boston, where his mother, Delta Grant, still lives.

Jones, who had just completed his junior season, played in 88 games with the Golden Griffins, starting 47. The 6-foot-6 forward averaged 5.2 points and 4.3 rebounds for his career.

Jones collapsed about 20 minutes into the sanctioned workout. He had taken a shot and began running toward the baseline when his body began to tremble and he fell face first to the floor, Canisius spokesman Marc Gignac said.

Two of the school's trainers, Andrew Smith and Matthew Nuesell, immediately rushed to help Jones, who was unconscious but breathing and had a pulse. Jones lost his pulse while the two trainers administered CPR and used an automatic external defibrillator, Gignac said.

Jones was taken to the hospital, where he was later pronounced dead.

Jones is the second Canisius basketball player to die while attending the school. On March 5, 1988, junior Jeff Taggart had a heart seizure while on the bench during a game against Niagara. He died in an ambulance on his way to a hospital.

America may stay out of Olympics

OLYMPICS from page 8

Olympic bombing."

Still, the U.S. Olympic Committee says no one in the government has mentioned anything about the possibility of not sending a team.

"We're going. We're not going to rob our athletes of the chance they've worked for years to earn," said Bill Martin, acting USOC president.

The International Olympic Committee doesn't seem quite as confident about the success of the games. Last month, the IOC for the first time took out a $170 million policy to protect against the cancellation of the games because of war, terrorism or earthquakes.

And on Tuesday, a Senate subcommittee heard testimony before two senators met behind closed doors with terrorism officials and the U.S. Ambassador to Greece.

"We were beginning to hear a lot of concerns about the preparations and whether we should go," said Sen. Gordon Smith, R-Ore.

Some of those concerns came from an unusual source. former Olympic swimmer Mark Spitz. The winner of seven gold medals in 1972 told the BBC last week he could see circumstances that would force the United States to pull out.

"I would say that about six months ago it was highly unlikely," Spitz said, "but each day as it goes on with current world affairs it becomes more probable than not that ongoing conversations will take place as to how important it is to put athletes in harm's way."

If the United States didn't go, it would cause serious damage to the Olympics.

The decision by Carter in 1980 to keep the U.S. team home because the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan was severely criticized in the Olympic movement. The Soviets retaliated in 1984 by boycotting the Los Angeles Olympics.

Nine-time gold medal sprinter and long jumper Carl Lewis was one of those who had to stay home.

"Absent some clear and present danger, we should never take that course of action again," Lewis said. "Our athletes have been training for much of their lives for this very special moment. Let's not take that away from them."

Three-time judo Olympian Jimmy Pedro agreed.

"We've lost the fight for freedom if we give in," he said.

Last dance for seniors

MEN'S LAX from page 10

worked so hard, if I could give him a goal, that'd be the one thing I'd like to see happen."

Just two days before what is almost certainly the last game of the season, the team reflected on the death of Eric Sopracasa, on the fifth anniversary of his passing after being struck in the chest by a ball. While none of the current members of the team played with Sopracasa, both Lundburg and Walker said that they were often told about him during their time in Amherst.

The players also wear a black patch on their jerseys with the number 43 — Sopracasa's number, and that number has taken on added significance for the seniors. The class of 2004 has notched 43 wins in its career — the most in any four-year period — with one more game to go. The team was reminded of this during Thursday's practice.

"Coach [Greg Cannella] gave a little speech about how it is our 43rd victory," Lundburg said of the team's last win — 16-4 over Manhattan at home. "That's [Sopracasa's] number, and it kind of dawns on you ... [The seniors] didn't know 'Soup' personally, we weren't here yet, but coach said, 'if anybody would want you to win this game, it would be him.'

Coach [Chris] Gabrieli said, 'the 43 is not our number, 44 is our number.'"

A win Saturday would bring a happy ending to a season that has seen injuries claim the first half, and inconsistent play doom the second. The Minutemen have had some success this year, like the four-game win streak they went on from March 23 against Hofstra through April 9's victory over Manhattan. But a year that began with top scorers Jeff Zywicki and Sean Morris on the sidelines due to ailment comes to a close tomorrow, with a three-game losing streak weighing heavily on the minds of the squad.

"The great thing is that they'll have the opportunity to play their last on Garber Field," Cannella said. "From my perspective, it's great, and I'm sure in 10 years they'll think more about that."

NEW ON TUESDAY!
LAST SAMURAI
CALENDAR GIRLS
CHASING LIBERTY
ELEPHANT
GIRL WITH A PEARL EARRING
PETER PAN
TRIPLETS OF BELLEVILLE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Bruegger's
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Rent One of Ours
• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks
• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated
549-RENT (7368)
No additional fee for 21-25 year old drivers
POTTERS RENT A TRUCK RENTALS
at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

THE WATERFRONT
WEDNESDAYS FEATURING:
$1 Draft
$1 Shooters
$2 Well Drinks
Every
Hosted by DJ KT
Spinning hip-hop and reggae all night long!
No cover charge, 21+ only, 10-2am
FRIDAYS FEATURING:
New! Drink specials every week!
Hosted by: DJ Joe E Mak
No cover charge, 21+ only, 9-2 am
COLLEGE NIGHT
Wednesday
920 Main St.
Lower Rd. to Holyoke
413-532-2292
www.waterfronttavern.com

PLAN AHEAD FOR NEXT YEAR

Excellent location... 1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments-1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.

NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours 8 am to 4:30 pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0165

Hit the books, then hit the beach!

Looking to get ahead in your course work? Short on credits and need to catch up? Or just looking for something satisfying to do this Summer? A MassBay Summer Session course is the way to go!

- Day and evening classes start May 24*
- Affordable resident cost is $136 per credit
- 5- or 10-week courses
- A great way to earn college credits quickly
- Credits are transferable to your school! (When you are a university or college student, or incoming college freshman)
- Wellesley, Framingham, and Ashland

Call MassBay today at 781-239-2703 or go to www.massbay.edu

Don't sweat it.
Check out MassBay's Summer Session Courses in:

Business
EMT
English
Health
History
Lab Sciences (such as Anatomy & Physiology, Biology, Microbiology)
Math
Social Sciences
and other transferable courses!

Classes meet Monday-Thursday so there's plenty of time left for other Summer activities.

To register or obtain additional information, call 781-239-2703.

MASSBAY COMMUNITY COLLEGE
Start here. Go anywhere.

This summer, change your life: change your mind.

We will change your mind this summer with new course selections, expanded degree programs and accredited online learning.

Use this coupon to waive the registration fee for 6 or more credits!*

Only at UMass Amherst. Only this summer.

Call 413-545-2414 for a free course catalog, or visit us online at www.umass.edu/summer

UMassAmherst Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.

*Savings Code: E8T148. May be applied when registering for six or more credits at one time during Summer Session I or II, 2004. Coupon has a singular value of $38.00; multiple coupons may not be applied to one registration. Must be presented at the time of registration and may not be applied retroactively. Not redeemable in cash or credit. Not valid if credit load falls below six. Other limitations apply.

No webs displayed on diamond

SPIDERMAN from page 10

rilegious."

Ammer said his group approached baseball about pulling the bases promotion.

"We could easily solve it," he said.

Many baseball purists denounced the plan, including Fay Vincent, a former baseball commissioner and president of Columbia Pictures. Having watched jockeys earn the right to have ads on their uniforms for the Kentucky Derby, some thought it was a step too far in the increasing commercialization of sports."

"I think they made a good decision to change their minds," former commissioner Peter Ueberroth said. "I don't think it makes any sense at all. It's a clutter."

Teams will have the option of having ads on their on-deck circles during games, according to Jacqueline Parkes, baseball's senior vice president for marketing and advertising.

Baseball's Hall of Fame said it could find no records of ads ever appearing on bases during games.

"At the end of the day, as we said yesterday, it was the smallest element, not that important to us," Parkes said. "While it was something originally they wanted, it is not worth risking or damaging the fans' experience."

Baseball officials were surprised by the reaction, which included several front-page stories in Wednesday's newspapers.

"It just shows the strength of major league baseball and the place people put it," Parkes said.

Minnesota Twins outfielder Torii Hunter — nicknamed "Spider-Man" for his acrobatic catches — was disappointed by the reversal.

"It's for kids, and kids love it," he said. "It would have been cool to see the Spider-Man logo for those three days. Kids could have worn their Spider-Man gear to the stadium."

Oakland outfielder Billy McMillon liked the decision.

"I just wonder where this leads to. Will it be the Bad News Bears with Chico's Bail Bonds on the back of our uniforms?" he said.

"I understand revenue, but I didn't think it would invade baseball. I never thought it would come to this. They're wise not to put it on our uniforms."

Women's lax looks to continue streak way through the first half, and they were ultimately out of the game at that point.

WOMEN'S LAX from page 10

"It was an off day for them," Bolduc said. "They know it and regret it. They've been given a second chance, and they're a more confident team."

Bolduc said her team has been working on the things that hurt them in the first meeting, and they haven't lost since.

"We've been practicing slides for the fast break. We need to take away drives, have more help on defense and control the clock," Bolduc said.

Senior midfielder Tracey Drown led the Minutewomen with six goals and two assists in the loss against Temple while Marie Cataldo led the Owls with seven goals in the contest.

Drown, senior attacker Hope Zelinger and junior defender Kristin St. Hilaire were named to the Atlantic 10 All-Conference team, which was announced yesterday. St. Hilaire was also named Atlantic 10 Defensive Player of the Year for the stellar work she has done while being matched up against the oppositions' top scoring threats during each game.

Drown will be a key factor for UMass as she has scored 21 goals over the past four games, but Bolduc knows it will take a team effort to eliminate Temple.

"When they choose to do something, they'll do it," Bolduc added, "This is the year we can not only beat Temple, but we can win the A-10 and the NCAA (championships). They want to go all the way."

If UMass advances to the finals, they will play the winner of the Duquesne-St. Bona-venture game on Saturday at 3 p.m. The Minutewomen have defeated both of those teams.

USA could stay home

By Tim Dahlberg
Associated Press

The question hasn't come up since President Carter angered the world and his nation's athletes by keeping the U.S. Olympic team home from Moscow. Even now, there are just whispers and speculation, though they grow louder with every bombing and passing day.

Would the United States dare pull out of the Athens Games because of safety concerns?

Unlikely, but not entirely out of the question anymore, either.

"It would mean things have spiraled totally out of control," said Walter Purdy, a director of the Terrorism Research Center outside Washington.

Barely three months from opening ceremonies, U.S. officials say they are committed to going to Greece and remain confident Olympic organizers can protect the 500-plus Americans who will compete in the games.

Others, though, are beginning to wonder if that could change as the Summer Olympics draw closer.

"I think it's going to come down to the wire in making a huge decision whether they send the U.S. to Athens," said Stacy Dragila, who won gold in the pole vault at the 2000 Sydney Games. "It's unfortunate to the athletes because we've worked so hard in training."

The bombings Wednesday in Athens highlighted the dangers that face the Olympics despite a security plan with a price tag over $1 billion, four times the cost in Sydney. Greek officials have revised the plan dramatically in the last few months to try to ease concerns, and they have called in NATO countries to help.

Athens organizers say all athletes will be protected, and that all countries remain resolute in their intention to come. They point out that former President Bush recently wrote to the president of the organizing committee saying he will be at the games.

Americans have a right to feel more jittery than most. Some experts say the Olympics will be tough for terrorists to resist in a country with strong anti-American sentiment.

"This Olympics has the potential of enormous symbolic appeal to terrorists," said Bruce Hoffman, a terrorism expert at RAND, a think tank that often does work for the Pentagon.

Hoffman said the latest bombings, a series of timed blasts that caused no injuries, indicated that Greece has not been entirely successful in wiping out its homegrown terrorist groups. Those groups don't kill on a widespread basis, he said, but the fact they are still active is troubling.

"From al-Qaida's point of view it's manna from heaven because you now have another group the Greeks have to be concerned with," Hoffman said. "It increases the attraction for the really more serious terrorists to take advantage of this opportunity."

Top U.S. officials have repeatedly expressed concerns that Greece is moving too slowly in implementing security measures, although they say much progress has been made in recent months. But delays in construction will make guarding Olympic venues even more difficult.

"It's hard to figure out how you're going to secure something when it's still in the process of being built," Purdy said.

Most security experts say the real threat is not to athletes or Olympic sites. Terrorists could attack a hotel filled with tourists and still achieve the desired effect, Purdy said.

"Nobody remembers that in Atlanta the bombing wasn't at an Olympic venue," Purdy said. "They just remember there was an

OLYMPICS on page 7

Sutter looking for vengence

Associated Press

Calgary coach Darryl Sutter will meet his old team, the San Jose Sharks, on Sunday.

By Greg Beacham
Associated Press

SAN JOSE, Calif. (AP) — Darryl Sutter changed the franchise from the bottom up, erasing a losing culture and instilling passion in his players. He gave hope, pride and victories to a city full of downtrodden hockey fans.

And just 17 months after the San Jose Sharks thanked him with a pink slip, Sutter has done it again with the Calgary Flames.

The sour-faced, soft-spoken coach's two greatest creations will meet Sunday in Game 1 of the Western Conference finals. This bit of serendipity apparently means nothing to Sutter, who claims his presence adds absolutely no significance to the series.

But try telling that to the Sharks who learned their craft under Sutter. They still feel Sutter's influence over their play, even while new coach Ron Wilson leads them to heights Sutter never reached in San Jose.

"Darryl was the biggest part of this organization," said goalie Evgeni Nabokov, who was transformed from an untested backup to a Calder Trophy winner during his first season with Sutter. "To go against him right now is kind of exciting. He deserved the opportunity to do what he's doing in Calgary, and I'm happy he's doing so well."

Over six seasons of steady improvement, Sutter turned the Sharks from laughingstocks into contenders, eventually winning the Pacific Division. When they regressed seven months later, he was fired Dec. 1, 2002.

"Personally it has zero, zero bearing," Sutter said. "Every team now probably has 10 guys who have moved. I mean you separate it totally. I have a ton of respect for their organization and for the players I coached over there."

Where Sutter stalled, Wilson has succeeded with a roster largely assembled by Sutter and former general manager Dean Lombardi. Wilson and new GM Doug Wilson overhauled the Sharks' style and attitude, leading them to the best season in franchise history — followed by the Sharks' first trip to the conference finals and a date with Sutter.

Sutter and Ron Wilson have crossed paths countless times during two lives in hockey. They were even teammates in 1979 on an AHL team in Moncton, New Brunswick.

"We always stayed cordial and friendly," Wilson said. "I don't know him as well as everybody else in this organization, but I have a lot of respect for what he and his whole family represent, in terms of hockey and their dedication to it.

"He is going to know individuals on our team, but I wouldn't say he has an edge, because we play a completely different style of game than when he was around. The only thing that's the same is the jersey and the team name."

But Sutter's groundwork can be seen everywhere. In the hallway leading to the Sharks' locker room, Sutter's staff put up plaques featuring photographs of every NHL trophy for individual and team success, along with blank spots for the yet-to-be-added names of San Jose winners.

Sutter's staff also put up the 4-foot-tall puck display case in the shape of a Stanley Cup. It holds 16 pucks — one for each victory necessary to win a title.

"Darryl helped us learn how to compete in the NHL," said defenseman Mike Rathje, the longest-tenured San Jose player. "He taught about professionalism and responsibility, all the things you need to succeed."

Sutter built the Sharks as a bruising, grinding club — not dirty, but a hard-nosed team behind gritty captain Owen Nolan. He has done the same in Calgary, where the Flames make up for a lack of overwhelming talent with their work ethic: They award an ugly, green hard hat to the hardest-working player after each victory.

But when Wilson took over, he saw the Sharks' greatest untapped strength — a collection of speedy, talented forwards just waiting for somebody to cut them loose from Sutter's system.

Starting with summer workouts after last season's early end, Wilson taught a forecheck-intensive, puck-possession scheme. The new Sharks work every bit as hard as Sutter's team, but play to their strengths much more.

Finally tired of a dozen mediocre years with unproven leaders, the Flames scooped up Sutter 27 days after he was fired. From nearly the first day, Sutter has been a wild success in his home province of Alberta — and Calgary's current playoff run only endears him more, particularly since he became the Flames' GM after last season.

And though Sutter downplays it, he enjoyed his time and work in San Jose, where he won 192 games and started something big.

"Darryl can say all he wants that it has no impact on him," Wilson said. "I know how I felt a year, two years after (getting fired) when we played Anaheim. I wanted to beat them really bad."

Pedro leads Sox to victory over Tribe

By Tom Withers
Associated Press

CLEVELAND (AP) — Pedro Martinez couldn't complain about a thing.

Boston's ace dominated Cleveland again, settling in after a shaky start to pitch seven strong innings and lead the Red Sox to a 5-2 win over the Indians on Thursday night.

Martinez (4-2) gave up four hits — three in the first inning — and improved to 11-1 in 15 career starts against the Indians. He's also 6-0 at Jacobs Field.

Martinez made his second appearance since publicly criticizing Boston's front office, cutting off contract talks with the Red Sox and declaring he would explore free agency after the season.

The next day, he was hammered for six runs and nine hits in four innings during a loss to Texas. This one didn't start much better for the three-time Cy Young Award winner, who quickly fell behind 2-0 in the first.

But the Indians did little after that, putting only five runners on base with just one getting to third. Martinez walked three and struck out eighth overall.

With his 105th victory for Boston, Martinez moved into a tie with Lefty Grove for eighth place on the club's career wins list.

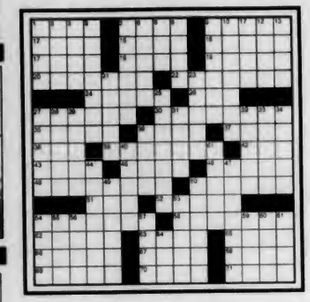
Manny Ramirez homered in the sixth off C.C. Sabathia (1-1) and Pokey Reese hit a go-ahead RBI double in the seventh as the Red Sox won their second straight to split the four-game series.

GRAPHICS
the Collegian is hiring for next semester

Come talk to Scott, Shannon, or Rachael or call 545-1864
105 Campus Center Basement
Freshmen and Sophomores are encouraged to apply

EARTH ANGEL

THE ONE YOU WANT.
THE WAY YOU WANT IT.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

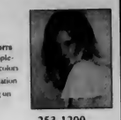


Going Back Home? It Won't Fit in Your Car?
We pro-rate daily. You only pay for the days you stay.
Greenfield Secure Self Storage
1135 Bernardston Rd.
413-775-0074

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Kuwaiti leader
6 "There oughta be a ___"
9 Feet
14 Not kept, maybe
15 Hollow
16 Loosen
17 Tree product
18 Off shore
19 Impressed
20 Summer flowers
22 Gorges
24 Cargo vessel
26 Swamp
27 Ankle injury
30 Pack rats
35 Carole
36 Rainbow goddess
37 Graceful swimmer
38 Bonfire remains
39 Occupants
40 Ogle
42 Amusing act
45 Floppy ___
46 Kitchen tool
48 City dweller
50 Chocolate dessert
51 Four-footed pal
52 Loses some weight
54 Bird's home
58 Spongecake
62 Valentine
63 Yakov and others
65 Whirlpool
66 "The Little Mermaid"
67 Tender meat
68 Sunset colors
69 Haircuts or Holly
70 TV stalwarts
71 Memorable stories

DOWN
1 Jazzy ___ Fitzgerald
2 Au ___
3 Land of tennis
4 Turndown
5 "Venus" singer
6 Cowboy gear
7 Tasty brew
8 Have on
9 Dive's end
10 Cleaning cloth
11 "Don't rub ___!"
12 Mores
13 Barrels
21 Top places (myph.)
23 Make ___ buck
25 Put into words
27 More than's opposite
28 Tough question
29 Fits up an old house
31 Barnyard noise
32 Weathered rocks
33 Stunned about
34 Night (spat)
35 J.P. JFK, e.g.
40 Amanda
41 Tough situations
44 Narrowed down
45 Ages
46 In an orderly manner
50 Pastry
53 Steel girder (hyph.)
54 Melville sea captain
55 Pizzeria's appliance
56 Forget-me-not
57 Chisel feature
59 Sudden thought
60 Lotto info
61 Wall St. landmark
64 Sparkler



DINING COMMONS MENU

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Cacciatore
- Lemon Pepper Fish
- Veal Cutlet

DINNER
- Worcester/Franklin BBQ
- Shrimp & Scallop Creole
- Beef Bourguignon
- Southern 6-Bean Stew (vegan)

AMHERST HAIRSTYLISTS
Caren's Place
Come in and get the attention you want!
- Students Always $15 shampoo & cut
- We specialize in MULTI-COLOR HIGHLIGHTS using three to four complementing and blending colors
- FREE Haircolor consultation
- 1/2 price Facial Waxing on Wednesdays
- Walk-ins Welcome

253-1200
40 Main St.
Downtown Amherst
Mon-Fri 10-6
Sat 10-4
No checks-we accept debit cards
$2.00 OFF HAIRCUT
With this COUPON only

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST

For Amherst

FRIDAY
- High: 77
- Low: 39

SATURDAY
- High: 59
- Low: 40

SUNDAY
- High: 68
- Low: 43

PRODUCTION CREW

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Glen Straub
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Samantha Louras
COPY EDITOR
Leah Wyner
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Irene Ros
PRODUCTION STAFF
Oliver Chong/ Diana Mogilevsky

HOROSCOPES

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
If you don't get in gear, you'll be flipping burgers this summer.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Even old people have love lives!

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Maybe you shouldn't refer to children as hobbits.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Today, all the world is celebrating with you.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Milk, it does a body good. Chocolate milk is ok too.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
The stars say Russians are cool, very cool.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
It's time you gave your car a little love and tenderness.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
That special package will arrive soon.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Your sweatshirt smells, you should change it.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
The ping-pong Gods are not with you today.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You want to submit a comic strip to the Collegian. It's been on your mind all along.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Don't let anyone hold you back. Spring is in the air!

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Humor is laughing at what you haven't got when you ought to have it."

-Langston Hughes

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Puffton Village 2 Bdrm Apt Avail. Lease begins in June Free Heat and Hot Water Call (914) 393-9505

Mill Valley Estates now Renting 2 bedrm $1050/1100. 4 bedrm $2100 available 6/1/04 No last months rent, Free Heat & Hot Water, 2 full baths, AC. On busline Mon-Fri 10-5pm 253-7377

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 Geo Prism 113,000 miles great condition New Timing Belt 4 New Tires $1200.00 O.B.O. 577-5129 665-7731

Ford Probe SE 1996 $1075 Call 413-687-7510. Moreza@cns.umass.edu

Honda Civic EX 99 4DR Manual 68K mi. A/C Alarm Great condition $8200 545-1291

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Honda Accord LX 4 door sedan 138K miles good condition $2000 253-6784

EMPLOYMENT

Activism
Summer Jobs
For the Environment
3000-5000/Summer Join the state's largest public interest grassroots organization to protect our environment, public health, human rights and democracy. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Bobby 1-413-256-6434

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hausapromotions.com

ATTENTION LAX PLAYERS Play & Coach – Have fun – Make $$$ Top Boys Sports Camp in Maine looking for staff to instruct & coach LAX. Awesome Summer! Work with kids! Top salaries, FREE rm&b/trvl allow. Apply online ASAP: www.camp-cobbossee.com

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Office Help Needed! Amherst Leisure Services is looking for a summer registration clerk to begin mid to late may. Duties include: customer service, accepting registrations and payments for numerous programs, data entry, answering phones, filing, and other clerical duties in a busy recreation department. Preferred hours are M-F 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m., but may be flexible. Pay range is $7.44-8.61/hr. depending upon experience. Apply at: Town of Amherst Leisure Services, 70 Boltwood Walk, Bangs Community Center, Amherst, MA 01002. Resumes and letters of inquiry may also be sent to: desmarais@town.amherst.ma.us. For further information, call Pat r 413-256-4065.

Painters Wanted in Amherst Area. No Experience Necessary Call Alison@413-627-9043

Greenfield Secure Self Storage seeks student P/T to rent our self storage units on campus 413-775-0074

EMPLOYMENT

LIFEGUARD Brandywine Apts. needs a certified lifeguard. Call or stop by. 549-0600

Resort Real Estate Sales Assistant: World renowned multi-million dollar real estate development company seeks motivated and confident individual to market high-end real estate at The Greenbrier Resort in White Sulphur Spring, West Virginia. Ideal candidate is very comfortable speaking on the phone & interested in pursuing a career in luxury real estate. Immediate openings available. Please send resumes to Mitch Johnson-mjohnson@gbvs.com

Bueno Y Sano is hiring for positions for fall semester please apply in person Call for directions 253-4000

Painters Wanted in Danvers area want a challenging Job outdoors w/good $$$? Seeking driven, Hardworking Individual w/own car to be a painting crew member. No exp. necessary Call: Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

EMPLOYMENT

PART-TIME POSITIONS 20+ hours/wk; Set your own schedule. Conduct surveys over the phone at our Hadley location – NO SALES! Evngs/wknds; hlth/dent/401(k); PVTA accessible. Email myivian@fieldmarkting-inc.com or apply in person, First Floor 100 Venture Way, Hadley, MA (888)423-5381

Lowell Area Driven Leader needed to be crew chief for one of the state's largest exterior house painting companies. Must be hard-working, Independent & have own car. Exp. preferred, but not necessary. Call Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413)584-4746

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext 162

EMPLOYMENT

Painters wanted greater Springfield area 1-413-695-2645 or 188-277-9787

Students wanted for a summer painting job $400-$600/week. Experience not needed but a plus. All hired will go through a paid training program. Call 888-277-9787 or go to COLLEGE-PRO.COM. Work with friends.

Spa manager East Hampton Part-time nights and weekends $90/shift 413-695-3765

Hardworking individuals living around 93/95 belt South of I-90 for fulltime painter positions. Challenging job requires independence, own car. $10-$12 base rate. Call Will @ 617-699-8970

FURNITURE FOR SALE

Graduating in May everything must go Call 549-0069

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom house. 2 1/2 miles. On bus line. 530-6996

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley 5 Bedroom Plus home, 2 baths w/ laundry hookup. Large yard, minutes from UMass. 549-4270

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

LOST

$20 reward! Cell phone lost in/near Bartlett – small Siemens w/orange buttons

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female roommate wanted to share 2-bd apt in Sunderland. $419/mo Includes heat, hot water, and cable. Available 6/1 or earlier. Call Lauren @ 860-604-6068.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9902

SERVICES

Avoid Puffton waiting list 3bed 2bath Puffton upgrad-ed $1305/mo June1-August31 '04 or take our lease to '05 549-5909

SUMMER SUBLET

2 Lg Bdrm apt Main St on bus route Minutes from UMass Summer with Fall option 256-1146

1 Bdrm Apt. in Cliffside Call 665-1218

The Boulders 2 bedroom apt. available June 1st-August 15th fall option 413-478-3915

Live downtown this summer! Large 4BR 2-floor apt next to Amherst IN. Washer & dryer included. 5 min. to bus stop & town. ONLY $362.50 per room + utilities. Available 6/1 thru 8/15. Contact Rob: agraff@student.umass.edu/978-808-7322

2 bedrooms, fully furnished apartment, 1 full bath. Available June 1st-September 1st. Call Rachel Styman @ 781-264-1512

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MAY 7 2004

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

One last stand

Seniors play final game

By ANDREW MERRITT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For some members of the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, tomorrow afternoon is the end of a season that has fallen short of expectations. For Neil Lundburg, Bo Pritchard, Kevin Glenz, Justin Walker, Chris Gervat, and Scott Hinchey, it is the end of an era.

While nearly every college team in the nation has some sort of Senior Day recognition, this year's turbulent season, and the reminder of a lost family member gives tomorrow's game against Rutgers (Garber Field, 1 p.m.) some extra weight for the six UMass seniors.

To say the least, the Minutemen's season has been less than satisfying, especially for the players, who after breaking a school record with 13 wins in 2003, can finish no better than .500. At 7-8, the Minutemen have only tomorrow's game to do so, but more than that, ending their final season on a high note is of prime importance to the seniors.

"It's our last contest on Garber Field, and so I'd love to make it a win," said defenseman Justin Walker, the Fairport, N.Y. native who has provided rearguard leadership in all 13 games this season. "We want to put on a great show for the crowd, I've got my whole family coming up, and friends from home. I'd love to play my ass off, get a victory, and enjoy the time and experience with my friends, relatives, teammates and coaches."

Neil Lundburg, who has also appeared in all 13 games this season, has 18 goals and five assists on the year. His 6-foot-4, 225-lb. frame has given the Minutemen a solid pivot man, and while his goals outnumber his assists, he has been a consummate teammate throughout the year.

"In the game, more than anything, I'd like to give Justin Walker a goal," he said. "If I have the opportunity to give him a goal, I would give him one. That kid has

MEN'S LAX on page 7

AMELIA P. LINCOLN/COLLEGIAN

Junior Ryan Connolly has 14 goals and four assists this year for the Minutemen. The Maroon and White play its last game of the season against Rutgers tomorrow at Garber Field, with a 1 p.m. face-off.

Spiderman is off the field

By RONALD BLUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK (AP) — Spider-Man ads on bases didn't fly with baseball fans.

A day after announcing a novel promotion to put advertisements on bases next month, Major League Baseball reversed course Thursday and eliminated that part of its marketing deal for "Spider-Man 2."

"The bases were an extremely small part of this program," said Bob DuPuy, baseball's chief operating officer. "However, we understand that a segment of our fans was uncomfortable with this particular component and we do not want to detract from the fan's experience in any way."

Under the original plan, red-and-yellow ads were to appear on bases — but not home plate — during games from June 11-13. The plan began to crumble Wednesday night when the New York Yankees said they would only allow the ads on bases during batting practice — and only for one game that weekend.

While the logos will not be put on bases in big league games, it's still not certain whether they will appear during warmups.

"I thought it was good to pull it," Yankees outfielder Bernie Williams said. "For so many years, we've just had uniforms and bases with no logo. It doesn't surprise me, baseball being the conservative sport that it's always been. It's so slow to change."

The ads were to appear as part of a deal involving Major League Baseball Properties, Marvel Studios and Sony Inc., the parent of Columbia Pictures, which is releasing the movie on June 30. The promotion will go on with giveaways and other ads at ballparks that weekend.

"We listened to the fans," said Geoffrey Ammer, president of worldwide marketing for the Columbia TriStar Motion Picture Group. "We never saw this coming, the reaction the fans had. It became a flashpoint — the reaction was overwhelming."

"We don't want to do anything that takes away from a fan's enjoyment of the game," he said. "Some people thought it was a great idea, but others saw it as sac-

SPIDERMAN on page 8

Minutemen lose shoot-out

By BOB MCGOVERN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was another case of too little, too late for the Massachusetts baseball team.

The Minutemen scored six runs over the final three innings in their game against Northeastern, but it wasn't enough as UMass lost 12-8 to the Wildcats yesterday at Friedman Diamond.

Offensively, the Minutemen looked to be the aggressor, scoring the first two runs of the game against Northeastern hurler Paul Koslowski. The two runs were spearheaded by senior Cullan Maumus who knocked in Sean Sarno with a shot to left-center. He would then score off the always-productive bat of captain Matt Reynolds.

Koslowski settled down after the first and pitched five scoreless innings. He fanned six batters in the contest and in lieu of the fact that his relief couldn't finish what he started, he got the win on the evening.

Part of the reason was that, for all intents and purposes, the UMass pitching staff fell apart.

Starter Anthony Gallo had a similar start to Kosowski as he gave up two runs in the first. After two scoreless innings, Gallo lost his edge and gave up a total of six runs over the fourth and fifth inning.

Freshman Chris Lloyd came in to stop the bleeding but only lasted two-thirds of an inning as he gave up two earned runs fresh out of the bullpen. Jeremy Demers held off the barrage a little bit, but still surrendered two runs in three innings.

Brian Nutting and Brad Czarnowski, hitting in the fourth and fifth spot for the Wildcats, did most of the damage. The two accounted for seven of the 12 runs in the contest, while Czarnowski also scored three runs.

As the bullpen was being dismantled, the Minutemen's offense began to battle back in the latter innings. The offensive onslaught was started as soon as the Wildcats reached into their bullpen.

Dave Pelligrine came in and, over his one and one-third innings pitched, surrendered three runs. Tim Bush, who also gave up three runs to UMass, relieved him.

The heart of the order did most of the work for the Minutemen's offense. Maumus, Frank Curreri, and Reynolds accounted for five of the seven RBI for the Maroon and White.

Even with the offensive explosion, the Minutemen still had room for more. When all was said and done, UMass had stranded eight batters on the contest.

The Minutemen return to the confines of Earl Lorden Field this weekend to take on A-10 rival Temple, in one of the season's more pivotal series. There is a double-header on Saturday starting at 12 p.m. and a single game at 12 p.m. on Sunday.

Between games on Saturday, the University of Massachusetts Athletic Department will celebrate the 50-year anniversary of the Minutemen's first trip to the College World Series.

A large portion of the 1954 team will be honored in a ceremony on Earl Lorden just before this year's team attempts to keep its post-season hopes alive.

UMASS

WEEKEND SCHEDULE

Friday, May 7

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Track	at New Englands Dedham, Mass	10:00 a.m.
Women's Lacrosse	vs. Temple Corning, N.Y.	5:00 p.m.

Saturday, May 8

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Baseball	vs. Temple Amherst, Mass	12:00 p.m. & 2:30 p.m.
Track	New Englands Dedham, Mass	9:00 a.m.
Men's Lacrosse	vs. Rutgers Amherst, Mass	1:00 p.m.
Women's Rowing	at ECAC's Worcester, Mass	3:45 p.m.

Sunday, May 9

Sport	Opp./Event	Time
Baseball	vs. Temple	12:00 p.m.
Softball	vs. Boston College Amherst, Mass	12:00 p.m. & 2:00 p.m.
Rowing	at ECAC's Worcester, Mass	7:30 a.m.

EMILLIE PAGGANO/COLLEGIAN

Reaching to the future

Wide reviever Jason Peebler goes out for a catch during a game during UMass's 2003 season. The Maroon and White have their annual spring game this weekend.

Minutewomen face Owls

By JEFF HOWE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Every now and then there will be a special team that comes around, and it will make you really appreciate the smaller things that sports have to offer.

The Massachusetts Minutewomen (6-9, 4-3 Atlantic 10) lacrosse team is exactly that kind of squad. They have fought hard through injuries, countless one-goal losses and occasional mishaps that should have doomed their season before April Fool's Day.

The girls lost all six games they played in March and went 36 days between their first and second victories of the season.

They could have rolled over and died the same way the Boston Celtics did this year, but they chose to fight through all of the adversity and put a winning streak together to qualify for the Atlantic 10 postseason much like the ways of the New England Patriots.

The Minutewomen haven't lost since April 18 and are riding a three-game winning streak heading into today's semifinal game against the Temple Owls (9-7, 6-1 A-10) at 5 p.m. in Corning, NY.

This is a rematch of last year's Atlantic 10 championship game, which was won by Temple. The Owls won this year's only match between the two teams 20-14 at Garber Field, the last time UMass left the field as losers.

To thicken the plot, UMass head coach Carrie Bolduc played her first two years of collegiate lacrosse for Temple in 1996-97 under Temple's current head coach, Kim Ciarrocca, before transferring to Syracuse.

"I know a lot about [Temple]. They don't give up or quit, and they know how to handle pressure. Winning is an attitude at Temple. That is their motto, and that is how they play," Bolduc said.

Temple is the three-time defending Atlantic 10 champion, and none of the players on UMass have defeated Temple at any point in their careers, but Bolduc doesn't think her team is the one that is intimidated.

"I think they're afraid to play us. They were hoping to play Richmond [in the championship] last year," Bolduc said.

Intimidated or not, the Minutewomen will need to have a much better start to this game than they had in the teams' first clash in April if they want to win. UMass was trailing 9-3 mid-

See WOMEN'S LAX on page 8

MMER
ORK!
Excellent Starting Pay
Apply On Line Nationwide:
SummerWorkNow.com/nei
VECTOR

If phone number is busy, call back!

Connecticut		New York Cont.
Brookfield / Waterbury	203-775-0158	Buffalo N	716-835-9008
Eastern CT	860-859-3425	Buffalo Southtowns	716-668-4786
Fairfield / Norwalk	203-847-3157	Oneonta	607-432-2737
Hartford / Tolland	860-243-5623	Plattsburgh	518-735-4440
Franklin County	413-772-2666	Rochester Area	585-321-9865
Martha's Vineyard	508-696-8633	Saratoga	518-587-7020
Middlesex County	860-704-0732	Syracuse Area	315-437-4297
New Haven County	203-288-0552	Utica/Rome	315-792-4042
		Lower Westchester	914-472-1922
Maine		Upper Westchester/Putnam Co.	914-741-1090
Portland/Biddeford/Brunswick	207-883-6653	New York City Area
York/Berwick/Sanford	603-740-0397	Nassau County	516-221-3790
Augusta/Lewiston/Bangor	207-622-5128	Flushing	718-961-5813
		Manhattan	212-563-4467
Massachusetts		Brooklyn	718-331-8720
Berkshire County	413-442-9599	North Shore Suffolk	631-382-4716
Cape Cod	508-771-1580	South Shore Suffolk	631-218-8857
Lawrence	603-893-7272	Staten Island	718-980-6988
Worcester/Shrewsbury/Milford	508-791-5888
Springfield/Amherst	413-532-0846	Pennsylvania
Boston Area:		Altoona/State College	814-943-8820
Andover/Reading/North Shore	978-762-4442	Berks County	610-372-8851
Attleboro/Dartmouth/Taunton	508-993-8885	Bucks County	215-675-3235
Cambridge/Somerville	617-621-1119	Chester County	610-719-0105
Chelmsford/Fitchburg/Tewksbury	978-692-8541	Delaware County	610-543-7052
Jamaica Plain/Back Bay/Fenway	617-323-3456	Erie	814-835-6600
Malden/Charlestown/Revere	781-333-3266	Harrisburg East Shore	717-986-0201
Newburyport/Beverly/Topsfield	978-739-9304	Harrisburg West Shore	717-731-8911
Norwood/Walpole/Franklin	781-255-7171	Jenkintown/Abington	215-884-6364
Quincy/Canton/Weymouth	781-344-3495	Lancaster County	717-560-9152
South Shore/Plymouth County	781-837-6789	Lebanon County	717-272-3367
Waltham/Newton/Metrowest	781-890-7667	Lehigh Valley	610-432-5834
		Lewisburg	570-522-0179
New Hampshire		Monroeville	412-373-3461
Lebanon /Claremont	603-443-5588	Monroe/Pike County	570-422-1181
Manchester/Nashua/Concord	603-625-9500	Montgomery County	610-630-3811
Seacoast, Portsmouth, Dover	603-740-0397	Moon	412-424-0093
Salem/Derry	603-893-7272	Northeast Philadelphia	215-464-8440
		Pittsburgh N Hills	724-933-3354
New Jersey		Pittsburgh S Hills	412-440-0234
Brick/Toms River/Point Pleasant	732-451-9797	Roxborough/Manayunk	215-482-2890
Bridgewater/Scotch Plains/Clinton	908-203-9966	Schuykill/Carbon County	570-450-7922
Camden/Burlington County	856-810-8072	Scranton	570-961-5464
Clifton/Montclair/Wayne	973-472-1171	Westmoreland County	724-838-8192
Eatontown/Englishtown/Belmar	732-544-1505	Wilkes-Barre	570-331-2707
Edison/Woodbridge/E. Brunswick/Clark	732-321-1055	York County	717-718-1470
Gloucester/Salem County	856-228-9996
Newton/Hackettstown/West Milford	973-729-8330	Rhode Island
Paramus/Secaucus/Westwood	201-291-9090	Newport	401-683-6688
Parsippany/Short Hills/Fairfield	973-541-0122	Providence / South County	401-575-2238
Princeton/Cranbury/West Windsor	609-671-1400
		Vermont
New York		Burlington/Montpelier/Middlebury	802-985-9850
Albany/Capitol Region	518-383-6544	White River Jct./Rutland/Brattleboro	802-295-1122
Binghamton/Broome Co.	607-748-4858

Apply Online at www.SummerWorkNow.com/nei

Sister Hazel rock the Horseshoe during Southwest Week

ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 4

UMass downs Rutgers on Senior Day

SPORTS, PAGE 8

The Daily Collegian

MONDAY, MAY 10, 2004 — NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 — VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 136

UMass hosts Democratic Convention

NANCY PALMIERI/ASSOCIATED PRESS (2)

Above: Cam Kerry, the brother of Sen. John Kerry, D-Mass., speaks at the opening of the state Democratic convention at the Mullins Center., Saturday.

Right: Delegates to the Massachusetts Democratic state convention cheer on speaker Cam Kerry, brother of Sen. John Kerry, at the Mullins Center in Amherst, Mass.

By MELISSA BLANKSTEEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts hosted the Massachusetts Democratic Convention last Friday night and Saturday. Speakers included Chancellor John V. Lombardi, Amherst Representative Stan Rosenberg, Robert Haynes, the president of the Massachusetts chapter of the AFL-CIO Union, and Cameron Kerry, Sen. John Kerry's brother.

According to Jane Lane, the communications director of the Massachusetts Democratic Party, many members of the legislature and many people who they invited to speak on stage are UMass alumni. She said no one complained when UMass was announced as the location for this year's convention.

"We are so proud to be here. It's like family to be back," Lane said.

On Friday, the convention started after 8 p.m. in the Campus Center. On Saturday, the main event was held in the Mullins Center. According to Lane, 2,500 delegates from towns across the state had prepaid to come, and another 1,000 registered that day.

Many speakers focused on education.

"We need a governor who will stand up and make sure all our kids have an opportunity," Haynes said. "[Governor Mitt Romney] is about profit. He's about the stock market. He's not about the Commonwealth."

After the speeches were over, Phil Johnston, chairman of the Massachusetts Democratic Party, said that he loves UMass.

"We come often, as often as we can," he said.

He is an alumnus of UMass and met his wife in a Spanish class. His son is also a graduate.

Johnston said his aides told him that the people at UMass ran the convention as smoothly as anywhere they have been. He hopes to bring it back to UMass every year.

"As long as I'm chairman of the party, we're coming to UMass," he said definitively.

Johnston said he believes this kind of publicity helps UMass. Lombardi agreed in an email.

"It is always good for our legislators to see what their support makes possible, so when they gather

See CONVENTION on page 2

Women's Health Week commences

By JENNIFER MOSKAL
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

University of Massachusetts health practitioners will join others around the country today in observing National Women's Health Week, but authorities say real action for women's health implies addressing the problem of American health and health care as a whole.

Today, in observance of the week and as part of its regular offerings, each section of University Health Services will offer information sessions, according to Amanda Collings, who organizes community health and patient education at UHS as part of an on-going project to inform students on women's health issues.

The 19-member UHS Women's Health Project has worked on projects all year, including hosting contraception sessions every week. One of the sessions is held in the dormitories on a rotating basis. The other is always in room 302 of the UHS building, every Wednesday.

Observing National Women's Health Week highlights a much larger issue than the one these sessions address, said Eileen Breslin, dean of the School of Nursing and interim dean of the School of Public Health & Health Sciences.

"It's not just about women's health. It's about everybody's health," Breslin said.

"How do we get the American population to take care of their health, through diet and exercise and the reduction of stress?" she asked.

The answer, according to Breslin, is by educating women and encouraging them to take care of their own health — because, she says, women influence everyone else.

That influence is a function of women's central role in society, according to Arlene Avakian, professor and director of women's studies. Women, she said, use healthcare services the most in America, either for themselves or for family members.

"Women are often the caretakers and will go to the doctor's with their children or their parents as well," Avakian said.

Promoting good women's healthcare is so important, she said, because doing so reaches many others, as well.

According to Kathryn Tracy, a professor in the School of Public Health, good healthcare for women of all backgrounds and ages is pivotal.

"Social science and health policy have discovered that the level of health status of a population, all genders and ages, rises in direct proportion to the level of educational attainment of its women," Tracy said. "With some exceptions, women govern family health decision-making for children and elders in most countries and therefore the health of the nation relies on the education, health status and health decision-making of its women."

According to organizers of National Women's Health Week, when women become well educated about their own health, they also look out for the health and healthcare needs of their families.

While events are scheduled nationally and regionally during the entire week, there is a particular push for women to individually get involved and take care of themselves today, the designated

See HEALTH on page 2

US military sees first court-marshal in abuse case

By ROBERT H. REID
ASSOCIATED PRESS

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — Stung by a worldwide outcry, the U.S. military Sunday announced the first court-martial in the Abu Ghraib prisoner abuse allegations, ordering a reservist to face a public trial in Baghdad on May 19.

Spc. Jeremy C. Sivits of Hyndman, Pa., a member of the 372nd Military Police Company, will face a military court less than a month after photos of prisoners being abused and humiliated were first broadcast April 28.

Both the speed of the trial's scheduling and the venue in the Iraqi capital underscore the military's realization that it must demonstrate resolve in prosecuting those responsible for a scandal that threatens to undermine the U.S. mission in Iraq and President Bush's re-election chances.

Brig. Gen. Mark Kimmitt, announcing the trial date, said the proceedings would be held in the Baghdad Convention Center, which houses the coalition press office, and be open to media coverage.

Bush promised Saturday that "we will learn all the facts and determine the full extent of these abuses. Those involved will be identified. They will answer for their actions."

Sivits is one of seven soldiers charged but appears to be a lesser figure in the case. Some of the others will likely face a general court martial, which can give more severe punishments than the "special" court martial that will try Sivits. His trial could produce evidence for prosecuting others believed more culpable.

Sivits is believed to have taken some of the photos that triggered the scandal. His father, Daniel Sivits, said last month his son "was told to take a picture, and he did what he was told." He said his son trained as a mechanic but found himself performing military police work for which he was unqualified.

The family said it had no comment Sunday morning.

Sivits was charged with conspiracy to mistreat detainees, dereliction of duty for failing to protect prisoners and maltreatment of detainees. Seven officers have received career-ending reprimands.

If convicted, Sivits could face one year in prison, reduction in rank to private, forfeiture of two-thirds of his pay for a year, a fine or a bad conduct discharge. Penalties could include only one, all or any combination of those punishments.

Sivits will be able to chose between trial before a single military judge or a three-member panel of senior officers. He has the right to a civilian attorney and will have access to military counsel.

Officials hope the trial will convince Iraqis that the United States does not tolerate torture reminiscent of the darkest days of Saddam Hussein and will act swiftly to punish those responsible. Saddam's regime used the grim Abu Ghraib facility, located on the western edge of Baghdad, to torture and murder thousands of his critics.

The trials could determine whether abuse at Abu Ghraib was an aberration — as the U.S. command

See IRAQ on page 2

Chechen president killed

GROZNY, Russia (AP) — A bomb ripped through a stadium in the Chechen capital of Grozny, during a Victory Day ceremony yesterday, killing provincial president Akhmad Kadyrov, the Kremlin's point man for efforts to control separatist violence in the war-wracked region.

No group claimed responsibility for Sunday's explosion, which killed as many as 24 people, but suspicion inevitably fell on separatist rebels, who have made Kadyrov a top target and have tried to assassinate him several times.

— Associated Press

ITAR-TASS/SERGEI CHIRIKOV/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Russian President Vladimir Putin, right, meets Chechen Prime Minister Sergei Abramov, who became the republic's acting president in Moscow after an explosion killed Chechnyan President Akhmad Kadyrov, yesterday.

Israelis to rework Gaza withdrawal

By RAVI NESSMAN
ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Ariel Sharon yesterday canceled a planned trip to the United States next week, saying he intended to focus his energies on patching together a new blueprint for withdrawing from the Gaza Strip after his party rejected his original plan.

Sharon told his Cabinet ministers during a stormy meeting that he will present them with a revised version of his "disengagement plan" in the next three weeks. He did not reveal what changes he is contemplating or how he would satisfy his deeply divided coalition.

The announcement was the latest sign of Sharon's determination to push ahead with his plan after its overwhelming defeat in a May 2 referendum of Likud Party members. That vote, though nonbinding, would make it difficult for many Likud Cabinet ministers to support the plan.

Sharon told his Cabinet he was canceling his trip to Washington, scheduled for next week, during which he was to have addressed the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, a pro-Israel lobbying group. He also had been expected to meet with President Bush, who had endorsed Sharon's plan as a valuable step to reviving peace efforts.

The original plan called for a full pullout of Gaza, where 7,500 Israeli settlers and 1.3 million Palestinians live, and a withdrawal from four small West Bank settlements. Sharon said the plan to disentangle the Israeli and Palestinian populations would boost Israel's security in the absence of a

See GAZA on page 2

U.N. election workers killed in explosion in Afghanistan

By STEPHEN GRAHAM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

KABUL, Afghanistan (AP) — A blast hit a U.N. vehicle carrying election workers in eastern Afghanistan and two foreign men were beaten to death in the capital, officials said yesterday, adding to security fears ahead of the landmark vote in September.

Meanwhile, hundreds of U.S. forces were sweeping through an insurgency-hit southeastern province and had arrested 35 Taliban militants, a senior Afghan official reported.

Four election staff escaped unhurt from Saturday's jeep explosion near Grabawa, a village in Nangarhar province about 60 miles south of Kabul. Their driver was treated for minor injuries. All were Afghans.

"They all managed to get out of the car before it was engulfed in flames," U.N. spokesman Manoel de Almeida e Silva said.

Gen. Mohammed Yunus Noorzai, the Nangarhar police chief, blamed the Taliban or al-Qaida, but gave no evidence. Investigators were trying to establish if the explosion was caused by a mine or a remote-controlled bomb.

The attack on the U.N. vehicle came just days after two British contractors working with the United Nations in preparation for the presidential and parliamentary polls were shot and killed in another eastern province. A spokesman purporting to speak for the Taliban claimed responsibility.

Saturday's explosion was the also fourth incident involving U.N. election workers this year.

The American military has warned that militants will try to disrupt the elections, in which U.S.-backed President Hamid Karzai is expected to triumph.

Only two million out of some 10 million eligible voters have signed up so far, and registration has yet to begin in three troubled southern provinces where militants have killed dozens of Afghan troops in recent weeks.

A U.S. Marine also died in a firefight on Saturday, but the military insists it had insurgents on the defensive and that it is safe enough for the vote to go ahead.

In their latest operation, American troops backed by helicopters began combing three districts of Zabul province, some 240 miles southeast of Kabul, on Friday, and arrested 35 Taliban militants, Gov. Khial Mohammed told The Associated Press.

"There was no resistance," Mohammed said. "All the suspected Taliban are in U.S. custody."

Lt. Col. Michele DeWerth, a U.S. military spokeswoman in Kabul, said 13 people were detained and a weapons cache was found in a search in Zabul on Saturday but gave no further details.

Mohammed initially claimed the operation had netted Mullah Rozi Khan, who is believed to command Taliban militants in Zabul, where the government has little control. He later said that claim was based on incorrect information and that Khan wasn't among the militants arrested.

Meanwhile, Afghan police said two foreigners, one carrying a Swiss passport, were found dead in Kabul Sunday, killed by blows to the head with stones or bricks.

The motive for the killings was not immediately clear, but they sent a jolt through the international community in the relatively stable capital, which is patrolled by a 6,000-strong, NATO-led security force.

Police said early morning joggers found the bodies of the two men, aged about 30 and in Afghan dress, in a public garden in west Kabul.

Rudi Hager, the head of the a Swiss development agency which doubles as a diplomatic mission, told AP that it "was probably just a criminal case," and suspected the Swiss victim was a tourist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
FEATURES EDITOR S. J. Port
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salniker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagatic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallach
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Riggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Amelia P. Lincoln
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS' ACADEMIC SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LIFE, AND THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1903. THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

First GI faces court-marshal

IRAQ from page 1

insists — or stemmed from pressure from military intelligence units to make detainees more compliant under questioning.

Months before the scandal broke, the International Committee of the Red Cross told top Washington officials it had problems with the treatment of prisoners in Iraq and at the U.S. detention center in Guantanamo Bay, Cuba, said Antonella Notari, chief agency spokeswoman.

She said ICRC President Jakob Kellenberger spoke about prison conditions during January meetings with Secretary of State Colin Powell, National Security Adviser Condoleezza Rice and Deputy Defense Secretary Paul Wolfowitz.

"He raised concerns regarding detention in Iraq, along with Guantanamo and other locations," Notari told The Associated Press in Geneva.

One soldier facing charges, Spc. Sabrina Harman, said she and others with the 372nd Military Police Company took direction from Army military intelligence officers, CIA operatives and civilian contractors who conducted interrogations.

American officials have insisted the abuses at Abu Ghraib were carried out by a handful of soldiers who failed to follow procedures and were not part of a systematic program of brutality.

"Please don't paint with such a wide brush that it indicts the other 135,000 American soldiers and Marines out there doing the right thing," Kimmitt told reporters. He said investigators believe that only a "very small number of guards" were involved.

However, Iraqis freed from U.S. custody since the war began in March 2003 have long told of abusive treatment including lying bound in the sun for hours; being attacked by dogs; being deprived of water; and left hooded for days. Until photos were published, their complaints won little attention except from human rights groups.

Last summer, Amnesty International said it learned Red Cross inspectors were finding serious abuses, and it charged that "torture and gross abuse of human rights" were occurring.

On Friday, the ICRC disclosed it had repeatedly demanded last year that U.S. authorities correct problems at Abu Ghraib and other detention centers. The Americans took action on some issues but not others, it said.

Democrats gather at Mullins Center for state convention on our campus it provides a graphic demonstration of the breadth and depth of the work accomplished here by students, faculty, and staff," Lombardi wrote.

CONVENTION from page 1

He said the University is "always happy" to host either party's events. He wrote that this in particular was a good way to thank the Democratic Party's strong support of UMass in the state legislature.

UMass students were also involved in this year's convention, Chelsea C. Halpine, president of the University Democrats, said her group recruited 30 volunteers to help out at the convention. They stood around campus helping to direct all the visitors.

Patrick MacLeod, vice president of the University Democrats, was excited for it to be held outside of Boston.

"It's the most important political event in the state and for it to happen in Western Massachusetts is great," he said. "It's a great opportunity for the school."

Some students were delegates as well. After the main speeches, the convention offered many different "tracks" to help inform individuals, including ones on campaigning, grass roots, issues, affirmative action and youth.

Katelyn Sypher, a sophomore from Raynham, was a delegate from her town. After attending a campaign management session, she sat in a youth track session called "Being the Youngest Person in the Room."

"I wanted to see what the state party had to say to see how it fits into my own beliefs," she said on being a delegate.

She also believed it was good for UMass to host such an event.

"I definitely think it shows off public education, for public education to be able to host this is huge. It's a really good bonus for the school and the state," she said.

Sypher also said she believed that it did not cater very well to the University students.

"I don't think the general students knew about this or had a way to get involved," she said.

Israel reworks pullback

GAZA from page 1

peace deal.

Vice Premier Ehud Olmert said Friday that Sharon still intends to evacuate all Gaza settlements.

Hard-liners in the government oppose any territorial concessions and some Likud ministers, who gave the plan only tepid support in the first place, have said they will not go against the party's decision.

At the same time, Justice Minister Yosef Lapid of the moderate Shinui Party has threatened to quit the government if Sharon does not push forward with the Gaza withdrawal. He dismissed the Likud referendum, saying that 1 percent of the population should not be allowed to decide policy for the country.

As Lapid addressed the Cabinet meeting, two hard-line ministers, Avigdor Lieberman and Benny Elon, walked out, participants said.

Lapid also got into a shouting match with minister Uzi Landau, a Likud hard-liner. Landau and his allies said it was undemocratic to ignore the referendum, and he said there was no chance the Cabinet would pass a new plan.

Finance Minister Benjamin Netanyahu, Sharon's biggest rival and a reluctant supporter of the plan before the referendum, said three weeks was not enough time to come up with a proper alternative and urged Sharon to honor the party's decision.

"A diplomatic program isn't a pair of socks that can be changed every day," Netanyahu said, according to participants in the meeting.

In considering a new plan, Sharon asked the ministers to decide how Israel can best fight terror and how it can combat the demographic problem that Palestinians will soon outnumber Jews in the combined area of the West Bank, Gaza and Israel.

Later Sunday, Palestinian militants fired on a group of settlers holding a memorial ceremony at the spot along a road in the Gaza Strip where a pregnant woman and her four young daughters were killed by militants last week.

Scores of settlers, some carrying babies, jumped behind concrete barriers and scrambled to hide behind cars, according to television footage shown on Israel's Channel 10. One woman ran, carrying a baby carriage, for the safety of a nearby bus. Settlers armed with assault rifles returned fire.

A Baltimore County police officer looks around after a shooting at Randallstown High School Friday in Randallstown, Md.

GAIL BURTON/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Two charged in school shooting incident

RANDALLSTOWN, Md. (AP) — Two people were charged Saturday in a drive-by shooting that wounded four teenagers, one of them critically, as they left a charity basketball game at their high school.

Police also said they were looking for two unidentified suspects in Friday's shooting in Randallstown High School's parking lot.

Ronald Johnson, 20, was charged with four counts of attempted murder, first-degree assault and a weapons violation, police said. He was being held without bail Saturday.

Matthew T. McCullough, a 17-year-old student at the high school, was charged with the same counts but he remained at large, authorities said.

Baltimore County Police Chief Terrence Sheridan said the attack stemmed from an earlier name-calling incident involving a girl.

Two of the shooting victims remained hospitalized Saturday; the others were treated and released. William Thomas was in critical condition with gunshot wounds to his neck, and Andre Mellerson was in fair condition, authorities said. Both were being treated at the University of Maryland Shock Trauma Center.

Baltimore County School Superintendent Joe Hairston said the school will be open Monday. Parents and students will get letters detailing what happened, and teachers also will be briefed, he said.

Witnesses told police a car with four people inside pulled up to the school about 4:30 p.m., and the driver and a passenger got out of the car, police spokesman Bill Toohey said. The driver shot four or five times, then handed the gun to the passenger, who also fired. The car, a black BMW with tinted windows, then sped off.

Within an hour, an officer spotted an empty BMW like the one witnesses described.

The basketball game, attended by about 300 students, was held to raise money for scholarships.

Randallstown High School, about 10 miles northwest of Baltimore, has 1,700 students and a staff of 115, according to the Baltimore County public schools Web site.

— Associated Press

Women's Health Week commences

HEALTH from page 1

National Women's Check-up Day.

Alison Jones, the director of health services at the local Tapestry Health, said her organization takes advantage of events like National Women's Check-up Day to "focus on [their] clients and inform them of the issues."

"Whenever one of these opportunities comes up," Jones said, "[we use it] to talk to our staff and our clients and let them know this is another opportunity to take care of themselves."

At Mercy Women's Health Center in Holyoke, National Women's Health Week is an event that the center has been involved with since it began, according to Arnie Malin, director of OB/GYN Services.

"We've been participating each and every year," Malin said. "The initial two or three years we had a huge community health fair outdoors, but funding has decreased. We'll still be offering free information and screenings this year, as well as what services are offered by other providers."

Cuts in funding for such events and for healthcare services more generally are becoming a graver concern in Massachusetts, according to Jones.

"I would argue that while this is a way to focus on women's healthcare, that there's [still] very little focus on women's healthcare [in Massachusetts]," Jones said. "We [at Tapestry] are facing a 41 percent cut this year by the state, so the message to us [as healthcare providers] is that there's very little focus on women's healthcare, particularly in this state."

Breslin looked at the issue more broadly.

"I think the whole notion that women's health is more than reproductive health, but it encompasses social, political and cultural aspects of women's lives [is what needs to be addressed]," she said.

That appears to be the goal set forth by organizers of National Women's Health Week.

The week's events "will include anyone who wants to help make women's health a top priority," the event's Web site states. "Founding partners of National Women's Health Week hope that each year it is celebrated, more groups will join in a groundswell of activity that will lead to healthier women and a healthier America."

On the Net: National Women's Health Week: www.4woman.gov/nhw/2004/

Student Parking Notice
Exam Week Parking 5/17-5/21

During the week of May 17 – May 21, students who do not have a parking permit may park in Lots 25, 26, 27, 33 and Yellow while taking exams. If you possess a valid parking permit, please use the lot you purchased to enable others use of these lots. Use Lots 25, 26, 27, 33 and Yellow ONLY (during exam week), otherwise you will be subject to ticketing and towing.

Brought to you by UMass Parking Services – 413-545-0065. Please visit our website at http://parking.umass.edu for further information. The University community appreciates your cooperation in parking legally.

Congratulations to all graduating seniors!

Change your mind this summer:

• Get the Gen Ed courses you need
• Enjoy smaller class sizes
• Keep on track for graduation
• Choose from over 200 courses and degree programs
• AND take 6 credits or more and we'll waive the registration fee!

Watch for our money-saving coupon in your mailbox.

umass.edu/contined
413-545-2414

stay.

UMassAmherst
Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.

Presented by: Nobody's Perfect
EXPRESS
Women's & Men's
baby phat
WAREHOUSE CLOTHING SALE
1st Quality Merchandise!!
GOT CLOTHES?
4 DAYS ONLY
WAREHOUSE SALE
NOBODY'S PERFECT
Student Union Ballroom
May 10th - 13th
VISA MasterCard UCard

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MAY 10, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Teacher pay scales need careful planning

The structure of payroll for teachers all over the country has come under serious scrutiny in the past couple of years. Currently, it is on the brink of undergoing a major change.

In March, the city of Denver passed a proposal with a 59 percent approval of the district teachers to revolutionize the pay scale. Under the new guidelines, which will be voted on by the citizens next year, teachers' pay rates will be based on their achievement of previously set goals for their students. If the students meet the intended improvement rate, the teachers' salaries will be raised. However, if the students do not improve, then neither will the amount of money these teachers are taking home.

"The bottom line is, do you reward teachers for just sitting here and sticking it out, or for doing something?" asked Jeremy Abshire, a teacher in Denver for four years and a supporter of the proposal.

The plan also includes funding for other teacher incentives. Pay would also be increased for teachers who agree to work in high-poverty areas and for those who teach less desirable subjects such as math and science. It would also reward those who have advanced degrees. Under these guidelines, the maximum pay would be raised from $60,000 to as much as $100,000. Superintendent of Denver schools, Jerry F. Wargow, hopes the new system will provide teachers with better pay while also giving them more responsibility for their students.

The program, referred to as "pay for performance," though seemingly beneficial is also highly controversial. Local teachers in Cincinnati almost unanimously rejected a similar proposal.

In theory, the idea is a good one. Linking the teachers' abilities to their rate of pay would hopefully reward the great teachers while forcing the bad ones to change their techniques. Both the students and teachers would then benefit. However, what happens these incentives only prompt teachers to simply provide all their students with good grades regardless of their progress in order to make more money? Certainly, there are teachers who would take advantage of the system in this way and the ones to lose, out in that case, will be the students.

Our very own Senator John Kerry seems to have similar plans for the future of teaching. He plans to raise the salaries of teachers who raise students' test scores or who teach in subject areas or parts of the state where teachers are badly needed. For this scheme, he has set aside $9 billion dollars of the budget.

There are many great teachers out there, most of whom go under-appreciated and unnoticed for most of their careers. In that respect, providing extra incentives for helping their students achieve success is a noble cause. However, the new guidelines must be carefully drawn. If enough attention and thought is not put into this new pay scale, there is a very dangerous possibility that the students will be the ones paying the price. We cannot afford to have a generation of young students miss out on a good education because of people's greed.

Information from The New York Times was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

A look back at London

Sean Scanlon

College is described as a place for higher learning, but the most valuable lessons are taught outside of the classroom. I can't say I'll ever remember the Greek and Roman names of gods and goddesses, but I'll always remember the pointless early-morning hours playing MarioKart while an examination (of meaningless knowledge) loomed in a few hours.

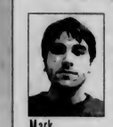
I never felt any anxiety over the thought of spending three and a half months in London. A chance to get away from this campus for a semester? Getting full semester credit for two classes and a 15 hours-a-week internship? Only having responsibilities three days a week? An apartment in the nicest area of one of the greatest cities in the world? Yeah, sounds good to me. Giddy-up.

Getting over the initial "real world" effect of being thrown into a building with 20 strangers took some time. Alcohol helped. It also helps that everyone is in the same situation as you. After two weeks, we were already planning weekend trips to Ireland, France, Holland, and back home if the Sox made the Series.

These trips gave us experiences that we couldn't have imagined. Sure, seeing the sights of the great European cities was great, but it was the strange occurrences away from the tourist traps that we still laugh about today.

I won't soon forget trying to fall asleep in a hostel in Florence, while wondering if any of the 18 strangers sleeping around me had extensive criminal records, nor forget the hippie in Venice, asking us if he could sleep on our hotel room floor. We just laughed at him and then realized he was serious.

I can't forget purposely butchering the French language, while giving the angry waiter our order in Paris (how do you say "hold the mayo and the attitude?"), nor forget buying cheap airfares to Dublin, then seeing the actual plane we'd be flying on and calling home to tell our families that we love them because it looked like a 50 percent chance we would actually make it to the Emerald Isle. I argued that American sports are far superior to British ones with a passionate Londoner, then asked him why Britons fake that silly little accent and watched him get angrier than Keanu Reeves' acting coach.



Many of the best times stemmed from the playoff run the Sox made. We watched Game Four against the A's in Amsterdam, surrounded by Sox fans. The win that night meant we'd be watching Game Five at 1 a.m. the next night back in London. They won the series – pandemonium ensued while complete strangers awkwardly embraced each other like Greg Focker and Kitty Byrnes. We rode the bus home and laughed at all the suits headed to work. We would have to head to work in two hours.

The series against the Yankees had us watching Game Four at a pub that Matthew McConaughey happened to be in. While I can think of better celebrities, it was a little more exciting than Mr. Belding's triumphant visit to the Amherst area. The Sox won that game and McConaughey (a Yankees fan) was peppered with remarks about the outcome of the game and his performance in "How to Lose a Guy in 10 Days." Situations like this made us all realize what a good idea it was to get away from the everyday routine of UMass.

We enjoyed the art museums in Paris, and the trainride up the Swiss Alps. It felt surreal seeing where Anne Frank wrote her diary, as it did at the concentration camp a few hundred miles away in Munich. We feasted on Italian cuisine, savored Guinness in Dublin and Heineken in Amsterdam. All of these experiences are more than enough reasons to study abroad, but are only a fraction of the things you'll remember.

Sean Scanlon is a UMass student.

The glorious 'real world'

Mark Ostroff

I'm afraid this is where we part ways. In two weeks, the time will come for me to enter into the glorious "real world" that everyone is so excited about being in ... bitter, yet excited.

In two weeks, it will be my time to forget about all my "utopian" fantasies and join the proud masses who embrace a world that is no less a fantasy. Just like everyone else, I will throw out my crazy college "utopia-dreams" for that long-shot "American Dream" that the "real world" has promised me.

I'm going to have to work very hard to earn the respect of those around me. I'll have to find a job that may not be all that I expected, but makes some good money.

Maybe I'll earn enough to buy myself an SUV. Maybe I'll even cover it with little American flags, just to show everyone that I'm now a proud member of "the real world."

There will be some things that I know I won't be doing. For one thing, the glorious "real world" doesn't have time for any complicated literature. So, it looks like I'll have to get into the habit of reading something more with the times.

I'm so terribly sorry, Dr. Marx, Kissinger, Veblen, Zinn, Huberman, Einstein, and Feynman. Make room for Hannity, Savage, and even Jesse Ventura, "real world" literature.

Every now and then, I'll pick up a copy of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and slam some columnist for not being like me, in the "real world." Maybe I'll give him the line that they gave me, you know, "Some day you will have to be in 'the real world' and make money. Maybe then, you won't be a liberal, blah blah blah..."

Yes! That'll change his stupid opinion about the Iraq war! (Silly child.) You see, in the "real world," it's every man for himself. When someone dies, it's one less person you'll have to compete with. Good.

If I work hard enough and do what I'm told, I'm going to have a house with beautiful green grass, a white picket fence and a big American flag on an aluminum pole. I'll live in a neighborhood where everyone respects me because I work really hard and have a lot of stuff to show for it.

My son will be captain of the football team at his high school, not to mention class president. Every week, I'll go to his games and eventually encourage him to accept that scholarship that Harvard has been offering him. You know, with one of those "man-to-man" talks.

Maybe it really is a tragedy that we sacrifice our lives for that little piece of dignity and 'opportunity' that the 'real world' promises us. And with that is my message to those who worship a life in this world: Keep it.

Every summer, my family and I will go to Cape Cod, where my beautiful, never-aging wife and I will lay on the beach and watch the sun set, holding hands.

This is the payoff of life in the "real world." My individual happiness and vast consumption habits will be proof that in the "real world," all you have to do is work hard and good things will come to you. If only those Africans or Palestinians just realized this, maybe they too can have what the "real world" promises all of us.

I realize now that in this whole time, I have been wrong. I foolishly sold my readers a world where those who gain at the expense of others are immoral. In the "real world," we call it "business."

It's what improves the quality of our lives. The "real world" promises that just as long as you partake in this "business," there's the possibility you will live like "The Donald."

In the "real world," we will live our lives knowing that we have done well for ourselves. Even if inflation spins out of control and wipes out your retirement fund, the only dignified thing to do is realize that the "real world" entails some risk. Although you have worked for 60 years and had nothing to show for it but a sore back, you at least have your pride. You can look right into the mirror and say how you feel with one word: "Sucker."

You know, maybe Arthur Miller was right. Maybe it really is a tragedy that we sacrifice our lives for that little piece of dignity and "opportunity" that the "real world" promises us. And with that is my message to those who worship a life in this world: Keep it.

Never again will I buy into the sick fantasy that a life in constant pursuit of material wealth and dignity will have anything for me in the end.

In the "real world" I am a commodity, where the only people measuring my worth are shareholders.

We wake up in our 60s and realize that despite all the material wealth we have striven for, life only became harder. Families have broken apart, bones became brittle, and one after another, our dreams have been discarded into the dustbin marked, "Childish Utopia." And for some reason, we're proud of it. Those who look on in disgust just don't get it.

But, whether you are the manager of a big firm or a janitor, in the end, there is no first class ticket to your grave. Don't let the fantastic delusions of the "real world" tell you otherwise.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist.

Right to die a matter of dignity

Allison Edles

Gov. Jeb Bush of Florida has recently committed an action under a law that has been ruled unconstitutional by a Florida judge. Bush, acting under a one-time-only law that was put forth in October, ordered a woman, Terri Schiavo, who was placed in what doctors called "a persistent vegetative state" after she suffered brain damage in 1990, to be relocated from a private hospice to a hospital where she was to be fed nutrient solutions through a feeding tube. Schiavo's husband Michael previously had many court decisions rule in his favor for withdrawing life support from his wife. The decision of Bush to reverse the court decisions on Mrs. Schiavo's caretaking is one that was not his responsibility to make and should have been left up to the discretion of the family.

According to a legal briefing made by the American Medical Association, "for over 2,000 years, the predominant responsibility of the physician has not been to preserve life at all costs but to serve the patient's needs while respecting the patient's autonomy and dignity." The right that a patient has to die with dignity and respect is one that belongs to each individual alone and to no one else.

Patients' lives are not bettered simply because they are hooked up to a respirator that is breathing for them and a feeding tube that is providing their body with nourishment. To be kept alive is different from being alive.

Patients' lives are not bettered simply because they are hooked up to a respirator that is breathing for them and a feeding tube that is providing their body with nourishment. To be kept alive is different from being alive. And in a case such as this, where the patient had fallen into "a vegetative state" so suddenly leaving no written instructions regarding her care-taking and has remained in that state for years with no sign of improvement, a dignified death is the only acceptable alternative and the only one left at this point.

The "right to die" debate has been most commonly brought up because of the dealings of Dr. Jack Kevorkian, who assisted in the deaths of patients suffering from serious illnesses. These patients viewed death as a better alternative than their current living conditions. On March 26, 1999, Kevorkian was convicted of second-degree murder and delivery of a controlled substance in assisting with the death of a 52 year-old man who was suffering from amyotrophic lateral sclerosis (ALS), more commonly referred to as Lou Gehrig's disease. He is currently serving a 10-25 year sentence in prison with an additional 3-7 years for administration of a controlled substance.

While assisting in a patient's death, regardless of the medical circumstances, is ruled as an account of murder and carries a jail sentence, the idea behind it is sparing a life with dignity over resuming a life that is suffering for a few more months. Gov. Bush was not in a place to say whether or not Mrs. Schiavo should be kept alive in a hospital, especially since he has no direct ties to the family and is not experiencing the grief that her loved-ones are feeling. To keep her alive regardless of that fact only worsens the family's anguish and will not revive her, but only keep the body functioning at best.

Terri Schiavo's case has been publicized all over Florida for years, but didn't come into full awareness until October when Gov. Bush stepped in and took action. The Republican platform generally advocates for the pro-life stance on issues such as abortion and euthanasia, but in this circumstance, it is best to look beyond just the basic black and white issue of life and death. It is important to look at quality of life. If politicians truly set a goal of improving the lives of their voters, then how they live should be taken into account just as much as whether they simply live or not.

The case involving Gov. Bush and the Schiavos will most likely be taken to the Florida Supreme Court. Regardless of what will be decided, Terri Schiavo's life will never be the same and will never be like it was before her accident in 1990. Keeping her alive via feeding tubes in a hospital where empty beds are very much needed for other patients with serious illnesses and injuries does no good for Mrs. Schiavo and only worsens the ongoing pain being felt by her family and loved ones. Mrs. Schiavo's right to die is more apparent now than it may have been back in 1990. To keep her body going when the brain is not willing to perform continues to strip her of the dignity to which she is so aptly entitled.

Information provided by the New York Times was used in this article.

Allison Edles is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

EDITORIAL BOARD OPINION BASED ON FALSITIES

I don't normally respond to opinions expressed in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian because I am an older employee of the University of Massachusetts and don't want to interfere in the student debate on campus. However, the stakes are so high in the debate over the war in Iraq that I feel compelled to reply to your editorial opinion piece in Tuesday's edition.

In two places you say that one of the main reasons for attacking Iraq was to overthrow the "tyrant" Saddam Hussein. The only source I am aware of for this revisionist history is the Bush White House as it tries to divert attention from the lies it used to justify an unprovoked attack on the sovereign nation of Iraq. I'm sure you are well aware that the war was sold to the American people, and the world, on the basis of the alleged imminent threat posed by Iraq because of its huge stockpiles of chemical and biological weapons, its ties to Al-Qaeda and its advanced nuclear weapons capability. I'm sure you are also aware that these allegations have been proven to be false and hence the White House effort to convince us that it was still OK to attack simply because Saddam was a "bad guy."

Here's why your inaccurate statements are important: Recent polls show that, incredibly, 20 percent of Americans still believe that Hussein was directly responsible for 9/11, 57 percent believe there was a direct link to Al-Qaeda and 38 percent believe that Iraq possessed WMD. And that's not the worst of it. Based on these misperceptions, the majority of those holding these false opinions plan to vote for Bush in November. Thus, the deceptions of this administration are working and the press, sadly including The Collegian, are perpetuating these myths. The majority of those who have been reading more widely and understand that the consensus of opinion is that the justification for war was based on falsehoods will predominantly vote against Bush.

Whether you are for or against the Bush administration, as journalists, I would hope that you understand the importance of the truth informing public debate. If you do, I hope you will correct your misstatements.

By the way, your ending comment that the majority of the troops are "upholding the highest principles" is also questionable. Amnesty International has been trying to get the United States to address alleged abuse cases for a year. They also allege that the abuse is widespread, systemic and not limited to a few rogue individuals. A number of soldiers and at least one higher ranking officer have also suggested the problem is widespread. My question to you is: What is the justification for your expressed opinion?

Peter Kerr
UMass professor

BUSH'S APOLOGY NOT ENOUGH

In response to the Thursday, May 6 article titled "U.S. General Apologizes for Iraqi Abuse," I would like to remind you all of one thing.

One of President Bush's justifications for the war in iraq was the human rights violations Saddam Hussein's regime committed against the Iraqi people. We were given descriptions of "torture chambers and rape rooms" and the horrid conditions present to an Iraqi citizen.

It is ironic how similar the recently leaked photographs of the American soldiers' abuses in Iraq echo the very things we were supposedly fighting against. Our soldiers have created their own torture chambers in the very same rooms as Saddam's. Bush apologized, saying he is "sorry for the humiliation suffered by the Iraqi prisoners," but that is definitely not enough.

The President should also express regret to the nation, and indeed the world, for failing to meet the human rights goal of the war. He should then commit to a full examination of American misconduct and offer a plausible strategy for correcting American mistakes committed against the Muslim world.

Richard Harris
UMass student

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com | 413-545-3699 | Letters to the Editor, 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MAY 10, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Band's performance a nice contrast to Spring Concert

By Jennifer Gorson
Collegian Correspondent

Sister Hazel, perhaps best and only known for their 1997 hit "All for You," took the stage at the Southwest Horseshoe Thursday night and gave an impressive performance to a lively, appreciative crowd.

Set up under a small tent on the lawn, the low-key band could have first been mistaken for an anonymous new local group instead of the decade-old, million-record-selling grass roots band from Gainesville, Fla. However, once you heard the inviting tunes permeating the warm spring night, it was clear this was no amateur performance.

They hit the stage at 10 p.m., following the winner of Wednesday's battle of the bands, Dressed casually and accented by multi colored strobe lights flashing to the beat, the five musicians did not fail their reputation as solid live performers. Their sound, reminiscent of a more upbeat Counting Crows, was melodic, bluesy and infectious.

Mid-set, they went into a great rendition of "Your Winter," their heartfelt track off of the "10 Things I Hate About You" soundtrack ("I won't be your winter ... I won't be anyone's excuse to cry"). "Your Winter" was followed by "All for You," to which the crowd sang along and clapped their hands, filling in the words when lead vocalist and acoustic guitarist Ken Block stopped singing and let the crowd take over.

Though they weren't exactly the most wild and innovative performers, the group projected a warm, good-natured attitude that meshed well with the spirited concert-goers.

Block got laughs when he proclaimed, "I think this is the first time we've been flashed by so many guys" and was cheered on by comments like "what a party crowd, man, thanks for hanging out with us." In fact, the band decided not to stick around for autographs like they had originally planned because, according to security, it was "too rowdy."

Regardless, the band responded to the crowd's enthusiasm with energy of their own. Lead riffs from guitarist Ryan Newell, the impressive harmonies of Block and rhythm guitarist Andrew Copeland, and just plain old jamming showcased their laudable musical talent.

Even when playing less familiar material, all of their songs were feel-good, crowd pleasing, and fun, managing to keep the attention of "hazelnuts" and non-fans alike. The response from the attendees ranged from a devoted listener's "It was amazing!" to "I don't like Sister Hazel, but they are definitely great live."

Their encore ended with "Just Remember," the stage bathed in yellow light, fitting to the title of their recently self-released album "Chasing Daylight."

"Life often has you going in and out of darkness," Block said about the band's first self-released effort since 1996, on the band's Web site. "But instead of lurking in darkness, we try to chase daylight ... chase hopeful situations. Our music helps us do that, and we hope it can offer the same for others."

All in all, Thursday's performance was a fine example of what a concert should be, in stark contrast to the anti-climactic Spring Concert headlined by Busta Rhymes.

Either way, what Sister Hazel lacks in consistent mainstream hits, they make up for with integrity and professionalism at their enjoyable live shows.

Information from sisterhazel.com was used in this article.

Sister Hazel rocks fans Thursday night in the Southwest Horseshoe. The concert was the ending of Southwest Week.

'Laws Of Attraction' breaks all rules of the romantic comedy

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

Watching the supposedly bubbly romantic comedy "Laws of Attraction" is much like gulping down a glass of flat champagne: The taste is there, but the effervescence is gone.

"Laws of Attraction," which stars Julianne Moore and Pierce Brosnan, is meant to be a sharp and funny screwball comedy about two smart, sophisticated New York professionals bickering and bantering their way in and out of bed. If this sounds anything like your average Hepburn-Tracy romantic farce, that's because it's supposed to. But the movie isn't exactly in the same league as those films. It's wan and pallid, with little of the lightness of touch that a movie of this sort requires. The movie sometimes achieves what could be best described as "cuteness" — certainly this may make a palatable date movie for undiscriminating couples — but it's also mostly monotonous and contrived, a rather bland excuse for indulging in screwball franticness.

The characters embodied by Moore and Brosnan are a pair of highly qualified New York divorce lawyers who frequently find themselves up against each other in the courtroom. Moore's character Audrey Woods is uptight and prudish, an overly proffessional cynic who believes she prefers work to dating and consumes anything sugary — notably Hostess Sno-Balls — when racked by nerves. Brosnan's Daniel Rafferty is loose, charming and roguish, playing to the tune of his own jazz drummer rather than by the marching band of Audrey. He even keeps his unkempt office in a space above a grocery store in Chinatown. Naturally, Audrey hates him at first sight, and naturally, they'll fall in love by the end.

Except, nothing in this lackluster movie turns out in the natural way. It doesn't take long for Daniel and Audrey to indulge in their barely hidden passions, winding up in bed after a drunken night at a Cuban restaurant. The movie knows the two are meant for each other, we know the two are meant for each other — hell, they both know they are meant for each other — but the movie goes through endless plot convolutions to keep them from falling in love. After 20 minutes, they should have been celebrating their four-month anniversary, and the end credits could start rolling.

But no, we have to sit through the contortions and machinations of the screenwriters for an hour and a half. That may go a long way to explain why "Laws of Attraction" feels so dour and lifeless — it's just postponing the inevitable while we watch and wait for the end to finally come.

Daniel and Audrey come to represent the two warring halves of a rock'n'roll couple in court; a preening, sneering punk star (Michael Sheen) and his shriek, obnoxious fashion designer wife (Parker Posey), both of whom want to keep the gorgeous Irish castle for themselves after the divorce is settled. The loud, volume-to-the-max antics of Sheen and Posey are meant to inject much needed life into the proceedings; needless to say, they overcompensate.

The subplot lets director Peter Howitt indulge in some photogenic shots of Ireland and gives our attractive leads an excuse to accidently get married. This event forms the body of "Laws of Attraction" — it's what the movie's blah trailers were built from — but it isn't convincing. Nothing in "Laws of Attraction" seems convincing enough to have come from the real world.

Least convincing of all is why Daniel would instantly fall in love with a shrewish harridan like Audrey Woods. Throguhout the movie, the guy seems like the model of chivalry and macho civility, gently wooing Audrey and genuinely looking to hurt whenever the woman says something nasty to him. Throughout the movie, Audrey is nothing but cruel to his feelings. She keeps denying that she's falling in love, and she does so by repeatedly treating Daniel with scorn. And this is our romantic heroine?

That's not to say the the actors don't do well in their respective roles, with Brosnan edging just ahead of Moore because the actress — as talented as she has shown herself to be in the past — can't make her character seem likable or intelligent. For such a smart woman, Audrey makes a lot of bad decisions, and Moore doesn't instill enough sympathy to win over the audience's affections. Both stars however, are overshadowed by Frances Fisher's lively performance as Moore's plastic surgery-addicted mother; the little character quirk may explain why the 53-year-old actress is playing the mother to a 41-year-old actress.

There are laws of attraction that most movies need to follow in love films; namely, we need a good reason for the couple not to get together, and we need to see two people we actually like get together. "Laws of Attraction" is guilty for breaking both.

'Laws of Attraction'
Directed by Peter Howitt
Starring Pierce Brosnan, Julianne Moore
New Line
Rated PG-13
90 mins
Grade C

COURTESY TABLOID.COM

Pierce Brosnan and Julianne Moore get familiar in "Laws of Attraction," although their performances fail to excite moviegoers.

COURTESY TABLOID.COM

Pierce Brosnan, better known for his role in "James Bond" films, stars alongside Julianne Moore in "Laws of Attraction."

MondayMay10

Art
The BFA Thesis projects of University of Massachusetts students Kelly Fuller and Josiah Cuneo will be on display in the Student Union Art Gallery through May 14. Gallery hours are Monday through Thursday 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Friday 10 a.m. to 3 p.m. An opening reception for the work will be held on Tuesday, May 11 from 4-6 p.m. For tickets and more information call 545-0792.

TuesdayMay11

Music
The University of Massachusetts Jazz Ensemble I will perform in the Bowker Auditorium starting at 8 p.m. The performance will be conducted by Jeffrey Holmes and will feature new student works and more. Tickets are on sale through the Fine Arts Center Box office by calling 545-2511.

WednesdayMay12

Music
Janis Ian will perform at the Iron Horse Music Hall at 7 p.m. Ian is known for her controversial stances on taboo topics, most recently of which being her article written in "Performing Songwriter Magazine" regarding the downloading of music. Tickets are on sale for $18 in advance and $21 at the door.

ThursdayMay13

Lecture
The Odyssey Bookshop of South Hadley along with the University of Massachusetts' College of Humanities and Fine Arts will host a reading/lecture by author Marion Copeland, from her work "Cockroach." The lecture will be held at 7 p.m. in the South Hadley Village Commons and is free and open to the public.

Theater
Smith College will hold a performance of "Top Girls" in the Hallie Flanagan Studio Theater starting at 8:30 p.m. Written by Caryl Churchill, "Top Girls" explores the role of women in contemporary society through different female characters' perceptions of success, both in modern day London and in other historical periods and cultures. The play, directed by Francesca Bastianini '04, questions whether Marlene or any of the other women in her life will ever be happy even at the "top."

There will be repeat performances of "Top Girls" on Friday and Saturday starting at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are on sale for $5-$7 by calling 413-545-ARTS.

FridayMay14

Music
The Pearl Street Nightclub will host M.O.P., Pharoahe Monch, Scratch (formerly of The Roots) and Pitch Black. The show will start at 8:30 p.m. in the Ballroom. Tickets are on sale for $20 in advance, $23 at the door.

weekly pinup

COHEN COMES TO NOHO

MARC COHEN WILL PERFORM AT THE IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL ON SUNDAY, MAY 16 AT 9:30 P.M. TICKETS ARE ON SALE THROUGH IRON HORSE BOX OFFICE FOR $35 IN ADVANCE AND AT THE DOOR.

Mission accomplished: Mission of Burma rescues fans after 20 years

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

Mission Of Burma is a unique band with an unmistakable sound. Beyond that their story is truly remarkable: The Boston-based band only had a brief career, from 1979-83, and in that time they only released one LP, 1982's post-punk classic "Vs.," along with an EP and two singles. The records did not sell that well and the band quietly went their separate ways in 1983, largely due to guitarist and vocalist Roger Miller's development of Tinnitus, a condition caused by exposure to loud noise that causes a ringing in one's ear that only gets worse over time.

Mission of Burma
'OnoffOn'
Matador

Sometime between 1983 and 2002, people finally started to take notice of the band. Burma was rightly hailed as one of the innovators of the alternative rock scene right up alongside peers like Sonic Youth and Black Flag. They are one of the most influential bands of the past 20 years, comparable to bands such as Husker Du and The Pixies (who were both influenced by Burma) that also had more success after they broke up than during their heyday.

Twenty two years after Burma released "Vs.," The Pixies are reunited, at least for now, but offer no guarantee of new material, and the odds of Husker Du getting back together are about as slim as a full-band Beatles reunion. It seems to be a perfect time for Burma to be getting back in the game. With "OnoffOn" the band sounds just as fresh and exciting as they ever did. They are at once the very same band from 1983 and an evolved, developed version of the old Burma. It's almost like the band never broke up; they had just been brewing one album for two decades.

"I figure our 20-year hiatus worked to our advantage in a way," reasoned Miller in a phone interview with The Massachusetts Daily Collegian. "We kinda stored up all this stuff, or it was just still growing, we didn't know it ... When you put the three of us [fourth member, tape manipulator Martin Swope has retired and has been replaced by Shellac's Bob Weston] together ... this thing called Mission Of Burma comes up and there's nothing you can do about it," he laughs.

The opener, "The Setup," wastes no time in blasting trademark Burma energy through the speakers, preparing the listener for the very distinct blend of styles that has come to define the band. Drummer/vocalist Peter Prescott quietly rides his cymbals in "The Enthusiast" before the song explodes like a punk-rock time bomb made in the '70s and set to detonate today. "Dirt" has a slightly softer feel to the vocals, sung by bassist/vocalist Clint Conley, the song as a whole recalls the sound of late '80s Husker Du.

The best thing about "OnoffOn" is that it proves Burma's relevance. Rather than cranking out a bland album, and retracing footsteps of former glory, what Burma has done is pinpoint that glory and the reasons why they were such a great band, and used that as a starting point.

Is "OnoffOn" better then "Vs.?" That's hard to say but the new disc certainly doesn't slouch in the shadow of the band's history – it takes the legend's head on. "Wounded World," one of the disc's bests, finds Miller playing more great riffs than most guitarists put on one album. The verses pump with passion and the chorus mixes ferocity and beauty. "Falling" recalls Bob Mould's electric solo work and also features female harmonies; something new for the band.

Perhaps the most amazing thing about Mission Of Burma is that for the countless bands that they've influenced, they are still light years away from practically everyone. Nothing fills the void Burma's breakup created except for the band itself — accept no imitations.

"I was driving back [from the last show in 1983], and I turned to a friend of mine and I said, 'A few years down the road we're going to be called the Velvet Underground of the '80s,'" Miller says. "[My friend] looked at me and said, 'God Roger, you aren't the Velvet Underground of the '80s.'

"I said, 'I'm not gonna say that I don't think that, but we will be called that.' And within two years, in the press, [we were being called] 'Mission Of Burma: The Velvet Underground of the '80s,'" Miller laughs.

All the commotion over Burma's reunion makes sense, but it still seems a little odd for the band that thought they were throwing in the towel over 20 years ago.

"We felt like it was the end," Miller recalls. "It was very peculiar: Peter really didn't want to break up, but both Clint and Martin when I said 'I gotta quit' [due to tinnitus] they said OK.' "

Although the band's career did seem unfortunately cut short, Miller recalls that he felt Burma was a real accomplishment:

"We felt that we had done something. It had come to some kind of logical conclusion, for its time obviously because it wasn't concluded, and we'd done our best so, fine, we're done."

One of the most startling things about "OnoffOn" is the way that it puts current music into perspective. When Burma was starting they were part of an exciting new genre, which came to be known as alternative. Now "alternative" culture and music has been co-opted and watered down, few bands are as pure as Burma, which is a bit disheartening when looking at the great music that has been made under the post-punk or alternative umbrellas.

"It seems to me that what people refer to as 'punk' now has more to do with style and copying something that's already been codified ... I hear more people saying 'this is how it's supposed to done and this is how I'm going to do it' which, to me, isn't really punk rock," Miller said.

"Punk rock started in the college area ... the indie rock scene comes out of there. There's too much attention being paid to it. Major-labels look in that area for what's the next trend. It's all been charted and what made both the psychedelic era and the punk rock era ... so good is that they were explosions. The classic rock scene and the disco scene ... it was so frustrating if you were a creative artist, or a rocker who just wanted to do something that wasn't stupid, all this stuff was compressed so it was able to explode into a new thing. Whereas now it's just kinda inflating, stuff rises and something's about to happen and someone will [stop it] and so it's difficult — I don't know if rock music will ever cause such a major event as it did in the '50s ... or the British Invasion and psychedelica, or punk rock. I don't see how an explosion as big as those three events can ever happen again. But that doesn't mean rock music isn't valid."

Mission Of Burma is, in a way, an isolated explosion. The same frustration that Miller felt in the '70s seems to still exist today and "OnoffOn" is the perfect art/alt/indie-rock record for the punk rocker in everyone.

If there's no such thing as important movements anymore then music now rests in the hands of important bands. Mission Of Burma is, without exaggeration, one of the most important, not to mention exciting, bands of the past 20 years and "OnoffOn" assures that no matter what the future holds for the band, they will always be remembered and revered.

Moving Off Campus?
THINK
before you sign a lease or sublet!
*Show your lease to one of our lawyers.
Learn your rights and obligations as a tenant and roomate
Student Legal Services Office
922 Campus Center
545-1995
University of Massachusetts Amherst

Going Back Home? It Won't Fit in Your Car?
We pro-rate daily. You only pay for the days you stay.
Greenfield Secure Self Storage
1135 Bernardston Rd.
413-775-0074

NEW ON TUESDAY!
LAST SAMURAI
CALENDAR GIRLS
CHASING LIBERTY
ELEPHANT
GIRL WITH A PEARL EARRING
PETER PAN
TRIPLETS OF BELLEVILLE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Bruegger's
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Hit the books, then hit the beach!
• Day and evening classes start May 24th
• Affordable resident cost is $136 per credit
• 5- or 10-week courses
• A great way to earn college credits quickly
• Credits are transferable to your school! (When you are a university or college student, or incoming college freshman)
• Wellesley, Framingham, and Ashland
Call MassBay today at 781-239-2703 or go to www.massbay.edu
Looking to get ahead in your course work? Short on credits and need to catch up? Or just looking for something satisfying to do this Summer? A MassBay Summer Session course is the way to go!
Don't sweat it.
Check out MassBay's Summer Session Courses in:
Business
LMT
English
Health
History
Lab Sciences (such as Anatomy & Physiology, Biology, Microbiology)
Math
Social Sciences
and other transferable courses!
Classes meet Monday-Thursday so there's plenty of time left for other Summer activities
To register or obtain additional information, call 781-239-2703.
MassBay Community College
Start here. Go anywhere.

GRAPHICS
the Collegian is hiring for next semester
College Street Motors
CAMPUS PARKING NOTICE
Come talk to Scott, Shannon, or Rachael or call 545-1864
105 Campus Center Basement
Freshmen and Sophomores are encouraged to apply

Junior midfielder Chris Doyle posted a goal and an assist in UMass' Senior Day win over Rutgers.

UM seniors go out with a bang

MEN'S LAX from page 8

We seniors, we got 44, put that in the record books. It's up in the locker room, 44's our number now."

UMass got off to a quick start, as the Tundo brothers scored a pair of goals in the first quarter. Freshman Matt took a feed from Pat Larmon in close and bounced a shot past Havalchak to open the scoring at 5:53. Gene Tundo followed up at the end of the quarter, streaking down the field after the Scarlet Knights were called offside, despite their best efforts to call a timeout before the infraction.

John Flanagan got the Scarlet Knights on the board at 4:45 of the second, with a hard shot to the top right corner. The Minutemen answered with two more goals in the quarter, though, and took a 4-1 lead into halftime. Sophomore Jamie Yaman took a pass from freshman Brian Iacovina, turned and found the net to make it 3-1 with 5:16 left in the half.

Rutgers threatened minutes later, when Powless ringed a shot off the crossbar, and Morris made a stop on the Rutgers rebound attempt. With 2:17 to go in the half, Morris found Lundburg on an extra-man opportunity, the 6-foot-4 midfielder performed a mid-air spin, and beat Havalchak to make it 4-1.

The Scarlet Knights looked rejuvenated to start the second half, and Chris Doctor scored a controversial goal to cut the lead to two just 46 seconds into the third quarter. Doctor was pushed into the crease as he prepared to shoot, and a flag was thrown. Doctor managed to put the ball in the net as he fell, but it looked to hit the ground on the way in. The goal stood, however, and the Knights got a boost of momentum.

It didn't last long, as Morris scored his fourth of the season, and Chris Doyle quick-sticked a feed from Gene Tundo to give the Minutemen a 6-2 lead. The Scarlet Knights took control for the rest of the third, scoring three goals, including two goals, one on the extra-man, from Leif Blomquist. Although Havalchak made one of his finer saves in the beginning of the fourth quarter, using his stick shaft to make a stop on a hard shot, Rutgers couldn't capitalize on the run, and the Minutemen finished strong for their seventh victory.

Lundburg's goal in the fourth quarter was his second of the game. He popped out from behind the net and took a feed from Morris in front, and quickly converted the shot, sending it low past Havalchak with 7:37 to go in the game.

Defense shines in spring game

By Mike Marzelli
Collegian Staff

A new era of Massachusetts football was finally ushered in on Saturday afternoon, as the revamped 2004 Minutemen officially concluded spring camp with the annual Maroon and White spring game at Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

As heralded by new head coach and former Atlantic 10 Coach of the Year Don Brown, defense dominated play in a game that featured only a single touchdown for each squad and just 275 yards on 64 plays.

Making a strong early case for playing time in UMass' deep defensive backfield, sophomore cornerback Tracy Belton tallied three tackles, two interceptions and a pass breakup, while classmate and strong safety James Ihedigbo recorded five tackles, a sack and an interception as well.

Former 2002 Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year R.J. Cobbs also returned to the field after missing all of his sophomore season due to academic issues. A 1,000-yard tailback in his freshman season, Cobbs has been moved into the defensive backfield to add athleticism to the unit, and made four solo tackles in the game.

Two areas of concern for a team that graduated seven defensive starters — defensive line and linebackers — also featured strong performances from players looking to get a leg up on starting jobs.

Sophomore defensive tackle John Hatchell posted five tackles, a sack and a fumble recovery, and redshirt freshmam linebacker Geno Brown and junior linebacker Brad Anderson both added five tackles apiece.

Returning starter Serge Tikum also saw action and recorded a tackle, and another regular contributor in 2003, defensive lineman Keron Williams, who added four stops.

In addition, converted linebacker L.A. Love made his debut as a defensive end, chalking up a pair of tackles, including one for a loss.

Offensively, sophomore quarterback Tim Day took the majority of the snaps with the first team, completing 10-of-22 passes for 119 yards and 15-yard scoring strike to senior wide receiver Dominique Stewart.

Senior Steve Howell was good on 4-of-7 passes for 31 yards, while redshirt freshman Randy Polillio was perfect on the afternoon, completing all three passes he attempted, including a 15-yard touchdown pass of his own to sophomore wide receiver Rasheed Rancher.

Redshirt freshman wide receiver J.J. Moore had a game-best five catches for 66 yards, while senior fullback Rich Demers hauled in three passes for 11 yards out of the backfield.

Junior Raunny Rosario and sophomore Justin Montgomery both ran for a game-high 27 yards, on five and nine carries respectively, while highly-touted freshman tailback Bryan Smith gained 19 yards on six carries.

The Maroon and White will convene next as a full squad in August for the start of training camp. The 2004 UMass football season officially kicks off Saturday, Sept. 4, as the Minutemen will be on the road at Mid-Eastern Atlantic conference foe Delaware State.

The best team you never hear about

Mike Marzelli

The University of Massachusetts' athletic department really wants you to like its football team. It really does.

It wants you the students, you the alumni and you the members of the surrounding communities to unite and create a rabid following for a team that has won two of the last five Atlantic 10 titles and a National Championship in 1998.

Those in charge of bringing fame and recognition to the program want you to make tailgating for Saturday home games a staple of fall in western New England, and they want you to make it a daylong event and actually stay through the completion of the game.

They want you to buy maroon hats and sweatshirts, flags and mini-footballs, and they want you to show pride and team spirit, because when they have homecoming bonfires, they want you to show up.

They also want to jump to where the prestige is, where the interest is. They want to move to Division I-A, play a few games at the home of the Super Bowl champions, and leave behind the "minor leagues" of I-AA, the Atlantic 10 and the 6,000-seat high school stadium covered in snow and frozen mud. They want to go big time.

So what then, in the name of the 22,000 fans that flock to Tubby Raymond Field every time the Fightin' Blue Hens are at home, or the 23,000-plus who tell you to "dress warm and bring earplugs" when coming to see the Montana Grizzlies, are these fine folks doing in completely and utterly under-publicizing the UMass team?

Last time I checked, there was no rabid community following for the team. That wicked cool Adrian Zullo jersey from two years ago is still the marquee football item in the campus UStore. And the only student support at McGuirk on Saturdays is myself, whoever is calling the game on WMUA and that random kid in my anthropology class whom i still don't believe actually goes.

With the pipe dream that is the potential move to I-A set to be revisited in five years, the time has come for the athletic department to put a genuine effort into drumming up some support for this team, for it just might take that long.

The Minutemen concluded spring drills and played their spring game on Saturday, but if you didn't know where to look, you might never have known.

There was no announcement made, release publicized or promotion created to draw more than close friends and family to this annual event. If it wasn't for this very publication printing an account of what happened, this 20,000-plus student campus wouldn't have even known it existed, for that matter.

Meanwhile, the University of Miami requires pre-ordering of spring game tickets up to six months in advance.

Go figure.

Mike Marzelli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at Marzelli_Collegian@yahoo.com.

Minutewomen blow out BC

SOFTBALL from page 8

England Intercollegiate Softball Coaches Association last week, Puglia showed why she deserved honors with an incredible stop in the fourth. With arms fully extended and a little hop, the junior infielder chased down a high and hard ball that could have easily been a single.

"My momentum was really taking me on that play, so I couldn't stop and set my feet. I kind of just went on the fly, and [senior first baseman Nicole Wilson] made a great stop," Puglia said.

"Hilary does things like that all the time," Sortino said. "She's just a natural infielder. She has a nose for the ball, and she's so smooth. She does stuff that quite frankly you just can't teach."

The Minutewomen then grabbed some insurance in the fifth and sixth innings. In the bottom of the fifth, a single from KC Budrewicz drove home Kelley.

UMass put the final clamp on BC in the sixth. Wilson took advantage of a wild pitch by stealing home to open the lead to four. After moving to third following the steal, Franke soon came home via another error by the catcher. Jamie Cahalan then hit what should have been a routine fly to right, but the rightfielder dropped the ball and two runs scored.

Between Arnold (18-5) and Busa on the mound, the Minutewomen pitching staff allowed just two hits all day.

UMass Boston

Classroom with a View
UMASS BOSTON, SUMMER 2004

Ready to broaden your horizons this summer? Take a course at UMass Boston. Choose from over 500 course sections offered days, evenings, or online. Our campus overlooking Boston Harbor is easy to get to by subway or car. And if you really want a breath of fresh air, check out how affordable our fees are.

UMASS BOSTON
Register today!
To learn more, visit www.umb.edu or call 617.287.6000

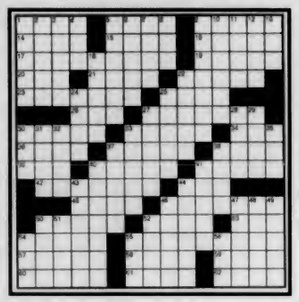
HermanMiller AUTHORIZED DEALER
MHEC Vendor
LEXINGTON GROUP
Buyers & Sellers of Quality New & Used Office Furniture
♦ Design & Space Planning ♦ Installations
♦ Furniture Rental & Leasing ♦ Panel Systems New & Remanufactured
Eric Bascom 413.746.3064
eric@lexingtongroupinc.com
380 Union St., West Springfield,MA 01089

Calling the Graduating Class of 2005!!

Now is the time to start making reservations at the Lincoln D. Murray Campus Center Hotel
Graduation Weekend
Fri. May 20th-Sat. May 21st, 2005

Calling Day for making reservations starts May 12, 2004 @ 10am. Limited rooms available. First come first serve. 2 night's minimum stay for $270/room ($135/night)

Book the 3rd night (Thurs. or Sun.) at a discounted price of $59!



To make reservations, call: 413.549.6000

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 — au lait
5 Perimeter
9 Cousin's dad
14 Type of seaman
15 Nurture
16 Gets stuck
17 Attended a reward (2 wds.)
19 Ire
20 Tokyo, formerly
21 Political campaign
22 Reply
23 Home wrecker?
25 Lily-white
26 Jungle snake
27 Pizza topping
30 Fragrant wood
33 Rancher's footwear
34 Every second counter
36 Line of relation
37 Trattoria sauce
38 Field of study
39 "Who's Who" entry
40 "Nevermore" site
41 Idaho and Ada
42 Streetcar
44 Monsieur's summer
46 Cookie ingredient
48 Credit cards, slangily
50 Tooth type
52 Hull part
53 Nurses org.
54 Imbibe
55 Good-looksers
57 River vessel
58 Let borrow
59 Three-sided sword
60 Knight's mount
61 Recruit's dinner
62 Feel sure of

DOWN
1 Military student
2 Resistance
3 Elevator stop
4 Always, to Poe
5 Misprints
6 Free of frost
7 Steady look
8 Before now
9 Strike callers
10 Author's gns.
11 Tension bity (2 wds.)
12 Tax
13 WNW opposite
18 Abbot's underling
22 Recesses of (2 wds.)
24 CEO degrees
28 Scrapbook
29 Ms.
31 "Epic" star
32 Light brown
34 Brought action
35 Urban transport
37 Heavenly deity
38 Designer label
39 Tam
39 Gilman article
37 More washed-out
38 Mimics
40 Gathered slowly
41 Hang down
43 Help out
44 Pickle
44 Lowly laborers
47 Gray-brown
48 Pantium producer
49 Baseball's — Stengel
50 Steaks
51 Horrible boss
51 Bone opposite
54 Tax-prep org.
56 Duck dance
56 Above, to a bard

DAILY WEATHER FORECAST
For Amherst

MONDAY
• High: 66
• Low: 46

TUESDAY
• High: 77
• Low: 47

WEDNESDAY
• High: 74
• Low: 52

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
• Pizza Casserole
• Santa Fe Chicken
• Cuban Red Beans (vegan)

DINNER
• Fried Shrimp
• Szechuan Beef & Broccoli
• Madras Tofu Curry (vegan)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Jennifer Eastwood
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Scott Eldridge II
COPY EDITOR
Andy Vogt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Samantha Nielsen
PRODUCTION STAFF
Russell Silva/ Diana Mogilevsky

AMHERST HAIRSTYLISTS
Caren's Place
Come in and get the attention you want!
• Students Always $15 shampoo & cut
• We specialize in Multi-Color Highlights using three to four complementing and blending colors
• Free Haircolor consultation
• 1/2 price Facial Waxing on Wednesdays
• Walk-ins Welcome

253-1200
40 Main St.
Downtown Amherst
Mon-Fri 10-6
Sat 10-4
No checks-we accept debit cards
$2.00 OFF HAIRCUT
With this COUPON only

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your laundry is starting to grow things.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You are the target of the angry squirrel militia.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
If you can't remember it, it didn't happen.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
When you flex, you look just like a young Schwarzenegger.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Mental telepathy can be done. You just have to cross your eyes and focus.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Stop waking up your friends at 3 a.m. They just don't care.

leo • Jul.. 23-Aug. 22
You are way off the charts.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You haven't graduated yet. Stop slacking.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Perhaps you should try yoga. You need to lengthen. Be nimble. Be quick.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Stop pondering life. You're wasting precious brain wattage.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
This summer you are going to go to a far, far place, like Oz, but not.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Don't be such a crybaby.

QUOTE FOR THE DAY

"Eternal nothingness is fine if you happen to be dressed for it."

-Woody Allen

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Meeting Notice Top of the Campus, Inc. (TOC, Inc.) will hold its Annual Meeting in Campus Center 805-809, Wednesday, May 12, 2004 at 2:00pm.

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Apt 2bdrm For Rent 253-2149 AmherstCenter Awesomelocation

Puffton Village 2 Bdrm Apt Avail. Lease begins in June Free Heat and Hot Water Call (914) 393-9505

Mill Valley Estates now Renting 2 bedrm $1050/1100, 4 bedrm $2100 available 6/1/04 No last months rent, Free Heat & Hot Water, 2 full baths, AC. On busline Mon-Fri 10-5pm 253-7377

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 Geo Prism 113,000 miles great condition New Timing Belt 4 New Tires $1200.00 O.B.O. 577-5129 665-7731

Ford Probe SE 1996 51075 Call 413-687-7510. Morean@cns.umass.edu

Honda Civic EX 99 4DR Manual 68K mi. A/C Alarm Great condition $8200 545-1291

1992 Honda Accord LX 4 door sedan 138K miles good condition $2000 253-6784

EMPLOYMENT

ATTENTION LAX PLAYERS Play & Coach – Have fun – Make $$$ Top Boys Sports Camp in Maine looking for staff to instruct & coach LAX. Awesome Summer! Work with kids! Top salaries, FREE rm/bd/trvl allow. Apply online ASAP: www.camp-cobbossee.com

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

EMPLOYMENT

Play sports! Have fun! Save Money! Sports Camp in Maine Coaches needed: Tennis, Basketball, Baseball, Water-sports, Ropes Course, Golf, Archery, and more. Work Outdoors and Have a Great Summer! Call Free: (888) 844-8080 or Apply: www.campcedar.com

Activism
Summer
Jobs
For the Environment
3000-5000/Summer Join the state's largest public interest grassroots organization to protect our environment, public health, human rights and democracy. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Bobby 1-413-256-6434

Bueno Y Sano is hiring for positions for fall semester please apply in person Call for directions 253-4000

Hardworking individuals living around 93/95 belt South of I-90 for fulltime painter positions. Challenging job requires independence, own car. $10-$12 base rate. Call Will @ 617-699-8970

EMPLOYMENT

Lowell Area Driven Leader needed to be crew chief for one of the state's largest exterior house painting companies. Must be hard-working, Independent & have own car. Exp. preferred, but not necessary. Call Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Summer Office Help Needed! Amherst Leisure Services is looking for a summer registration clerk to begin mid to late may. Duties include: customer service, accepting registrations and payments for numerous programs, data entry, answering phones, filing, and other clerical duties in a busy recreation department. Preferred hours are M-F 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m., but may be flexible. Pay range is $7.44-8.61/hr. depending upon experience. Apply at: Town of Amherst Leisure Services, 70 Boltwood Walk, Bangs Community Center, Amherst, MA 01002. Resumes and letters of inquiry may also be sent to: desmarais@town.amherst.ma.us. For further information, call Pat t 413-256-4065.

EMPLOYMENT

Greenfield Secure Self-Storage seeks student P/T to rent our self storage units on campus 413-775-0074

Painters Wanted in Amherst Area. No Experience Necessary Call Alison@413-627-9043

LIFEGUARD Brandywine Apts. needs a certified lifeguard. Call or stop by. 549-0000

Painters Wanted in Danvers area want a challenging Job outdoors w/good $$$? Seeking driven, Hardworking Individual w/own car to be a painting crew member. No exp. necessary Call: Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413)584-4746

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

EMPLOYMENT

Students wanted for a summer painting job. $400 - $600/ week. Experience not needed but a plus. All hired will go through a paid training program. Call 888-277-9787 or go to COLLEGE-PRO.COM. Work with friends.

FOR SALE

Microfridge for sale Terrific Condition for $60.00 Asking $300.00 or best offer Call 546-1377.

FURNITURE FOR SALE

Furniture and Two Cars for Sale Call for details (413) 536-7933

Graduating in May everything must go Call 549-0069

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom house. 2 1/2 miles. On bus line. Washer/dryer Home 253-3670 leave a messagae

Hadley 5 Bedroom Plus home, 2 Baths w/ laundry hookup. Large yard, minutes from UMass. 549-4270

HOUSE FOR RENT

3 Bedrooms 2 baths on bus line Amherst 413-323-6453

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

LOST

$20 reward! Cell phone lost in/near Bartlett - small Siemens w/orange buttons 413-247-5898.

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female roommate wanted to share 2-bd apt in Sunderland. $418/mo. Includes heat, hot water, and cable. Available 6/1 or earlier. Call Lauren @ 862-604-6068.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 549-9992

SERVICES

Avoid Puffton waiting list 3bed 2bath Puffton upgraded $1183/mo June 1-August 31 '04 or take our lease to '05 549-5909

SUMMER SUBLET

1 bedroom in Puffton for Sublet starting June 1st Call Stacey at 695-2944 $750 negotiable possible Fall option.

2 Lg Bdrm apt Main St on bus route Minutes from UMass Summer with Fall option 256-1146

1 Bdrm Apt. in Cliffside Call 665-1218

Live downtown this summer! Large 4BR 2-floor apt next to Amherst HS. Washer & dryer included. 5 min. to bus stop & town ONLY $362.50 per room + utilities. Available 6/1 thru 8/15. Contact Rob: agraff@student.umass.edu/978-808-7322

2 bedrooms, fully furnished apartment, 1 full bath. Available June 1st- September 1st. Call Rachel Szyman @ 781-264-1512

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS MONDAY

MONDAY, MAY 10, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Going out on top

Minutemen down No. 11 Rutgers on Senior Day

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

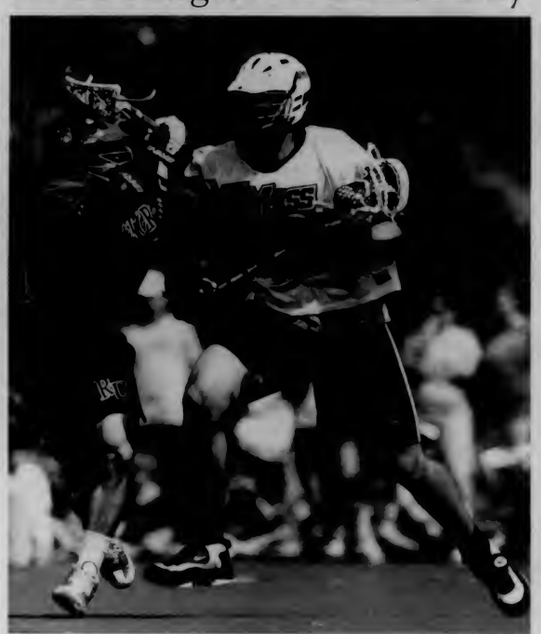
There are no trophies given out for 44 victories; no national recognition, no record book entries outside of the school's media guide. Forty-four victories probably can't help the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team overcome an average season and get into the NCAA Tournament either. But for three hours under a blue sky at the field named for the program's ultimate legend, 44 was as nice a number as you could get.

UMass	9
Rutgers	6

That's because the seven seniors on the UMass squad racked up their 44th — and likely final — victory Saturday, with a 9-6 defeat of No. 11 Rutgers. Forty-four wins in four seasons is an accomplishment in itself, certainly, but the subtext of the week, which was observed by assistant coach Chris Gabrielli, makes it all the more special for the senior seven, whose collegiate careers are likely over with the Minutemen's very slim chances of being selected for the NCAA Tournament field today (ESPNEWS, 3:40 p.m.)

On Wednesday, the team commemorated the fifth anniversary of goalie Eric Sopracasa's death, caused by a freak occurrence where a shot hit Sopracasa in the chest. The team has retired Sopracasa's number, 43, and the players' helmets all bear a black sticker with the number in white. Gabrielli reminded the seniors during practice last week, "43 is not your number, 44 is your number."

Sophomore Sean Morris ensured that the seniors would get their number, when he drove towards the right sideline 2:08 into the fourth quarter, and fired a shot across his body that beat Rutgers goaltender Greg Havalchak to give the Minutemen a 7-5 lead. The Scarlet Knights (8-5, 1-2 Eastern College Athletic Conference put one more goal on the board, but UMass (7-7, 2-1 ECAC), which never trailed in the contest, held on with the help of junior Gene Tundo and senior Neil Lundburg, who each scored in the final period.



"It's great for the seniors, especially, to get a win in their last game on Garber Field, that's something they'll remember forever," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

While Lundburg's 18th goal of the season gave the Minutemen a 9-5 lead, it was his work in the waning minutes that drew the loudest ovation. After Delby Powless scored to cut the Minutemen's lead to three, Lundburg held off three Scarlet Knight defenders behind Havalchak's net, and drew three penalties in the process. It was an appropriate ending to the career of the senior, who has played the stalwart role on a number of occasions when the Minutemen have held a late lead.

"I can't explain it in words," Lundburg said. "It was everything I wanted it to be and more. I can't explain how happy I am that we were able to pull it all together in this game.

"Forty-four is my number.

See MEN'S LAX on page 6

SCOTT LEONHARDT/COLLEGIAN

Senior Neil Lundberg scored a pair of goals in his final game in UMass maroon and white.

UMass grabs pair of wins from Temple

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

It looks like the Massachusetts baseball team has quite the dynamic duo.

Starting pitchers Eric Chown and Matt Torra shut down the visiting Temple Owls on Saturday, 4-2 and 6-1, respectively. Both hurlers threw complete games for UMass, highlighted by a near no-hitter by Torra.

Temple	8
UMass	2

The Minutemen (16-22, 8-10 Atlantic 10) would not have the same pitcher's clinic yesterday as Keith Doherty and the UMass bullpen let up eight runs en route to an 8-2 loss.

UMass	4
Temple	2

The Owls (19-22, 7-11 A-10) wasted no time on Doherty, scoring four runs in the first inning, all with two outs. Mike Weckenham, who was walked by Doherty, stole second and was knocked in by outfielder Al Roach.

UMass	6
Temple	1

After a wild pitch advanced Roach, Pete Colon drove him in with a single. John Quigley drove in the final two runs with his fourth home run on the season.

Doherty showed signs of brilliance after the first inning, which included arguably the play of the game in the top of the fourth inning.

With one out, Quigley in scoring position and Andrew Clemens on second, Doherty looked to have himself in another jam. On the ensuing at bat, Mike Brown tried to knock in a run on a sacrifice bunt. Doherty dove and caught the ball, turned and threw out Quigley who anticipated the bunt to fall.

Temple's starting pitcher Chris Kurtz held the Minutemen at bay for most of the game. Kurtz threw for a complete game, giving up two runs while scattering nine hits.

The only offense from the Minutemen came in the second and third innings. In the second, Derek Duerpo hit a sacrifice fly scoring Curt Szado. Szado would be responsible for the other run of the game, knocking in Matt Reynolds.

The game was kept within the grasps of UMass until Scott Ratliff and Devin Barnett came in and gave up three runs in the top of the seventh. Neither Ratliff nor Barnett could set aside one batter as they walked two apiece, back-to-back.

On Saturday, it was a much different story.

Torra pitched a no-hitter in the second game until the top of the seventh when Temple right fielder Pete Colon launched a home run with one out. Since it was a doubleheader, the seventh inning was the final inning of the game.

The righty had eight strikeouts on the afternoon and retired 14 of the last 15 batters, aside from Colon's home run. With the win Torra advances to 5-3 on the season.

Torra would get more than enough support from the UMass offense, who scored four runs in the first inning.

Cullan Maumus got the game started with a double to right field. Sophomore catcher Frank Curreri was walked which was followed up by Reynolds, who loaded the bases on an error.

Szado singled to right to notch the first run of the game. After Jason Twomley knocked a RBI ground out, Freshman Michael Weiner hit the big ball of the inning, driving in two runs off of a double to left-center.

Chown came out and showed the Owls why he's UMass' ace.

Over seven innings Chown gave up two runs (both in the second inning) on four hits, while striking out seven. Chown also had no walks on the outing en route to his fifth win on the season, putting him at 5-4.

Maumus sparked the offense for the Minutemen, going two-for-two with two runs and an RBI. Curreri had the eventual game-winning run in the bottom of the second.

With the final two A-10 series against St. Bonaventure and Richmond on tap, the Minutemen are hanging on the outskirts of playoff contention. After Sunday's loss to the Owls, UMass is 8-10 in conference and is vying for the sixth and final playoff spot.

Duquesne is currently one game ahead after splitting a double-header with LaSalle. The Dukes are now 9-9 in conference play.

Minutewomen extend home win streak to 72

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Once the ball gets rolling for the Massachusetts softball team, it's pretty hard to stop.

Such was the case yesterday, as the Minutewomen (32-13, 11-1 Atlantic 10) erased a one-run deficit with eight unanswered scores in an 8-1 downing of the Boston College Eagles (33-23).

UMass	8
Boston College	1

With the win, the Minutewomen extend the nation's longest home winning streak to 72.

Heading into Wednesday's A-10 Tournament, the Maroon and White will have some momentum on their side, having concluded the regular season by winning its last eight games.

"A lot of people played, a lot of people did a lot of different things for us to contribute to [the win]," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "It conditions us well for the post-season, it's good for what we got to do. I just think games like this are really, really important in terms of setting the tone for the post-season.

"Our players are very confident. I think they know what they got, they know what they can do, and they trust it, and I think that's a really good place for an athlete to be."

The Minutewomen encountered some trouble early in the first inning, as two walks and an error allowed one run to score for the Eagles in the first frame.

Kelli Arnold quickly settled down after that, and the next six innings belonged to UMass. The Maroon and White came through in the bottom of the third to erase the deficit. Aisha Franke led off with a bunt down the third base line, and beat out the tag at first. After a Hilary Puglia bunt advanced Franke to second, Denise Denis came in to pinch hit. Denis immediately doubled off the left-center-field fence, bringing home Franke to make it 1-1.

KJ Kelley brought Denis home in the next at bat with a double of her own, followed by yet another double, this time Pam Sulick driving in pinch-runner Michea Holness to round out the scoring in the third.

After being named Player of the Year by the New

See SOFTBALL on page 6

COURTESY KAREN WINGER

Candice Molinari and the Minutewomen concluded the regular season with a 32-13 record.

UM falls to Temple in A-10 semis

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

The gig is up.

Three timely wins helped catapult the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (6-10, 4-4 A-10) into the Atlantic 10 semi-finals, before it fell to four-time defending A-10 Champion Temple 13-9 Friday in Corning, N.Y.

Temple	13
UMass	9

The Minutewomen had faced must-win situations since April 23, but earned a postseason bid by going 3-0 against A-10 opponents during that stretch.

The Owls (11-7) played in the finals Saturday, and defeated top-seeded Duquesne (14-4), 12-11 in overtime. Temple freshman Allison Frengs scored five goals in the title game, including the game-winner 2:27 into the first OT.

In the semifinals, UMass held Frengs to a hat-trick but could do little to contain Tiffany Pulaski, who notched a game-high six points on five goals and one assist. Pulaski split her weekend's 10 goals evenly between UMass and Duquesne, a feat which earned the Duke senior the 2004 A-10 Championship Most Outstanding Player award.

Due to stellar performances on defense and a combined seven ground balls, Massachusetts junior defender Kristin St. Hilaire and sophomore midfielder Jackie Nesbitt earned a spot on the 2004 Atlantic 10 All-Championship Team. St. Hilaire also earned the honor of A-10 Defensive Player of the Year and a spot on the 2004 All-Conference team, where she was joined by teammates Tracey Drown and Hope Zelinger.

Zelinger recorded an assist during the semi-finals but failed to tally a goal. Despite a scoreless postseason, Zelinger moved up to third all-time at UMass in single season goals, with 45 during her senior campaign. Drown led Massachusetts with three goals on two free position scores against Temple, but could not lead the Minutewomen to victory, as she had during the Maroon and White unbeaten streak that ended the regular season. During the three-game span Drown tallied a team-high 15 goals.

The Minutewomen looked solid to start Friday's game, jumping out to an early 2-0 lead in the first three minutes, thanks to goals from Emma Butcher and Brianna Bubeck. Butcher found the cage after receiving a pass from Lindsay Cassell, and Bubeck scored on a free position shot. The lead was short lived, because Pulaski would score the next three goals.

Cassell narrowed the gap to one with an unassisted tally at 12:01, before Corey Leader of Temple recorded the first of her four goals at 8:35. The next three scores would come from Massachusetts, as Drown netted a pair of free position attempts turned goals, and Butcher capitalized on a pass from Kerri Connerty.

Butcher doubled her career goals on Friday, as the senior goalkeeper-turned-attacker received substantial playing time for the second consecutive game. Butcher's goal proved to be the last of the half, as the teams engaged in a three-minute stalemate that locked the score at 6-5 in favor of UMass.

During the second frame Temple opened the floodgates, outscoring Massachusetts 8-3 to seal the victory. Maura McGarrity tacked on a point to the halftime lead to give UMass a 7-5 advantage, but the Owls went on a six-goal tear that gave Temple an insurmountable 11-7 lead. During the Temple run, Leader and Frengs each netted pairs of scores. UMass recorded two more goals, one from Drown and one from Connerty, but that was all the Maroon and White could muster, as it fell to Temple for the second time this season.

Redshirt freshman Lauren McCarthy made seven saves on 31 shots in the Massachusetts goal, while her counterpart, Megan McLouth, recorded 15 saves on 33 shots between the pipes for Temple.

The loss drops UMass to 3-22-1 all-time against Temple.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MAY 10, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Going out on top

Minutemen down No. 11 Rutgers on Senior Day

By Andrew Merritt
Collegian Staff

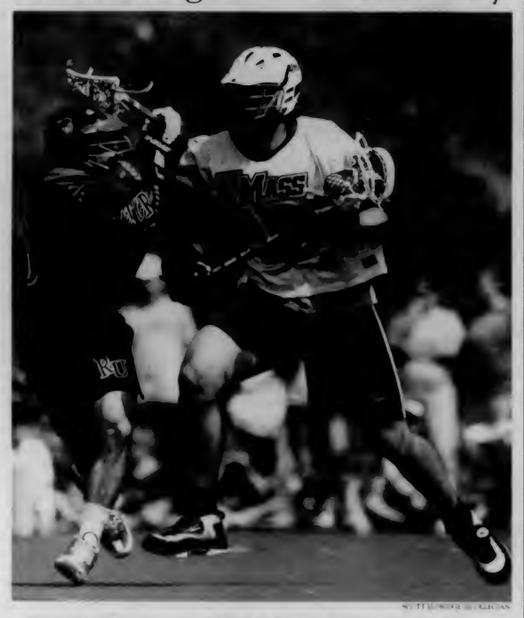
There are no trophies given out for 44 victories; no national recognition, no record book entries outside of the school's media guide. Forty-four victories probably can't help the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team get over the hump and come a n average season and get into the NCAA Tournament either. But for three hours under a blue sky at the field named for the program's ultimate legend, 44 was as nice a number as you could get.

UMass	9
Rutgers	6

That's because the seven seniors on the UMass squad racked up their 44th — and likely final — victory Saturday, with a 9-6 defeat of No. 11 Rutgers. Forty-four wins in four seasons is an accomplishment in itself, certainly, but the subtext of the week, which was observed by assistant coach Chris Gabrielli, makes it all the more special for the senior seven, whose collegiate careers are likely over with the Minutemen's very slim chances of being selected for the NCAA Tournament field today (ESPNEWS, 3:40 p.m.)

On Wednesday, the team commemorated the fifth anniversary of goalie Eric Sopracasa's death, caused by a freak occurrence where a shot hit Sopracasa in the chest. The team has retired Sopracasa's number, 43, and the players' helmets all bear a black sticker with the number in white. Gabrielli reminded the seniors during practice last week, "43 is not your number, 44 is your number."

Sophomore Sean Morris ensured that the seniors would get their number, when he drove towards the right sideline 2:08 into the fourth quarter, and fired a shot across his body that beat Rutgers goaltender Greg Havalchak to give the Minutemen a 7-5 lead. The Scarlet Knights (8-5, 1-2 Eastern College Athletic Conference put one more goal on the board, but UMass (7-7, 2-1 ECAC), which never trailed in the contest, held on with the help of junior Gene Tundo and senior Neil Lundburg, who each scored in the final period.



"It's great for the seniors, especially, to get a win in their last game on Garber Field, that's something they'll remember forever," UMass coach Greg Cannella said.

While Lundburg's 18th goal of the season gave the Minutemen a 9-5 lead, it was his work in the waning minutes that drew the loudest ovation. After Delby Powless scored to cut the Minutemen's lead to three, Lundburg held off three Scarlet Knight defenders behind Havalchak's net, and drew three penalties in the process. It was an appropriate ending to the career of the senior, who has played the stalwart role on a number of occasions when the Minutemen have held a late lead.

"I can't explain it in words," Lundburg said. "It was everything I wanted it to be and more. I can't explain how happy I am that we were able to pull it all together in this game.

"Forty-four is my number.

See MEN'S LAX on page 6

Senior Neil Lundberg scored a pair of goals in his final game in UMass maroon and white.

UM falls to Temple in A-10 semis

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

The gig is up.

Three timely wins helped catapult the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (6-10, 4-4 A-10) into the Atlantic 10 semi-finals, before it fell to four-time defending A-10 Champion Temple 13-9 Friday in Corning, N.Y.

Temple	13
UMass	9

The Minutewomen had faced must-win situations since April 23, but earned a postseason bid by going 3-0 against A-10 opponents during that stretch.

The Owls (11-7) played in the finals Saturday, and defeated top-seeded Duquesne (14-4), 12-11 in overtime. Temple freshman Allison Frengs scored five goals in the title game, including the game-winner 2:27 into the first OT.

In the semifinals, UMass held Frengs to a hat-trick but could do little to contain Tiffany Pulaski, who notched a game-high six points on five goals and one assist. Pulaski split her weekend's 10 goals evenly between UMass and Duquesne, a feat which earned the Duke senior the 2004 A-10 Championship Most Outstanding Player award.

Due to stellar performances on defense and a combined seven ground balls, Massachusetts junior defender Kristin St. Hilaire and sophomore midfielder Jackie Nesbitt earned a spot on the 2004 Atlantic 10 All-Championship Team. St. Hilaire also earned the honor of A-10 Defensive Player of the Year and a spot on the 2004 All-Conference team, where she was joined by teammates Tracey Drown and Hope Zelinger.

Zelinger recorded an assist during the semi-finals but failed to tally a goal. Despite a scoreless postseason, Zelinger moved up to third all-time at UMass in single season goals, with 45 during her senior campaign. Drown led Massachusetts with three goals on two free position scores against Temple, but could not lead the Minutewomen to victory, as she had during the Maroon and White unbeaten streak that ended the regular season. During the three-game span Drown tallied a team-high 15 goals.

The Minutewomen looked solid to start Friday's game, jumping out to an early 2-0 lead in the first three minutes, thanks to goals from Emma Butcher and Brianna Bubeck. Butcher found the cage after receiving a pass from Lindsay Cassell, and Bubeck scored on a free position shot. The lead was short lived, because Pulaski would score the next three goals.

Cassell narrowed the gap to one with an unassisted tally at 12:01, before Corey Leader of Temple recorded the first of her four goals at 8:35. The next three scores would come from Massachusetts, as Drown netted a pair of free position attempts turned goals, and Butcher capitalized on a pass from Kerri Connerty.

Butcher doubled her career goals on Friday, as the senior goalkeeper-turned-attacker received substantial playing time for the second consecutive game. Butcher's goal proved to be the last of the half, as the teams engaged in a three-minute stalemate that locked the score at 6-5 in favor of UMass.

During the second frame Temple opened the floodgates, outscoring Massachusetts 8-3 to seal the victory. Maura McGarrity tacked on a point to the halftime lead to give UMass a 7-5 advantage, but the Owls went on a six-goal tear that gave Temple an insurmountable 11-7 lead. During the Temple run, Leader and Frengs each netted pairs of scores. UMass recorded two more goals, one from Drown and one from Connerty, but that was all the Maroon and White could muster, as it fell to Temple for the second time this season.

Redshirt freshman Lauren McCarthy made seven saves on 31 shots in the Massachusetts goal, while her counterpart, Megan McLouth, recorded 15 saves on 33 shots between the pipes for Temple.

The loss drops UMass to 3-22-1 all-time against Temple.

UMass grabs pair of wins from Temple

By Bob McGovern
Collegian Staff

It looks like the Massachusetts baseball team has quite the dynamic duo.

Starting pitchers Eric Chown and Matt Torra shut down the visiting Temple Owls on Saturday, 4-2 and 6-1, respectively. Both hurlers threw complete games for UMass, highlighted by a near no-hitter by Torra.

The Minutemen (16-22, 8-10 Atlantic 10) would not have the same pitcher's clinic yesterday as Keith Doherty and the UMass bullpen let up eight runs en route to an 8-2 loss.

Temple	8
UMass	2

The Owls (19-22, 7-11 A-10) wasted no time on Doherty, scoring four runs in the first inning, all with two outs. Mike Weckenham, who was walked by Doherty, stole second and was knocked in by outfielder Al Roach.

UMass	4
Temple	2

After a wild pitch advanced Roach, Pete Colon drove him in with a single; John Quigley drove in the final two runs with his fourth home run on the season.

Doherty showed signs of brilliance after the first inning, which included arguably the play of the game in the top of the fourth inning.

With one out, Quigley in scoring position and Andrew Clemens on second, Doherty looked to have himself in another jam. On the ensuing at bat, Mike Brown tried to knock in a run on a sacrifice bunt. Doherty dove and caught the ball, turned and threw out Quigley who anticipated the bunt to fall.

Temple's starting pitcher Chris Kurtz held the Minutemen at bay for most of the game. Kurtz threw for a complete game, giving up two runs while scattering nine hits.

The only offense from the Minutemen came in the second and third innings. In the second, Derek Duerpo hit a sacrifice fly scoring Curt Szado. Szado would be responsible for the other run of the game, knocking in Matt Reynolds.

The game was kept within the grasps of UMass until Scott Ratliff and Devin Barnett came in and gave up three runs in the top of the seventh. Neither Ratliff nor Barnett could set aside one batter as they walked two apiece, back-to-back.

On Saturday, it was a much different story.

Torra pitched a no-hitter in the second game until the top of the seventh when Temple right fielder Pete Colon launched a home run with one out. Since it was a doubleheader, the seventh inning was the final inning of the game.

The righty had eight strikeouts on the afternoon and retired 14 of the last 15 batters, aside from Colon's home run. With the win Torra advances to 5-3 on the season.

Torra would get more than enough support from the UMass offense, who scored four runs in the first inning.

Cullan Maumus got the game started with a double to right field. Sophomore catcher Frank Curreri was walked which was followed up by Reynolds, who loaded the bases on an error.

Szado singled to right to notch the first run of the game. After Jason Twomley knocked a RBI ground out, Freshman Michael Weiner hit the big ball of the inning, driving in two runs off of a double to left-center.

Chown came out and showed the Owls why he's UMass' ace.

Over seven innings Chown gave up two runs (both in the second inning) on four hits, while striking out seven. Chown also had no walks on the outing en route to his fifth win on the season, putting him at 5-4.

Maumus sparked the offense for the Minutemen, going two-for-two with two runs and an RBI. Curreri had the eventual game-winning run in the bottom of the second.

With the final two A-10 series against St. Bonaventure and Richmond on tap, the Minutemen are hanging on the outskirts of playoff contention. After Sunday's loss to the Owls, UMass is 8-10 in conference and is vying for the sixth and final playoff spot.

Duquesne is currently one game ahead after splitting a double-header with LaSalle. The Dukes are now 9-9 in conference play.

Minutewomen extend home win streak to 72

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Once the ball gets rolling for the Massachusetts softball team, it's pretty hard to stop.

Such was the case yesterday, as the Minutewomen (32-13, 11-1 Atlantic 10) erased a one-run deficit with eight unanswered scores in an 8-1 downing of the Boston College Eagles (33-23).

UMass	8
Boston College	1

With the win, the Minutewomen extend the nation's longest home winning streak to 72. Heading into Wednesday's A-10 Tournament, the Maroon and White will have some momentum on their side, having concluded the regular season by winning its last eight games.

"A lot of people played, a lot of people did a lot of different things for us to contribute to [the win]," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "It conditions us well for the post-season, it's good for what we got to do. I just think games like this are really, really important in terms of setting the tone for the post-season.

"Our players are very confident. I think they know what they got, they know what they can do, and they trust it, and I think that's a really good place for an athlete to be."

The Minutewomen encountered some trouble early in the first inning, as two walks and an error allowed one run to score for the Eagles in the first frame.

Kelli Arnold quickly settled down after that, and the next six innings belonged to UMass. The Maroon and White came through in the bottom of the third to erase the deficit. Aisha Franke led off with a bunt down the third base line, and beat out the tag at first. After a Hilary Puglia bunt advanced Franke to second, Denise Denis came in to pinch hit. Denis immediately doubled off the left-center-field fence, bringing home Franke to make it 1-1.

Kl Kelley brought Denis home in the next at bat with a double of her own, followed by yet another double, this time Pam Sulick driving in pinch-runner Michea Holness to round out the scoring in the third.

After being named Player of the Year by the New

See SOFTBALL on page 6

Candice Molinari and the Minutewomen concluded the regular season with a 32-13 record.

INTENTIONAL DUPE

Duo Dead Prez return with sophomore album
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 6

Patriots visit White House for second time
SPORTS, PAGE 12

The Daily Collegian

TUESDAY, MAY 11, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 137

University payphones being fazed out

Number of payphones dropping nationwide

By Curtis Killian
Collegian Correspondent

Public payphones across the University of Massachusetts campus are disappearing, being disconnected or removed due to lack of use, reflecting a national trend.

The number of Verizon payphones listed on the UMass campus has dropped by two-thirds, from 85 in October 2002 to 26 as of last week, according to Debbie Sampson, billing and carrier analyst for UMass Telecommunications.

"It seems like the payphones were removed from all of the residence halls except Knowlton and from other locations that had multiple phones," Sampson said. "The ones remaining are in locations where there would be higher pedestrian traffic such as the library, dining commons, infirmary, Mullins Center and a few buildings across campus."

Some telephones have simply been disconnected, such as one in front of Flint Laboratory. Many have been removed all together, leaving empty shells. At one time, outside the Hatch dining hall in the Student Union, there were nine payphones in service. At that location today, there are only three phones that work.

The removal of payphones from campus is "totally Verizon's decision," according to Sampson. Payphone service providers are disconnecting and removing payphones nationwide because many of them no longer produce enough revenue.

See PHONES on page 2

A disconnected payphone in the Fine Arts Center. The number of Verizon payphones listed on the UMass campus has dropped by two-thirds since October 2002.

Sasser creator launched less damaging worm

By Geir Moulson
Associated Press

BERRLIN (AP) — An 18-year-old German who confessed to creating the "Sasser" computer worm launched a new version meant to limit the damage just before his arrest last week, investigators said Monday.

Authorities who have questioned Sven Jaschan got the impression his motive was to gain fame as a programmer, prosecutor Detlev Dyballa said.

Dyballa labeled as speculation news reports that Jaschan may have created the disruptive program to drum up business for his mother's computer store, PC-Help, in the small town of Waffensen.

"One can never rule out anything, but there are no facts to suggest it," he told The Associated Press by telephone.

Jaschan was arrested Friday at his mother's house, where police said agents found him sitting at his computer. Investigators say the machine contained the worm's source code. Earlier Friday, investigators said, Jaschan unleashed the new "Sasser e" — a failed attempt to limit the damage caused by the four previous versions.

Frank Federau, a spokesman for the state criminal office in Hanover, said the worm was "a slightly modified form" of the program that raced around the world over the past week, exploiting a flaw in Microsoft's Windows operating system.

"He did it with good intentions, but it had exactly the same damaging effects," said Sascha Hanke, a Microsoft data protection official in Germany.

Like the other versions, the new variant — which notified users of a Microsoft patch against Sasser — caused computers to crash and reboot.

"The cause was erroneous programming of the virus," Hanke said. Police have said Jaschan was responsible for all versions of Sasser as well as the "Netsky" virus.

He is being investigated on suspicion of computer sabotage, which carries a maximum sentence of five years in prison. He was released pending charges after questioning last Friday, where he admitted creating Sasser, police said.

A trial could begin at the end of June, Dyballa said.

Investigators were still examining the contents of Jaschan's confiscated computer Monday.

"This will take quite a long time," criminal office spokesman Detlef Ehrike said. Officials are working to prepare hundreds of pages' worth of data for a possible court case, he said.

The teenager has told officials his original intention was to create a virus, "Netsky A," that would combat the "Mydoom" and "Bagle" viruses, removing them from infected computers. That led him to develop the Netsky virus further — and after modifying it created Sasser.

"He's not stupid — he's a really good programmer," Dyballa said. "But I don't know whether he was aware of the scale" of the damage.

UMass professor receives White House grant

By Michelle Rivera
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts assistant professor was awarded a five-year, $500,000 grant under the Presidential Early Career Award for Scientists and Engineers program run by the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy.

Gregory N. Tew, an assistant professor in the polymer science and engineering department, is the first UMass faculty member to be granted the Presidential Award. The annual award is given to the highest-ranking young investigator proposals across eight funding agencies. Tew is one of 57 recognized scholars in the most recent round of PECASE grants.

"Receiving this award is a huge honor," said Tew. "It is great for the University and I appreciate all the strong support from my students, colleagues, department, and college."

"This award is the result of hard work and dedication from a lot of people. It will enable us to study the directed self-assembly of metal-containing polymers leading to multi-functional materials," Tew said.

Former President Bill Clinton designed the Presidential Awards in 1996 as the highest honor bestowed by the U.S. government in support of the extraordinary achievements of young professionals at the outset of their independent research careers.

UMass Chancellor John V. Lombardi was delighted to learn of the news of Tew's accomplishment.

"We celebrate his achievements and look forward to his continued success," Lombardi said.

According to the press release, Tew says he will use the funding to study super molecular polymer science. This is a field where scientists create large molecules called polymers that contain specific interactions used to assemble these molecules into new structures unattainable by conventional scientific methods. For example, Tew says it's possible to use polymers to make membranes that filter out specific elements and neutralize them at the same time. Another use would be to create polymers that are self-healing, meaning that after they are cracked or broken, they would have the ability to undo much of the damage.

Tew was nominated for the award by the Department of Defense Army Research Office Young Investigators program. The award was given on May 4 at a White House ceremony in Washington, D.C. The ceremony at the White House was presided over by John H. Marburger III, Science Advisor to the President and Director of the White House Office of Science and Technology Policy.

Tew's many interests in his field include molecular self-organization, liquid crystals, organic-inorganic hybrid materials, protein engineering, biomaterials and well-defined macromolecular architectures.

Tew currently leads a research group on the UMass campus called the 'Tew Research Group,' a group that uses the methods of synthetic organic chemistry to build chemically rich macromolecules that address important questions in chemistry, materials science, and biology.

Other honors and achievements Tew has earned during his academic and professional career include the Office of Naval Research Young Investigator Award, being the founder of PolyMedix, Inc. a cutting edge biomimetics design company, being member of the NIH-UMass Chemistry-Biology Interfaces Executive Committee, and receiving the American Chemical Society-Division of Organic Chemistry Graduate Fellowship among many others.

Professor Gregory N. Tew

Tew earned his Bachelor of Science degree in chemistry from North Carolina State University in 1995, and later earned his doctorate in materials chemistry from the University of Illinois-Urbana in 2000. He spent one year as a postdoctoral fellow at the University of Pennsylvania Medical School biochemistry and biophysics department. In September of 2001, Tew subsequently joined the UMass department of polymer science and engineering.

Government reopens investigation into 1955 murder of black teen

This undated family handout photograph shows Mamie Till Mobley and her son, Emmitt Till, whose lynching in 1955 became a catalyst for the civil rights movement.

By Curt Anderson
Associated Press

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Department is reopening the murder investigation of Emmitt Till, a black Chicago teenager killed during a 1955 visit to Mississippi apparently because he whistled at a white man's wife.

The murder was an early spark for the civil rights movement. The only two people ever charged in the case, the husband of the woman Till purportedly whistled at and his half brother, were acquitted by an all-white jury, although they later admitted to the killing in a magazine interview. Both are dead.

R. Alexander Acosta, the assistant attorney general for civil rights, said recent documentary films about the case and other new information indicate the two had accomplices who may still be alive and

See TILL on page 4

Family of a Bulger victim passes lawsuit through appeals court

By Ken Maguire
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — A federal appeals court ruled Monday that a lawsuit claiming the FBI's corrupt relationship with mob informants James "Whitey" Bulger and Stephen "The Rifleman" Flemmi contributed to the death of a Quincy man can go forward.

Kenneth Kaiser, special agent in charge of the Boston FBI office, faces reporters Friday, in Boston.

The family of John McIntyre sued the federal government in May 2000, saying the FBI was responsible for his death because it gave the two gangsters free rein to commit crimes while they were also federal informants.

McIntyre disappeared in 1984 after he gave information about Bulger's Winter Hill Gang to the FBI. His body was found in a shallow grave in January 2000 after former Bulger associate Kevin Weeks led investigators to the site.

The case — along with another lawsuit filed by the family of alleged Winter Hill Gang victim Roger Wheeler — was dismissed last year by a federal judge who said the families waited too long to file their lawsuits.

The 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals overturned the dismissal Monday.

"It takes a great step in the direction of fairness and accountability," said McIntyre family attorney Jeffrey Denner.

In the same ruling, the three-judge panel upheld the lower court's dismissal of the Wheeler lawsuit. The ruling hinges on a federal law that requires claims against the government to be filed within two years of the plaintiff's injury, or two years after they should have known they were injured.

The McIntyres filed their lawsuit on May 25, 2000. Lawyers for the U.S. Department of Justice argued that the family should have known by May 1998 that FBI agents played a role in McIntyre's death because of widespread publicity at the time about the FBI's cozy relationship with Bulger and Flemmi.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Jennifer Eastwood
Managing Editor Dan Lamothe
Business Manager Peter Foundas
Production Manager Scott Pihl
Night Supervisor Nick Markantonatos
Advertising Manager Sean Costello
Editorial Production Shannon Farrington
Arts & Living Editor Glen Straub
Clubs Editor Molly Eggleston
Editorial Editor Matthew Reid
Features Editor S. J. Port
News Editor Ferron Saltsiker
Photo Editor Scott Eldridge II
Sports Editor Andrew Merritt
Circulation Manager Kristen Weiss
Classified Advertising Marty Pappas
Distribution Manager Mark Lagasse
Finance Manager Greg Stamm
Human Resources Renee Brand
Assistant Distribution Linda Wallack
Assistant Advertising David Bor
Assistant Business Jachynn Sorenson
Assistant Distribution Josh Kuggins
Assistant Finance Richard Pacheco
Advertising Production Rachael Bruno
Graphics Advisor Charlie Huggins
Asst. Arts & Living Meghan Healy
Asst. Arts & Living Cameron J. Woods
Assistant Editorial Paige Cram
Assistant News Erika Lovley
Assistant News Morris Singer
Assistant Photo Amelia P. Lincoln
Assistant Sports Mike Marzelli
Assistant Sports Robert McGovern

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned and operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life. It was the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1918 and the Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been incorporated since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call 413.545.3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 pm.

Work For The Collegian

Here's the scoop on ice cream: It will cost more

By J.M. Hirsch
Associated Press

Already staggering from sticker shock at the gas pump, consumers may suffer "licker shock" at the ice cream stand this summer when they see some of the industry's biggest price hikes ever.

Blame it on bad timing. A combination of political unrest and natural disasters overseas, and fluctuations in the dairy industry in this country has left ice cream manufacturers grappling with higher prices for key ingredients including milk, vanilla and cocoa.

"I have been in this industry for nearly 20 years and I have never seen all of these things come together at one time," said Lynda Utterback, executive director of the National Ice Cream Retailers Association.

Although large manufacturers can absorb some of the higher production costs, consumers can still expect to pay more for everything from pints in the grocery store to cones at the stand and push-pops off the truck.

How much more? Estimates vary from 6 percent to as much as 20 percent or more, depending on region and product.

A pint of Ben & Jerry's is going up 8 percent, the most in the company's 26 years. Klondike bars will cost 10 cents more per multipack, according to manufacturer Good Humor-Breyers Ice Cream.

The rising prices also are accelerating a recent trend — companies shrinking packages but keeping prices the same in what effectively is a net price increase. In January, Wilbraham-based Friendly's rolled out its 56-ounce half-gallon tub — down from the standard 64 ounces — and this month increased its retail prices by 5 percent.

Consumers irritated by the increase aren't likely to find much relief, said Danielle Tirrell, manager of Arnie's Place ice cream stand in Concord, N.H., where the price of a regular cone is up 20 cents from last year to $2.35 and may go higher.

"Every once in a while I hear someone say, 'Wow, that's expensive,'" she said. "I've had one guy say 'Your prices are up over last year. I'm going to go someplace else.' Well, you can go someplace else, but their prices will be up, too."

LARRY CROWE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Debbie Carpenter gives her son Preston, 4, a taste of her ice cream at Arnie's Place in Concord, N.H.

Increased cell phone use leads to elimination of several campus payphones

PHONES from page 1

In October 2002 UMass received a monthly commission from Verizon of $8.37 on revenue of $654.78, Sampson said. "But we no longer receive any commission from Verizon. I suspect it is because the revenue is so low."

All across the nation, payphone kiosks are becoming barren markers of a time when people stood in line waiting for the next available phone, ready to pump quarters into its shiny slot. In 1999, there were 2.1 million payphones nationwide, according to the National Payphone Clearinghouse. In March 2003, the number plummeted to 1.5 million.

"Once, payphones were strategically placed in public places by phone companies. In the 1990s, many payphones became private property of other companies or individuals," said UMass Communication Professor Jarice Hanson, whose current research includes focuses on the uses of interactive technologies and technology policy. "Without a doubt, the costs of maintenance and the growing popularity of cell phones contributed to the demise of the public payphone."

Hanson called the growth of cellular telephone popularity the "number one" contributor to the payphone's demise. Particularly on college campuses, students depend heavily on the wireless devices for their intransit communication needs.

Asked why he doesn't use on-campus payphones, Cesar Manuel Casanova Traleira, a junior mechanical engineering major, simply replied, "I have a cell phone."

In fact, one would be hard-pressed to find a student at random who doesn't use a cell phone, as its popularity grows among those who are of college age. All of the cell phone owners interviewed for this article agreed that the main reason they didn't use the campus payphones was because they own cell phones.

One of the seemingly few students left who doesn't own a cell phone, senior STEPEC major Robert Chamberlain said he is annoyed by both the rise of the cell phone and the downfall of the payphone.

"A few weeks ago I was in town and I needed to call a friend of mine, and I walked around for about 15 minutes before I found one," he said.

The American Public Communications Council, Inc., the trade association for the payphone industry, publicly denounced the threat of wireless technology on the payphone industry in a statement on its Web site, www.appcc.net. "Consumers may not be able to carry a payphone on their hip, but payphones are everywhere, economical, easy and familiar to use, provide clear, static-free and secure transmission, and offer a full array of billing options from coins to cards," the APCC posted. "For all of these reasons, the rumors of the demise of payphones are a bit premature."

Hanson, on the other hand, predicts that payphones as we know them are likely to go the way of the dinosaur.

"While I think there will undoubtedly be far fewer payphones in the future, I do think that coin-operated phones will become extinct," she said, "and instead, the remaining public phones will take calling cards, or credit cards."

For now, at least, a few payphones linger on at UMass and around the nation, for those few who have yet to be swept away by the cell phone craze.

Goten of Japan
Cooking at your table
Graduation Parties
On Rt 116 Sunderland / Call for reservations 413.665.3628
now accepting OCMP
New Hours
Mon Closed
Tues-Fri 5-10pm
Sat 12-10pm
Sunday
Call for information

Summer Break Self Storage
Our Prices are the Lowest in the Area
Greenfield Secure Storage
1135 Bernardston Rd.
413-775-0074

It's all about you and the science.

Congratulations, scientists, on receiving your degree. You are now of the utmost value to the world of disease research and drug discovery. We need scientists exactly like you, and we need you to do work that really matters.

In our new global research headquarters, in Cambridge, MA, we're bringing our international resources and our inspired vision of innovation to bear on the research.

We'd love to hear from you directly to tell you more and to answer any questions you might have about us. Please call Lisa Zeto at 908-403-3347 weekdays from noon to 9 pm, now through May 19. We'd love to share our science with you.

Novartis is committed to embracing and leveraging diverse backgrounds, cultures, and talents to achieve competitive advantage. Novartis is an equal opportunity employer. M/F/D/V

NOVARTIS
NOVARTIS INSTITUTES FOR BIOMEDICAL RESEARCH

www.nibr.novartis.com

GM closes historical Ford plant

By John Porretto
Associated Press

DEARBORN, Mich. (AP) — Ford Motor Co.'s oldest manufacturing plant, an 86-year-old factory built under the guidance of founder Henry Ford and later the birthplace of the iconic Mustang, made its final car yesterday.

With the Wilson Pickett hit "Mustang Sally" blaring over a loudspeaker, hundreds of employees and retirees cheered and hugged as they watched the final car — a crimson red Mustang convertible — roll off the line.

"The Mustang has been with us for so long," said Rosa Smith, a 26-year Ford employee. "It is the car, the toy for the older generation and the sports car for the younger folks."

Ford is moving production of the Mustang from Dearborn, home to the company's headquarters, to a factory in Flat Rock, southwest of Detroit. It is part of a company-wide effort to switch to lean and flexible manufacturing systems, allowing Ford to cut costs by $1.5 billion to $2 billion over the next decade.

Ford has built roughly 6.7 million Mustangs in Dearborn since the car's introduction in 1964. The Mustang is one of the most popular cars ever made, offering a combination of sporty looks and raw horsepower that has been enjoyed by generations of Americans.

Sitting next to the assembly line yesterday was a cream-colored 1964 Mustang — the first one to come off the line 40 years ago.

The closing comes just days after General Motors stopped production of the venerable Oldsmobile at its Lansing Car Assembly plant, which had produced them for nearly a century.

The Dearborn Assembly Plant simply outlived its usefulness, the company said. It has played a vital role in Ford's business since it opened in 1918, 15 years after Henry Ford founded the company.

For all its history of making some of America's most popular cars, the factory actually got its start producing submarine chasers, known as Eagle boats, for the U.S. government during World War I. Over the next two decades, the plant was used to make the Model A. Fordson tractors and wooden body parts for the Model T. The factory has produced Mercury models such as the Cougar and Capri and other Ford models including the Galaxie, Fairlane and Thunderbird.

CARLSON/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Members of the media look over five of Ford Motor Co.'s most famous vehicles.

Saudi Arabia says oil prices high enough

By Abdullah Shihri
Associated Press

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia (AP) — In a significant shift, Saudi Arabia's oil minister said yesterday that crude prices have risen far enough, and he will urge OPEC to increase production, reversing an output cut that began just last month.

The change in policy, Oil Minister Ali Naimi said, is due to concern that high prices could hurt the world economy and reduce demand for oil. Oil prices have risen steadily in recent weeks, with U.S. crude prices touching $40 a barrel on Friday.

"It is certain that the kingdom believes that increasing the OPEC production ceiling is essential to keep supply and demand balanced," Naimi said in a statement.

He said the increase, which he planned to propose at a June 3 meeting of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, should "not be less than 1.5 million barrels a day."

That would more than offset the 1-million barrel-a-day cut in OPEC's production target that went into effect April 1. However, a boost in the production ceiling might have little real effect, analysts said, as most OPEC countries are producing well over their quotas.

"It's going to change the quotas more than it's going to change production," said analyst Adam Sieminski of Deutsche Bank in London.

OPEC pumps about a third of the world's oil, and Saudi Arabia is its biggest producer and de facto leader.

Crude oil prices briefly plunged after the announcement. Contracts of U.S. light, sweet crude for June delivery fell by $1.65 a barrel on the New York Mercantile Exchange before recovering to $39.45, down 48 cents. June contracts of Brent crude tumbled by $1.67 a barrel on the International Petroleum Exchange in London but rebounded somewhat and were 70 cents lower at $36.30 in late trading.

The change in Saudi oil policy came only weeks after Washington Post journalist Bob Woodward said in a new book that Saudi Arabia had made a deal with the White House to increase oil production to drive down U.S. gasoline prices and help President Bush win re-election. Saudi and U.S. officials denied the report.

Analyst Ian Stuart of FIMAT USA, a New York brokerage, said the Saudi decision was "very curious."

"It's diametrically opposite to everything Naimi has been saying" about supplies being adequate to meet demand, he said. "It's the first noise from anyone in OPEC about raising output."

OPEC currently has an official ceiling of 23.5 million barrels a day, but analysts and some offi-

See OPEC on page 4

www.dailycollegian.com

Vandals severely damage 127-year-old Civil War statue

JOSH REYNOLDS/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kevin Tucker of the Sons of Union Veterans of the Civil War looks at the damage done to a Civil War Memorial in Boston, yesterday.

By Ken Maguire
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Vandals toppled a 127-year-old bronze statue of a Civil War soldier, snapping off its head and musket.

Authorities believe the 1,000-pound statue on the Boston Common was pushed over Saturday night. The statue of the Union soldier is part of the Soldiers and Sailors Monument, the city's most elaborate memorial.

The torso was found lying stomach down on the concrete near the base of the statue's 12-foot pedestal. Parks officials recovered the soldier's musket and its wide-eyed, mustachioed head, weighing more than 100 pounds. Officials think the figure can be repaired.

"Why do people do that?" Mayor Thomas M. Menino said Sunday. "I'm very disturbed. Things like this should not happen in the parks of our city."

Police said yesterday that no arrests have been made. And parks department spokeswoman Mary Hines said investigators have no leads.

Man accused of 12 deaths pleads innocent

By Heather Hollingsworth
Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — A man accused of strangling 12 women between 1977 and 1993 pleaded innocent yesterday before a courtroom filled with victims' families.

After Lorenzo Gilyard's arraignment on 12 murder charges, his lawyer said additional charges were possible.

"It's my understanding that the state is actively reviewing homicides, missing women," said the lawyer, Donald Williams, adding that the last body was found over 11 years ago and "the experts on serial killings say that you just can't stop."

"What's been going on for the last 11 years? It's a question I put frankly to Mr. Gilyard and he told me, 'Look, I never killed anyone. I haven't killed anyone. I didn't kill those 12 people,'" he said.

All but one of the victims was a prostitute.

Gilyard, 53, of Kansas City, remains held without bond. He was arrested in April after a federal grant allowed police to devote more time to DNA testing of evidence in the city's cold case files.

Williams said prosecutors will need more than that DNA evidence to convict his client.

Gilyard scanned the crowd before he was led out of the courtroom following the hearing. Families of about five victims were there.

Outside the courthouse, Annette Kelly said she came for her sister, Naomi Kelly, who was 23 when she was found in a park on Aug. 16, 1986, lying on her back with a white towel tied around her neck and face.

NEW ON TUESDAY!
LAST SAMURAI
CALENDAR GIRLS
CHASING LIBERTY
ELEPHANT
GIRL WITH A PEARL EARRING
PETER PAN
TRIPLETS OF BELLEVILLE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Bruegger's
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Clip & Curl
Route 116, Sunderland 413 665 2629
Open Tuesday-Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
SENIORS!
Keep us in mind for all your Commencement needs.
Facials ~ Massages ~ Hair Styling

UMass Boston

Classroom with a View
UMASS BOSTON, SUMMER 2004
Ready to broaden your horizons this summer? Take a course at UMass Boston. Choose from over 500 course sections offered days, evenings, or online. Our campus overlooking Boston Harbor is easy to get to by subway or car. And if you really want a breath of fresh air, check out how affordable our fees are.
UMASS BOSTON
Register today!
To learn more, visit www.umb.edu or call 617.287.6000

STUDENT VALUE MENU Pick any number
1 One large one topping pizza $7.99
2 One small, 2-topping pizza
3 One small, 1-topping pizza & one order of Bread Sticks.
4 10 pc. Buffalo Wings, & one order of a Bread side item.
5 10 pc. Domino's Pizza Buffalo Chicken Kickers & one order of a Bread side item.
6 Small Specialty Pizza. (Deluxe Feast, Hawaiian Feast, MeatZZa Feast, Vegi Feast, Pepperoni Feast, Bacon Cheeseburger Feast)
7 Two orders of Bread Sticks & 2 cans of Coke®.
8 Medium 1-topping pizza & 2 cans of Coke®.
$1.99 Second Pizza
Buy anyPizza
Get Second Pizza
Amherst
256-8911
Hours
Sun-Wed 11a.m.-3a.m.
Thurs-Sat 11a.m.-4a.m.
$1.99
Domino's Pizza

Historical Till murder case under review

TILL from page 1

could be prosecuted under Mississippi state law.

"We owe it to Emmitt Till and we owe it to ourselves to see whether after all these years some additional measure of justice remains possible," Acosta said at a news conference.

The decision follows a lengthy campaign by the NAACP, members of Congress and Till's mother, Mamie Till Mobley, to get the Justice Department to reopen the case. Mobley, who died in Chicago last year at age 81, is widely credited with generating attention for her son's murder by showing his battered body in an open casket at his funeral.

Airickca Gordon, a cousin of Till's who was close to his mother, said the family was elated at the news.

"Even though she's now deceased, I feel her spirit will be so much at peace," Gordon said.

The Till case gave many Americans a closer look at the segregated South, its Jim Crow laws and lynchings. The slaying occurred a little over a year after the Supreme Court's landmark Brown v. Board of Education decision outlawed state-sponsored school segregation and about 100 days before seamstress Rosa Parks refused to give up her seat in the white section of a segregated bus in Montgomery, Ala.

Saudi Arabia's oil minister changes policy, urges OPEC to increase production

ALI NAIMI/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ali Naimi, Saudi Oil Minister, listens to a speech at the opening of the International Energy Forum.

OPEC from page 3

cials say OPEC countries are producing more than 2 million barrels a day above that. Other than Saudi Arabia, few OPEC countries have the capacity to quickly increase output, so a higher ceiling would effectively legitimize some of the overproduction instead of adding a lot of fresh crude to global supplies.

"That's not a promise of more production," said analyst Paul Horsnell of Barclays Capital in London.

At their March meeting in Vienna, Austria, OPEC members decided to cut production by 1 million barrels a day, despite warnings by analysts that oil prices would surge.

Kuwait's energy minister, Sheik Ahmed Fahd Al Ahmed Al Sabah, praised Naimi's new position, saying it justified Kuwait's opposition to the March cut.

"This position agrees with ... what Kuwait had called for in the last OPEC meeting that the cut ... should not be implemented," the Kuwaiti minister said.

Naimi said he would discuss the market situation with other OPEC members May 22-24 at the International Energy Forum in Amsterdam. OPEC's June meeting will be held in Beirut, Lebanon.

He said recent price increases were a "major concern" to Saudi Arabia.

"We do not want to see prices rise to the level that they negatively affect the growth of the international economy or the demand for oil," he said.

The minister said the primary reason for higher oil prices is "the market's unwarranted fear of disruptions in supplies from some oil producing countries and regions at a time when only the kingdom and probably two or three other countries have spare production capacity."

Market speculation is another factor, he said. He said traders were holding long-term contracts for commodities such as oil because economic growth was robust and interest rates were low.

Cape Cod town votes to issue marriage licenses to same-sex out-of-state couples

By Jennifer Peter
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Out-of-state couples will be able to receive marriage licenses in Provincetown after the Board of Selectmen voted unanimously Monday to defy Gov. Mitt Romney's residency instructions, likely setting the stage for another gay marriage legal battle.

Romney immediately issued a statement Monday, threatening legal action against clerks who defy his interpretation of the law.

The Provincetown board said that gay couples who live outside of Massachusetts and have no intention of moving here will still be issued marriage licenses, as long as they attest that they know of no legal impediment to their union.

Romney's office has instructed city and town clerks around the state that out-of-state gay couples who do not plan to move to the state will be barred from marrying under a 1913 law that prohibits marriages that would be illegal in a couple's home state.

"We are a nation of laws," Romney said in the statement. "If they choose to break the law, we will take appropriate enforcement action, refuse to recognize those marriages, and inform the parties that the marriage is null and void."

Under state law, officials who issue a license "knowing that parties are prohibited" can face a fine of $100 to $500 or a prison sentence of up to a year.

Romney said clerks should follow the 1913 law, regardless of their personal beliefs about gay marriage.

But attorney Mary Bonauto, who represented the seven gay couples in their landmark case against the state, argued that it was Romney's personal opposition to gay marriage that led to his broad interpretation of the 1913 law.

If constitutional at all, Bonauto argues, the law would only bar marriage to gay couples from those states that have laws on their books that declare gay marriages "null and void." She estimates that only about 20 states have that type of law.

"It's because of his personal beliefs that he is applying the law to all 49," Bonauto said. "There was a time when our state took the lead and refused to bow to the discriminatory laws of other states. But now I find it sad that the Massachusetts governor would penalize a town for recognizing that Massachusetts has no business denying marriage licenses to same-sex couples whether they are Massachusetts residents or not."

R. MICHELSON/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Daniel B. Winslow, right, legal counsel to Massachusetts Gov. Mitt Romney, answers questions from reporters.

Romney spokeswoman Shawn Feddeman said an enforcement action "could include referring cases to the district attorneys or the state Attorney General, depending on the circumstance."

Huge crowds are expected May 17 in Provincetown, a gay-friendly town at Cape Cod's tip. That is the day that a November Supreme Judicial Court decision takes effect, legalizing gay marriage in Massachusetts.

GRADUATION VIDEOS
ON SALE NOW
Capture the moment for life with a well edited and well shot UVC-TV19 production.
BEFORE 6/1/04 DVD $25 VHS $20
AFTER 6/1/04 DVD $30 VHS $25
PREORDERS ARE NOW BEING TAKEN AT UVC STUDIOS IN THE STUDENT UNION BASEMENT
ORDERS WILL ALSO BE TAKEN AT THE GRADUATION CEREMONY
questions? 545-1336

Calling the Graduating Class of 2005!!
Now is the time to start making reservations at the Lincoln D. Murray Campus CenterHotel
Graduation Weekend
Fri. May 20th-Sat. May 21st, 2005

Calling Day for making reservations starts May 12, 2004 @ 10am. Limited rooms available.
First come first serve. 2 night's minimum stay for $270/room ($135/night)
Book the 3rd night (Thurs. or Sun.) at a discounted price of $59!
To make reservations, call: 413.549.6000

Kiss A Senior Goodbye
Let your Senior friends know you will miss them!
Give them a card and a champagne glass filled with Hershey® Kisses to say Goodbye!
Only $6.00 each or 2 for $10.00
Stop by the STARS table on the Campus Center Concourse or visit www.UMassAlumni.com/students for more information on how to order these great gifts!
STARS can be reached by phone at 577-1390 or by email at stars@stuaf.umass.edu.
Hershey Kisses courtesy of hersheys.com

Change your mind this summer:
stay.
• Get the Gen Ed courses you need
• Enjoy smaller class sizes
• Keep on track for graduation
• Choose from over 200 courses and degree programs
• AND take 6 credits or more and we'll waive the registration fee!
Watch for our money-saving coupon in your mailbox.
umass.edu/contined
413-545-2414
UMassAmherst Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

Tuesday, May 11, 2004 Editorial@dailycollegian.com

EPA takes positive steps toward future

The Environmental Protection Agency is helping everyone breathe a little easier.

The EPA announced regulations yesterday to cut pollution from diesel-powered farming and construction equipment by more than 90 percent over the next six years.

The regulation calls for refiners to nearly eliminate sulfur in diesel fuel used in farming, construction and other off-road activities by 2010. The regulation also includes large ships and locomotives by 2012. The regulation will be formally signed today. The regulation is rather overdue, considering that it applies the Clean Air Act, approved in 1970, to all diesel engines.

Air quality standards should be a top concern of federal regulators, not only for the people living today, but also for future generations. Currently, the amount of sulfur in diesel fuel used in vehicles is unregulated. Regulations on pollution should constantly be examined and the research and suggestions made by the EPA should be taken seriously.

Consider, for instance, that there are more than six million pieces of off-road diesel equipment in operation that send pollutants into the air, damaging the environment and making it harder for everyone to breathe. About 650,000 more vehicles are sold each year. If the EPA did not make these proposals, the American public would be largely unaware of all the harmful pollutants entering the air.

Last year, the EPA said that reducing non-road diesel engine pollution by 90 percent annually could save 9,600 lives and could prevent 360,000 asthma attacks every year.

The Bush administration has been severely criticized on air pollution issues. Environmental groups say the administration has done little in terms of making progress in environmental issues. Although concerns on pollution may oftentimes take a backseat when talking about other national and international problems, they are nonetheless of equal importance. And these issues should play a role in the 2004 elections.

The cleaner fuel and the cleaner engines will greatly reduce the amount of smog-causing chemicals and fine soot in the air. The pollutants are responsible for increases in respiratory illnesses and thousands of premature deaths every year. These pollutants can affect children, the elderly and people suffering from asthma even more.

The EPA should be commended for their efforts to not only bring these issues to light, but also for being instrumental in changing national regulations. The forward thinking of the EPA (the proposal for diesel requirements for off-road vehicles and machinery came a year ago) means they are sticking to their core mission of protecting human health and the environment.

Information from the Associated Press was used in this editorial.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Ayatollah Moore

Yousef Munayyer

Thanks to the Republican Club here at UMass, we had the distinct privilege of seeing one of the most delusional individuals I have ever encountered. Perhaps you have heard of Roy Moore, formerly Justice Moore of the Alabama State Supreme Court who happened to get removed from his bench after he failed to do his job. His job was following an order by a higher court to remove a monument of the Ten Commandments. Moore, of course, thought he was responsible to answer to an even higher authority.

What scares me about Roy Moore is not so much that he is out of his mind, because many people are and we put them in homes and jackets so they can sit in a corner and hug themselves all day, but rather that there are many people who think like Roy Moore.

What scares me about Roy Moore is not so much that he is out of his mind, because many people are and we put them in homes and jackets so that they can sit in a corner and hug themselves all day, but rather that there are many people who think like Roy Moore. I attended Roy Moore's lecture, which shouldn't really be called a lecture since it was more of a barrage of memorized quotations, I actually felt like I was watching a televangelist. I'm still trying to figure out if there was anything that Roy Moore actually said.

So, as he was orating on and on about how our forefathers were "Christians" and therefore America today should accept God as the sovereign, he actually devoted several minutes to rewriting the First Amendment. I kid you not. The man actually reworded one of the most important parts to our Constitution to make it more agreeable with his argument. I watched him practically copy and paste James Madison's definition of religion into the First Amendment using a Powerpoint presentation.

If I had any reservations about the higher courts decision to remove Ayatollah Moore from his bench they were gone after I had witnessed him literally rewrite the Constitution. As a judge, he is supposed to interpret the law as it is written, not as it is rewritten. I could not believe he dared to stand in front of an American flag and cut up the fabric of our nation's government. Perhaps this didn't seem hypocritical to him since he may plan to create a new American flag with crosses on it as opposed to stars.

When his rant was over he allowed time for some questions from the crowd, and this of course is an opportunity I rarely pass up. So I was called on and asked a two-part question: "Do you think your philosophy on secularism would change should you have been a religious minority, and can you explain the influences of Locke's Essay on Toleration on Thomas Jefferson?" Well, the second part of my question he answered by pulling out his handy copy of the political writings of John Locke. Now this is a book we should all have but when you carry it around with you everywhere you go, I would be a bit worried. Needless to say he picked through different parts of the essay and chose lines out of context to support his opinion and perhaps neglected to mention Locke's most famous quote from that essay: "Unless it be that I will, out of pride or overweeningness of my opinion, and a secret conceit of my own infallibility, taking to myself something of a godlike power, force and compel others to be of my mind, or censure or malign them if they be not ..."

What Locke is simply saying here is that there is no problem with which religion you practice, nor should that be a concern of the state. However it becomes a concern when you force those beliefs or opinions on others. Of course, Roy Moore wouldn't read this to the parish in attendance. It would simply expose him for the hypocrite that he is since he, in keeping the monument on state property, was doing exactly what Locke warned against.

He completely neglected the first part of my question, which I asked him a second time. Then he ignored it again by going off on some unrelated rant. The bottom line is if Roy Moore grew up as a Christian in an Islamic Theocracy, he would have a very different philosophy on secularism since it would be his minority rights that were being protected.

What saddens me the most was that he symbolizes a dangerous direction for the Republican Party to be heading. The Republican Party must remain committed to the Constitution and regardless to how many crazies it may have, it cannot allow itself to become the "party of God" or religious fundamentalism here in the United States.

Roy Moore's insistence on outdated desert morality and chanting "onward Christian soldiers" shows that the direction he is leading people in is backwards not forwards. It's time for him and others to realize that though you may firmly believe In your religious beliefs, you have no right, under a democratic state system, to impose those beliefs on others.

Yousef Munayyer is a Collegian columnist.

No such thing as Anti-Americanism

Jeffrey Napolitano

Be wary of anyone who refers to anyone else as "anti-American." No such thing exists. Furthermore, no such thing can exist, for if it did, how would it be defined? To proclaim that something is "American" implies that there is a consensus among our citizens about something that is unique to this country: that there is a particular perspective or set of beliefs that is distinctly "American."

Most of us are "American," by definition, because we were born in this country. But that should be the only connotation the term has, if there is to be any respect for freedom, the one principle so many of us commonly embrace. Implicit in the belief of freedom is that there can be no one mindset, no one religion, no one way to think. If "freedom," freedom of speech, freedom of expression, freedom of religion, is the common principle of all our citizens, then that means there can be no one idea or perspective that is "American."

That is why "anti-American" is such a ridiculous term. It suggests that there is one particular way of seeing things, or one particular belief. If the preamble to the Constitution means anything, if the Bill of Rights is as sacred as so many of us claim it to be, it is impossible to be "anti-American." If there is an "anti-American," what is an "American"?

Is an American someone who believes in freedom of speech? If that were the case, the millions (if not billions) of people around the world who believe in that freedom should be considered "Americans." A desire for freedom isn't a quality any more limited to the United States than a desire to live and breathe.

Time after time, the U.S. government has openly been opposed to free speech. In 1917, in order to prohibit opposition to WWI, the government passed the "Espionage Act," which stated that "whoever, when the U.S. is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty in the military" would be considered a criminal. Under this law, hundreds of anti-war activists, whose only crime was to merely write about or speak out in public against the war, went to jail for many years.

Until 1964, in the Supreme Court case of New York Times v. Sullivan, it was illegal to criticize the government. It was only then that the court struck down the 1798 Sedition Act, which made "any person that shall write, print, utter ... writings against the government of the United States" a criminal.

A desire for freedom isn't a quality any more limited to the United States than a desire to live and breathe.

Given the changing nature of the government, given its tendency to switch its position from one day to another, given the contradictory policies of the Constitution and slavery, lack of women's rights, lack of economic freedoms, given that a new President, a new set of policies, is swept into office every four years, "anti-American" can't reasonably describe someone who opposes the government.

Yet when someone is branded an "anti-American," the name-calling is always done by those who blindly agree and obey with the resident administration. Ninety years ago, the Department of Justice created the American Protective League, consisting of tens of thousands of "patriotic" citizens who burglarized their neighbors' houses, looking for evidence of "disloyalty" to the government.

Approximately 50 years ago, the Black people who marched for their rights, which had been ignored for decades, were decried as rabble-rousers by "respectable" white citizens.

Approximately 40 years ago, when the very first protestors against the Vietnam War displayed their opposition to the war, were nearly killed by "patriotic" counter-demonstrators. After one of the first marches against Vietnam took place in Boston in 1965, it was broken up, and as Noam Chomsky, who participated in the demonstration, states in his book "Understanding Power," "... all of the radio programs were deluged with denunciations of these Communists and traitors. The liberals in Congress denounced the 'utter irresponsibility' of the [anti-war] demonstrators."

Arundhati Roy's comments on "anti-Americanism" in a speech two years ago are particularly succinct: "To call someone 'anti-American' ... is not just racist, it's a failure of the imagination. An inability to see the world in terms other than those the establishment has set out for you. If you're not a Bushie, you're a Taliban. If you don't love us, you hate us. If you're not good, you're evil. If you're not with us, you're with the terrorists."

Just as there's no way to define "America," there cannot be a way to define "anti-Americanism." Such a simple-minded term only demonstrates the simple-mindedness of one who uses it. And just as it confuses what is in question with the imagery of flags and apple pie, it leads us further and further from the true meaning.

Jeffrey Napolitano is a Collegian columnist.

Nearing the finish line

Stacy Kasdin

It's hard to believe that in less than two weeks I'll be a senior in college. It seems like just yesterday I was unpacking my bags in my first room in Dickinson Hall. I came into college expecting it to be like all those movies I'd seen with the crazy parties, drinking and wild late night excursions to who-knows-where.

I remember one of my first nights at UMass. My roommate was a sophomore who, it seemed to me, knew the college ropes fairly well. I spent the majority of my first month of school following her around like the lost little freshman that I was, trying to soak up all the knowledge I could (you know, that special kind of knowledge you just don't find in your classes). On this particular night she was going to a party in a friend's room upstairs and I tagged along. A good amount of her friends from the year before were going to be there, as well as a few select freshmen that were new to the floor and managed to make some quick connections.

To my freshman surprise, it turned out you don't need to be a drinker and a partier to have fun in college!

I walked into the overcrowded room, which was lit up with Christmas lights and a multi-colored disco ball, and was immediately hit with the smell of alcohol. There was hip-hop music coming from a CD player in the middle of the room, which no one seemed to mind yelling over. My roommate introduced me to a few people before engaging in some reminiscent conversation with her friends. I sat quietly next to her on the couch taking in the scene. After a few minutes a guy offered her a beer, and noticing me next to her, offered me one as well. Some of my friends in high school drank, so it wasn't a completely foreign concept to me, but I certainly hadn't even achieved social-drinker status. I did, however, know that I didn't like the taste of beer.

I nervously asked him what it tasted like. He looked at me like I had three heads and shrugged. "Beer," he said. I paused and thought for a minute, trying to come up with a way to say no to the beer but still sound cool. He got impatient. "So, you want it or not?" I took the beer. I proceeded to nurse the beer for the next three hours or so and finished about half of it. At some point someone turned the music up even louder and decided it was time to kick the party into overdrive. A few people got up and started dancing. The guy who'd offered me the beer began prodding people to get up and dance. I quickly assured him that I would do no such thing (hopefully in a slightly "cooler" sounding manner). He began to grind with a girl in the middle of the room, which made me decidedly uncomfortable, and I realized that the whole college party scene, as much fun as it seemed to be in the movies, was not for me.

I toughed it out for the rest of the night. My favorite part of the evening was when the room cleared out of all but four or five people, and those of us remaining turned the music down to talk about low alcohol tolerance.

To my freshman surprise, it turned out you don't need to be a drinker and a partier to have fun in college! That guy who offered me the beer? Three years later, he's one of my best friends. The two of us, and others who had attended the party that evening, now role-play together once a week. Our recent "parties" have consisted of cheetos, iced tea and the geekiest jokes you've ever heard. Guess you really can't judge a book by its cover.

It amazes me just how much things have changed since that fateful night of my first year. I feel as though I've really come into my own and come to happily accept myself as I am. I openly express my detest for beer, and happily spend my weekends driving aimlessly around Western Massachusetts for hours, playing video games, and watching movies with some of the best friends anyone could ever hope for. No, college certainly hasn't ended up being the experience I thought it would be. It has ended up being much better than anything I could have hoped for, and I can't wait to get back here in three months to make my last year the best one yet. To my readers; thanks for letting me make your days a little brighter. To my friends: thanks a million for brightening mine. See you next year!

Stacy Kasdin is a Collegian columnist.

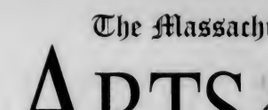
The Editorial/Opinion page is looking for new columnists for next year. Please come down to the newsroom to pick up an application from Paige.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MAY 11, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

DeadPreZ return



Rap duo aptly titled release 'Revolutionary But Gangsta'

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

There was a time when rap music was real, raw, and threatening in the best of ways. Rap was set up to be the next punk rock — the voice of urban youth that was underrepresented and neglected. Well, like all great, pure things, rap has been watered down and co-opted by the mainstream and by corporations. This new, fresh genre of music was, in less then twenty years, made safe enough to sell soft drinks.

This is where intelligent, political rappers Stic.Man and M1, collectively known as Dead Prez, come in. Their 2000 debut "Let's Get Free" was filled with social messages and beats that mixed modern gangsta rap with traditional African music. The disc even spawned a minor hit with the track "Hip-Hop" which initially appeared to be a bass-driven party jam but, underneath it's fun surface, was a call to arms for rappers and people everywhere with lines like, "You'd rather have a Lexus or justice? / A dream or some substance? / A Beamer, a necklace, or freedom?"

"Let's Get Free" introduced Dead Prez as the successors to Public Enemy's throne. The band's black pride and Black Panther-esque militancy even provoked gossip that they hated white people, a nasty rumor that Stic and M1 deny. Still, Dead Prez know that they might come off strongly and have no problem with leaving the harsh taste of reality behind.

"Let's Get Free" was half genius and half dull, where some tracks were rap masterpieces some were just bland. "RBG," which the band has subtitled as "Revolutionary But Gangsta" (the perfect way to summarize Dead Prez' sound) never quite reaches the heights that some of the "Let's Get Free" tracks did and, for the most part, struggles to retain the audience's attention. "I Have A Dream, Too" doesn't seem much different than the average gangsta track and "W-4" wants to be a smooth R&B track but the laid back beat and all the singing just comes off as awkward.

"Hell Yeah (pimpthesystem)" is one of the better tracks if only because, as the title suggests, the song tries to subvert the mainstream as "Hip Hop" did a few years ago. The song is a tale of financial struggle but it tries to mask itself under a

See DEAD PREZ on page 6

Tribeca celebrates film scores

By Christy Lemire
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — Martin Scorsese and Howard Shore have both loved music since childhood.

Decades later, they've applied that love through film, though in very different ways — Scorsese as a director known for choosing rock, blues and R&B songs to create a mood or contrast with the on-screen action, Shore as the Oscar-winning composer of the "Lord of the Rings" score, a whopping 11-hour original work featuring some 200 musicians.

Both discussed the marriage of movies and music during the Tribeca Film Festival, which ended Sunday.

Scorsese told a packed audience that while growing up on Manhattan's Lower East Side, he heard music pouring into the street through open windows — everything from opera to Tony Bennett.

"I began to notice that music was scoring life," the 61-year-old director said Friday. "Music would conjure all kinds of images."

For 1990's "GoodFellas," Scorsese considered about 70 songs for the soundtrack; he ended up with a mix including The Shangri-Las, Aretha Franklin and Cream.

Five years later for "Casino," at the moment when Robert De Niro's character sees Sharon Stone's character impetuously tossing chips into the air, Scorsese chose a specific section of Mickey and Sylvia's "Love Is Strange" and shot the scene to the music.

"For that part of the song — 'Baby, oh baby' — he's a dead man," the director said, drawing laughs.

Among the other clips shown during the discussion were the Last Supper and Crucifixion scenes from "The Last Temptation of Christ" (1988), which featured music from Peter Gabriel.

"It was something that you hadn't heard in a film of this nature before," Scorsese said. "It was the idea to make it immediate and to provoke. The only music that came to mind for me was Peter Gabriel. It was very spiritual and yet of the flesh."

A rare occasion in which Scorsese used an original score was for "Taxi Driver" (1976). The reason: "Travis (Bickle, De Niro's character) didn't listen to music," he said. "You had to see everything through his point of view." (Bernard Herrmann's score, the last one he wrote before his death, earned him an Academy Award nomination.)

Shore, meanwhile, won original-score Oscars for the first and third parts of "The

See TRIBECA on page 6

COURTESY YAHOO.COM

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

The idea of cloning a human being isn't such a far-fetched sci-fi concept anymore, and the time may be ripe for a movie in which the specter of genetic duplication is presented with the righteous moral horror it deserves.

"Godsend" is not that movie.

It's a mediocre bit of bad seed hokum, a hoary old bit of horror schlock that takes the nightmarish medical boogeyman of cloning and proceeds to do next to nothing with it. "Godsend," with its aura of faux-classy dread, defangs itself with each scene, until it becomes a cartoon of lurid "gotcha!" terror. It wants to scare you, but it's a film that feels more vacuous than ominous each second its on screen.

'Godsend'
Directed by Nick Hamm
Starring Greg Kinnear, Robert Dinero
Lions Gate
Rated PG-13
102 mins
Grade D

There's still a great horror flick to be made about the downside of cloning a human, but "Godsend" quickly strays from subversive shock into a more ordinary — and less interesting — realm of domestic horror. The movie is flat and more than a tad inauthentic; it takes a truly unnerving topic and treats it as an excuse for some cheap jolts out of the Horror Movie 101 handbook. All the while the audience is supposed to think it's about something deeper. Sitting through the excruciating dullness of "Godsend" I began to realize what I hoped the movie was about. I hoped it was about to end.

"Godsend" stars talented and deft actors like Robert DeNiro and Greg Kinnear, and it's handsomely mounted, shot by the cinematographer Kramer Morgenthau with a cool, burnished sophistication right out of the M. Night Shyamalan playbook. But that doesn't make it any good. The film may be stocked with good actors, and it may look good — all eerie, wintry, blue-tinted chill — but that's because the director, Nick Hamm, wants you to think you're watching a "serious" adult chiller when all he can cough up is a pretentious and heavy-handed B-movie stinker. This is 'Sci-Fi Thrillers for Dummies' material — at best.

Kinnear and a mopey Rebecca Romijn-Stamos play Paul and Jessie Duncan, a yuppie couple living in New York City, who lost their son Adam, (Cameron Bright) just days after his eighth birthday in a traffic accident. They are approached by Dr. Richard Wells (DeNiro), a renowned biologist and Jessie's former college instructor, who offers them a proposition. If they sever all ties to their past life and move into a palatial old house in the middle of Vermont, then Wells can help to regain what the couple lost: namely, he says he's perfected a procedure that will be able to clone Adam.

It only takes a brief moment for the Duncans to skim over the ethical quagmire of cloning their dead son before deciding to go ahead with the procedure (otherwise we wouldn't have a movie, which, come to think of it, is a preferrable option.) All goes swimmingly for the first eight years, up until the point where the original Adam died. After that, Adam No. 2 begins to become more withdrawn and remote, starts suffering from strange visions and night terrors and draws crayon pictures of a building on fire.

Hamm and his writer, Mark Bombeck, turn the movie into a shallow and cliché evil kid movie

See GODSEND on page 6

Dead Prez back in rap game with 'RBG'

DEAD PREZ from page 5

gangsta image, a look that doesn't really work for the band. The album ends with a remix of "Hell Yeah" that features none other then Jay-Z, although his rhymes are forgettable and seem half-hearted. Hova seems more interested in hyping the track ("we're together on the same track now, baby!" he exclaims) than in doing a quality verse. "Radio Freq" is very possibly the album's best track. It's an upbeat number with clever rhymes about the state of modern rap; it's as ferocious and biting as Dead Prez gets without being overly didactic. The only problem is that the song already appeared on the band's "Turn Off The Radio" mix tape, which was released during the long period in which "RBG" was being held hostage by Sony/Columbia, which wouldn't release it for well over a year.

"RBG" is still a smart album, especially when compared to the bling-bling oriented glam rap that dominates the charts, but seems a bit tamer and more phoned-in then "Let's Get Free". With their debut album Dead Prez seemed to be bursting at the seams with excitement, talent, and messages. "RBG" feels confused and comatose, if not dead. Many of the tracks seem half-finished and Stic and M1 seem to be more enticed by the watered-down gangsta rap that they are supposedly battling against. The themes of "RBG" are less worldly and political then "Let's Get Free." Many of the songs deal with street life and personal experiences.

The album also deals a lot with the theme of balancing, mixing serious political thought with fun, but all that comes of that is that Dead Prez needs a bit more work on the juggling act. The 'fun' part just seems stale and the politics seem lost and unimportant. The group has every right to want to break out of the ultra-political box that "Let's Get Free" created but they simply haven't figured out how to change in the right way. Dead Prez has a very important role in modern hip-hop and with "RBG" they seem to have reached crossroads. Dead Prez could be the saviors of hip-hop or just one of the many forgotten also-rans, only the future will tell if "RBG" is just a simple misstep or an unfortunate example of another great talent squandered.

Stic.Man and M1 make up the rap group Dead Prez. Although the two are still sending strong messages through their music, their sophomore album, "RBG" doesn't live up to their potential.

'Godsend' avoids the deeper issues of cloning

GODSEND from page 5

— a kind of shiny, modern version of "The Bad Seed" or "The Omen." Why explore the mysterious ethical boundaries of cloning when you can have young Adam experience surrealistic nightmares involving dead eyed kids and burning rooms? Why tackle big questions when you can have the camera fondly zooming in on a rusty hatchet? Why make an intelligent, stylish and adroit horror flick when you can waste real talent in cheap dreck?

To say that "Godsend" is illogical is kind of like saying Britney Spears is blonde, so it's not worth the time or effort required to dig deeply into how idiotic the movie really is. Let's just note that Kinnear is supposed to be a biology teacher and never questions Wells' procedure. Let's note the anticlimactic climax and lack of any real thrills as well.

You could say that DeNiro (I sincerely hope he picked up a nice paycheck for this) and Romijn-Stamos are under-acting here, but they underact to the point of disappearing from the screen. Only Kinnear, as the distraught and worried Paul, manages to keep any audience sympathy.

Hamm knows how to polish his movie so that it looks good (Morgenthau no doubt helped) but he doesn't know how to stage a scene so that it doesn't come off as awkward and hamfisted. That in essence is what "Godsend" is: awkward, contrived and clumsy. I wonder if this inept thriller can be returned to sender.

Cameron Bright stars as the cloned son of Rebecca Romijn-Stamos and Greg Kinnear.

Scorsese reflects on music's role in film

TRIBECA from page 5

Lord of the Rings" trilogy: "The Fellowship of the Ring" (2001) and "The Return of the King" (2003).

But he didn't devise three separate scores for three separate films; like director Peter Jackson, who adapted J.R.R. Tolkien's novels, he envisioned them as one comprehensive work, featuring the London Philharmonic and several choirs.

"What they were interested in was clarity because the book is dense," Shore said during a discussion Saturday at the film festival, referring to Jackson and co-writers Fran Walsh and Philippa Boyens. "It was how to tell this story with 22 main characters and multiple cultures."

Shore, a 57-year-old Canadian whose previous films include "The Silence of the Lambs" and Scorsese's "Gangs of New York," had read Tolkien's books in the '60s but spent four or five months rereading and thinking about them for inspiration. Then he'd meet with Jackson in his native New Zealand, where the trilogy was shot, a couple times a week to look at pieces of film and discuss the accompanying music.

Even though Jackson has no formal music training — and Shore studied at Boston's Berklee College of Music — the director was intimately involved in guiding the score.

Filmmaker Martin Scorsese discusses the influence of music in his movies during the 2004 Tribeca Film Festival on Friday.

HermanMiller AUTHORIZED DEALER
MHEC Vendor
LEXINGTON GROUP
Buyers & Sellers of Quality New & Used Office Furniture
♦ Design & Space Planning ♦ Installations
♦ Furniture Rental & Leasing ♦ Panel Systems
New & Remanufactured
Eric Bascom 413.746.3064
eric@lexingtongroupinc.com
380 Union St., West Springfield, MA 01089

GRAPHICS
the Collegian is hiring for next semester
College Street Visitors
It's Spring Time!
CAMPUS PARKING NOTICE
21 29 47 50 54 67 North Village Apartments and Lincoln Apartments
Come talk to Scott, Shannon, or Rachael or call 545-1864
105 Campus Center Basement
Freshmen and Sophomores are encouraged to apply

Work out all summer. No sweat.
No sweat in the budget department at least. Because Bally Total Fitness has a special summer program for college students that lets you work out at any club coast-to-coast for just $36 a month! It's good from May through August for anyone 18-23 with a student ID. And better yet, come September you can renew at the same low rate and use any Bally Total Fitness near you. So the only thing you'll have to sweat next year is your course load.
1.800.LITNESS www.ballyfitness.com
Bally Total Fitness

Hugh Jackman is nominated for his performance in the musical "The Boy From Oz."

And the Tony nominees are ...

Jackman among the potential Tony winners announced yesterday

By Michael Kuchwara
Associated Press

NEW YORK (AP) — It was a "Wicked" day, with the lavish "Wizard of Oz" musical nominated for 10 Tony Awards, Broadway's highest honor.

"Assassins," the chilling Stephen Sondheim-John Weidman musical about presidential killers, followed with seven nominations Monday.

Two Pulitzer Prize winners squared off against each other for best play. Doug Wright's "I Am My Own Wife," which took the Pulitzer for drama this year, competes against "Anna in the Tropics," the 2003 winner. Also nominated were "The Retreat From Moscow," William Nicholson's story of a crumbling marriage, and "Frozen," Bryony Lavery's harrowing tale of a child's abduction and murder.

Besides "Wicked," the other candidates for best musical: "Caroline, or Change," a look at the relationship between a black maid and her white employer's young son; "Avenue Q," a saucy little puppet show filled with songs and sex; and "The Boy From Oz," the Peter Allen musical biography starring Hugh Jackman as the Australian entertainer.

Jackman, who will serve as host for the Tony telecast on CBS June 6, is a strong favorite in the actor-musical category where he will face Alfred Molina, "Fiddler on the Roof"; Hunter Foster, "Little Shop of Horrors"; Euan Morton, "Taboo"; and John Tartaglia, "Avenue Q."

The nominations were announced Monday from the stage of the Hudson Theatre, one of Broadway's oldest playhouses. Among the stars reading the nominations were Jane Krakowski, Edie Falco, John Leguizamo, Jerry Stiller and Anne Meara.

"Wicked," a $14 million extravaganza about the witches of "Oz" before Dorothy arrives on the Yellow Brick Road, is the show to beat. The musical is the season's biggest success, grossing more than $1 million each week.

"I can't complain with 10 nominations," David Stone, producer of "Wicked," said. "We are pretty well sold out," with tickets on sale through the end of October.

Its leading ladies, Kristin Chenoweth and Idina Menzel, were both nominated, and the musical also picked up nominations for book, score, choreography, orchestrations, sets, costumes and lighting.

Competing against the "Wicked" witches for best actress in a musical are Donna Murphy for "Wonderful Town," Tonya Pinkins for "Caroline, or Change" and Stephanie D'Abruzzo, who sings and acts the roles of several puppets in "Avenue Q."

Kevin Kline and Christopher Plummer were nominated for their roles in two Shakespeare productions, "Henry IV" and "King Lear," respectively. They face Simon Russell Beale, "Jumpers"; Frank Langella, "Match"; and Jefferson Mays, "I Am My Own Wife."

"This has been a labor of love and a joy to do," said Langella, describing the two-year journey of "Match" from its first readings to Broadway's Plymouth Theatre. In Stephen Belber's play, the actor plays a flamboyant choreographer Langella described as "a nonstop motor-mouth."

Not surprisingly, missing from that strong lineup is Sean Combs, who made a highly publicized if critically dismissive Broadway debut in a revival of "A Raisin in the Sun," Lorraine Hansberry's landmark drama.

Yet the show — nominated for best revival-play along with "Henry IV," "King Lear" and "Jumpers" — is doing exceptional business largely because of the superstar allure of Combs. The actor's three female co-stars, Phylicia Rashad, Audra McDonald and Sanaa Lathan, received nominations in either the leading or featured categories. And Combs was gracious in his support of the women.

"It's more than a dream come true to be a part of this history-making play and I send huge congratulations to Phylicia, Sanaa and Audra on their nominations," Combs said in a statement. "I am so proud and happy to be working along side these amazing actresses."

Besides Rashad, those nominated for best performance by an actress in a play were: Eileen Atkins, "The Retreat From Moscow"; Tovah Feldshuh, "Golda's Balcony"; Anne Heche, "Twentieth Century"; and Swoosie Kurtz, "Frozen."

The seven nominations for "Assassins" were a vindication for the musical, which was much maligned by critics when it opened off-Broadway in 1991. The show will be joined in the musical-revival category by "Wonderful Town," "Fiddler on the Roof" and "Big River."

"Assassins" also garnered nominations for two of its featured actors (Michael Cerveris and Denis O'Hare), sets, lighting and orchestrations.

Tony Award nomination announcers, from left to right: actress Edie Falco, actor Jesse L. Martin, actor John Leguizamo, singer-actress Cyndi Lauper, actress Anne Meara, and husband, actor Jerry Stiller are joined by actress Jane Krakowski.

Student Parking Notice
Exam Week Parking 5/17-5/21

During the week of May 17 – May 21, students who do not have a parking permit may park in Lots 25, 26, 27, 33 and Yellow while taking exams. If you possess a valid parking permit, please use the lot you purchased to enable others use of these lots. Use Lots 25, 26, 27, 33 and Yellow ONLY (during exam week), otherwise you will be subject to ticketing and towing.

Brought to you by UMass Parking Services – 413-545-0065. Please visit our website at http://parking.umass.edu for further information. The University community appreciates your cooperation in parking legally.

Congratulations to all graduating seniors!

Microsoft

You'll be glad you have a license.

Stop by the campus bookstore May11th between 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. to try out a Tablet PC – the next evolution of the notebook. You'll want to drive one home.

Microsoft Windows xp Tablet PC Edition

www.tabletpc.com www.journeyed.com

Eckersley visits Cooperstown

By John Kekis
Associated Press

COOPERSTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — When Dennis Eckersley walked into the Plaque Gallery at the Baseball Hall of Fame for the first time, he was as overwhelmed as any of his predecessors.

"Being with the plaques is where I felt it. That's when it hit home," Eckersley said Monday as he toured the Hall of Fame in preparation for his July induction. "You get the feeling that it's not really true. That's what puts it in perspective, how awesome it feels."

Eckersley and former Milwaukee Brewers star Paul Molitor were elected in January in their first year of eligibility, bringing to 40 the number of players elected on the first ballot.

Eckersley saved an American League-record 324 games in stints with the Cleveland Indians, Boston Red Sox and Oakland Athletics. He also pitched for the St. Louis Cardinals and Chicago Cubs of the National League before retiring in 1998 with a record of 197-171 and 390 saves in 1,071 games.

With his shaggy black hair and distinct mustache, Eckersley relied on pinpoint control and was the most effective reliever in baseball from 1988-92, helping the Athletics win four division titles and one World Series. He also won the AL MVP and Cy Young Awards in 1992 with one of the greatest seasons by a reliever, going 7-1 with 51 saves and a 1.91 earned run average.

Impressive statistics, to be sure. But Eckersley never was as confident as he appeared on the mound with his intimidating stare and remains amazed at his good fortune.

"It doesn't really sink in," said Eckersley, who will be 50 in October. "I thought I was good, but I never thought that I was going to be a Hall of Famer."

Eckersley reached the big leagues in 1975 with Cleveland and pitched a no-hitter against the Angels in 1977. It wasn't until 10 years later — after stints with the Red Sox and Cubs — that he became a closer and his baseball life changed forever.

After completing a month of alcohol treatment in January 1987, Eckersley went to spring training with the Cubs, and they traded him to the Athletics during the first week of the season. It was there that manager Tony LaRussa and pitching coach Dave Duncan relegated him to the bullpen, expecting him to pitch only the ninth inning if the Athletics were ahead.

"I was looking for a niche," said Eckersley, who posed for a photo in front of the plaque of his idol growing up, former San Francisco Giants right-hander Juan Marichal. "I just kind of fell into it."

In a big way.

In that four-year stretch with Oakland, Eckersley saved 220 games, struck out 378 and walked only 58 batters. He also is the only pitcher with 100 saves and 100 complete games.

Jim McIsaac/Associated Press

Dennis Eckersley, one of the two new inductees into the Baseball Hall of Fame, looks toward the plaque of Juan Marichal, a Giants pitcher who was inducted in 1983, at the Hall of Fame yesterday, in Cooperstown, N.Y.. Eckersley said Marichal was his hero. Eckersley, who was converted to a reliever, helped Oakland win three AL pennants and one World Series.

Pro soccer player from Amherst receives sour welcome overseas

OSLO, Norway (AP) — An American soccer player in Norway was subjected to racial taunts and spit on by fans during a game.

Robbie Russel, who is black and was born in Amherst, plays for the Norwegian club Sogndal.

"I've experienced racism, but never anything like this," the 24-year-old player told the state radio network NRK.

He said four or five Brann fans on Sunday grabbed his jersey through the fence about 27 minutes into the game.

"A woman spit in my face," he said. "The entire time a group of supporters were yelling racist things at me."

Russel was not injured and declined to file a police complaint, choosing to let soccer organizations deal with the matter.

There was an outpouring of support for Russel and condemnation of his attackers in the national news media Monday.

The Bergen-based Brann club promised to identify the culprits using TV footage and threatened to permanently ban them from Brann events.

Russel supported such a move, saying "nothing entitles them to do that sort of thing to you."

"We condemn all forms of racism in Norwegian soccer," said Karen Espelund, secretary-general of the Norwegian Soccer Federation. "Such behavior goes against everything we stand for."

—Associated Press

Ramirez takes first 'excused' absence of the year for Sox

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Manny Ramirez had a good reason to miss his first game of the year with the Boston Red Sox. He went to Miami to become a U.S. citizen.

With the support of team management, Ramirez left Boston after Sunday's 8-4 loss to the Kansas City Royals. He was expected back for Tuesday night's second game of a three-game series against Cleveland.

"He was going to get a day off (Saturday), but something neat came up," Red Sox manager Terry Francona said. "It turns out he's down in Miami to become a United States citizen. It's been a long process, and today is the day."

Not even a player of Ramirez's accomplishments — an AL batting championship in 2002 and a $20 million salary — could schedule it for a Red Sox off day.

"It's the timing," Francona said. "If he didn't do it today, we're not talking about (a delay of) weeks or months. It's like, maybe, a year."

General manager Theo Epstein said, "It's an excused absence."

Without Ramirez, Brian Daubach started in his place in left field and Kevin Millar replaced him in the cleanup spot against Cleveland on Monday night.

Ramirez "has our full support on this," Francona said. "He went about it the right way."

After Sunday's games, Ramirez was third in the AL with a .369 batting average, tied for third with eight homers and second with 45 hits in 31 games. He has hits in his last six games, batting .435 with three homers in that stretch.

Ramirez, who turns 32 on May 30, was born in the Dominican Republic and came to the United States at age 13. He graduated from George Washington High School in the Bronx, New York, and lives in Fort Lauderdale.

Ramirez didn't tell all his teammates about Monday's appointment. David Ortiz, one of his friends on the team, said he didn't have any details.

"All I know is that he's going down to Florida (Monday) to do some personal business," Ortiz said.

"I guess it's something very important to him," said Ortiz, who graduated from high school in the Dominican Republic and isn't a U.S. citizen. "You know how that works. When they give you a day, you've got to show up. Otherwise, they delay."

Ramirez led the AL with a .349 batting average in 2002 and was second to teammate Bill Mueller last season at .325.

"When you decide to do it, you just go for it," Ortiz said. Ramirez "will be back here ... happy."

ABSOLUTE NUTRITION
Weight Loss and Body Building Specialists

65 University Drive
Next to Beach Club Tanning
687-6083

Library Construction Project Begins June 1, 2004

Due to construction around the W.E.B. Du Bois Library this summer, library hours will be reduced. But our services will not!

Call 545-0414 for updates and the most current hours.

- The Du Bois Library will be open Saturdays 10 am-5 pm, Mon–Thurs. 1 pm–7 pm, and Fri 1 pm-5 pm.
- ISEL will be open Mon–Fri, 8 am–5 pm.
- 24/7 services at www.library.umass.edu
  - 329 databases
  - 11,771 electronic journals
  - 75,075 electronic books
  - 24-hour reference service

We look forward to telling you about the new facilities and services the Library plans to offer. More news this fall.

Monday, May 24 – Friday, May 28

Library	Mon-Thurs	Fri
Du Bois Library*	8:00 am – 5:00 pm	8:00 am – 4:00 pm
Map Collection	1:00 pm – 5:00 pm	1:00 pm – 4:00 pm
Special Collections & Archives	10:00 am – 3:00 pm	10:00 am – 3:00 pm
Music Reserve Lab	By appt (577-2711)
Integrated Sciences & Engineering Library (ISEL)	8:00 am – 5:00 pm	8:00 am – 4:00 pm

Exceptions

All libraries closed Memorial Day weekend, Sat, May 29 - Mon, May 31.
ISEL will be open from 10:00 am – 5:00 pm Sat, June 5 (Alumni weekend).
All libraries closed Independence Day weekend, Sat, July 3 - Mon, July 5.
All libraries closed Sat, August 21 and Sat, August 28.
All libraries closed Labor Day weekend, Sat, Sept 4 - Mon, Sept 6.

Tuesday, June 1 – Sunday, August 22

Library	Mon-Thurs	Fri	Sat	Sun
Du Bois Library*	1:00 pm – 7:00 pm	1:00 pm – 5:00 pm	10:00 am – 5:00 pm	CLOSED
Map Collection	1:00 pm – 5:00 pm	1:00 pm – 5:00 pm	CLOSED	CLOSED
Special Collections & Archives	1:00 pm – 5:00 pm	1:00 pm – 5:00 pm	CLOSED	CLOSED
Music Reserve Lab	July 12 –15: 9:00 am – 1:00 pm July 19 – 22: 9:00 am – 1:00 pm	July 16: 9:00 am – 1:00 pm July 23: 9:00 am – 1:00 pm	CLOSED	CLOSED
	Other times by appt. (577-2711)
ISEL	8:00 am – 5:00 pm	8:00 am – 5:00 pm	CLOSED	CLOSED

Monday, August 23 – Friday, September 3

Library	Mon-Thurs	Fri
Du Bois Library*	1:00 pm – 5:00 pm	1:00 pm – 5:00 pm
Map Collection	1:00 pm – 5:00 pm	1:00 pm – 5:00 pm
Special Collections & Archives	1:00 pm – 5:00 pm	1:00 pm – 5:00 pm
Music Reserve Lab	By appt (577-2711)
ISEL	8:00 am – 5:00 pm	8:00 am – 5:00 pm

*includes: Circulation (5-2622), Current Periodicals and Microforms (5-6854), Reference (5-0150), and Reserves and Media (5-2358)

A major league journey for Braves' Jesse Garcia

By Paul Newberry
Associated Press

ATLANTA (AP) — Journeyman. It's the most dreaded of labels for a professional athlete.

Just ask Jesse Garcia, who showed up at spring training last year for the Atlanta Braves coming off a .300 season at Triple-A. What did that earn him? For the first two weeks, he didn't even get in a game, relegated to the back fields with all the up-and-comers and down-and-outers.

"That was a low point," Garcia said. "Sometimes, you just have to sit back and wonder, 'What kind of player am I? Am I good enough or not?'"

He stuck with it, played in the Triple-A All-Star game, and finally convinced a few people that he might be useful as a utility infielder in the majors.

At 30, Garcia made Atlanta's opening-day roster. With shortstop Rafael Furcal and second baseman Marcus Giles plagued by injuries, Garcia has become an integral part of the team.

As of Monday, Garcia was batting .313 with one homer — his first in the big leagues since 1999 — and eight RBIs. He's been one of the few bright spots for an ailing team, which is two games under .500 as it bids for a 13th straight division title.

But Garcia knows his position is still tenuous. He's a journeyman, remember? Those guys can never get too comfortable.

Giles and Furcal could return to the lineup Tuesday for the start of a series at St. Louis. If that happens, Garcia will shuffle back to the bench, hopeful that his contributions so far strengthened his spot on the 25-man roster.

"He's a grinder, man," said teammate Mark DeRosa, who went through a similar effort to prove himself. "He's willing to do whatever it takes to stick here."

Garcia has been Atlanta's version of Forrest Gump, popping up in the middle of all sorts of improbable moments this season.

He homered last month against Florida — off World Series hero Josh Beckett, no less. Last week, Garcia helped turn a triple play against San Diego.

Over the weekend, he rallied the Braves to a win over Houston — first, convincing the umps that he was grazed by a pitch in the eighth, leading to two runs; then, driving in the tying run with a ninth-inning triple.

"It's just a matter of getting an opportunity," Garcia said. "I'm doing fairly well, but I've got to keep it up."

Better than anyone, he knows past perceptions are never very far behind.

Garcia is only 5-foot-10 and 171 pounds — hardly the prototype player for this homer-crazy era. He might have fit in better in the 1970s and '80s, where a middle infielder didn't have to worry about hitting for power. These days, everyone is expected to knock the ball over the fence.

A superb athlete, Garcia played four sports in high school and won several titles as a Golden Gloves boxer. But his baseball career got sidetracked in 1994, when he missed the entire season because of pneumonia.

Garcia struggled to catch up, finally making it to the big leagues in 1999 with Baltimore. But he lasted less than two weeks, getting farmed out when Delino DeShields came off the disabled list.

"He had the defensive skills," remembered Frank Wren, now the Braves' assistant general manager and GM of the Orioles at the time. "He didn't have the offensive skills."

DeShields isn't around anymore, but Garcia kept plugging away. After spending most of 1999 and 2000 with Baltimore's Triple-A team — with brief stints in the majors both years — he was traded to the Braves in one of those obscure offseason deals. Garcia wanted a fresh start. Instead, he found more of the same.

He was usually called up by the Braves when rosters expanded in the final month. He played a career-high 39 games in 2002, but only because Giles and DeRosa were injured.

Garcia was viewed as valuable insurance to have around, but little more than a Triple-A player. His career average in the majors was .197 entering this season. He spent most of the past six years at the top rung of the minors. He couldn't seem to shake that dreaded label: journeyman.

Thurman arrested on drug charges

MARK HATTLER/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Former NFL running back Thurman Thomas watches the flight after teeing off at the Cornelius Bennett Celebrity Golf Classic last Friday. Thomas was arrested early Saturday and charged with marijuana possession, according to police.

FAIRHOPE, Ala. (AP) — Former NFL running back Thurman Thomas was arrested over the weekend and charged with marijuana possession, according to police.

Thomas, who was in town to play in a charity golf tournament, was arrested at the Grand Hotel around 2 a.m. Saturday. He had one partially smoked marijuana cigarette in his possession and appeared to be under the influence of alcohol or marijuana, Fairhope police spokesman Cpl. Craig Sawyer said Monday.

Thomas did not immediately return a phone call from The Associated Press Monday. His wife, Patti, said her husband was "caught up in an uncomfortable situation with a couple of his buddies."

"Basically, what he has said was some other guys were with him and because it was near his room, he got caught up in it," Patti Thomas said. "He's not claiming any responsibility for it."

Thomas, 37, was charged with second-degree possession of marijuana, a Class A misdemeanor reserved for people who have the drug for personal use.

Thomas was booked at Fairhope City Jail and was released in time to play his round of golf Saturday morning.

"There was no disorderly conduct or belligerent behavior, and he did not resist arrest," Fairhope police Cpl. Craig Sawyer Monday.

In 13 seasons with the Buffalo Bills and Miami Dolphins, Thomas rushed for 12,074 yards and 65 touchdowns. He played in four straight Super Bowls as a member of the Bills, from 1991 through 1994.

Thomas was a five-time Pro-Bowl selection and was named the NFL's Most Valuable Player in 1991.

Last year, he admitted to being a recovering alcoholic and said he had spent 28 days in a rehabilitation program in Minnesota.

—Associated Press

Old friends meet up at Derby

By Richard Rosenblatt
Associated Press

BENSALEM, Pa. (AP) — In the heady aftermath of the Kentucky Derby, hours after guiding Smarty Jones to the winner's circle, Stewart Elliott spotted an acquaintance at a party.

Weaving his way through well-wishers, Elliott grasped Ralph Riviezzo's hand and shook it. The trainer began congratulating him on a brilliant ride, but Elliott changed the subject:

"I just wanted to thank you," the 39-year-old jockey told the longtime Philadelphia Park trainer.

For what? Riviezzo asked.

Nearly 20 years ago, Riviezzo slipped Elliott a $100 tip after the rider brought home one of his horses. Elliott never forgot.

"I couldn't believe it," Riviezzo recalled last week at Philly Park. "He's just won the Kentucky Derby, and he says to me: 'I was going through a little bit of a bad time, things were going slow, and I won a race for you. You handed me a hundred and told me to take out my girlfriend. That was real nice of you.'"

That, says Riviezzo, is all you need to know about Elliott: "A class act all the way. What a mind-set."

Ask people about Elliott, and the same words keep coming up repeatedly: dedicated, loyal, modest, reserved. And, of course, talented.

"This is what I do, I ride horses," Elliott said last week at a favorite restaurant near his home in Washington Crossing, Pa. "I work hard at it. It's all I know. I gave up my education for this. I've been through a lot, but I've been very fortunate."

The ultimate journeyman jockey, Elliott is now part of this season's most riveting racing story.

Smarty Jones is the first undefeated Derby winner since 1977 Triple Crown winner Seattle Slew, and with Elliott and trainer John Servis along for the ride of their lives, the speedy chestnut colt looks to be in top form for Saturday's Preakness Stakes.

Should Smarty party home first in the second leg of the Triple Crown, it would set the stage for the sixth Triple try in eight years at the Belmont Stakes on June 5. The last Triple Crown winner was Affirmed in 1978.

"I still think he's overwhelmed by all this," said Lauren Vannozzi, Elliott's fiancee and a former jockey. "None of this is going to sink in until we have some time to sit down and take it all in. But I can tell you he's very deserving of all this."

Elliott has won more than 3,200 races since dropping out of school after eighth grade to pursue a riding career. He started riding three years later at 16 and has climbed aboard thoroughbreds at nearly 30 racetracks in the Northeast — from Canada to New England, from New Jersey to Florida.

He's broken collarbones and legs and punctured a lung. After a horse flipped at the start of a race at Calder in the 1980s, Elliott landed back-first on the rail. His weight ballooned during his recovery, and he quit riding. He exercised horses in several states for two years before making it back.

"I didn't know what else to do, so I just found a way to ride again," he said.

Elliott was born into a racing family. His father, Dennis, was a jockey for 23 years and now has a farm in Ocala, Fla. His mother, Myhill, is an assistant trainer at Woodbine in his native Toronto.

When Elliott was 6, the family moved to Hong Kong for about five years. They returned and bought a 25-acre farm in Mount Pleasant, N.J.

"My mom gave riding lessons and dad got some thoroughbreds and started training," Elliott said.

By 1981, Elliott was riding at Philly Park and in New Jersey. In fact, he was the leading rider at Atlantic City, beating out another apprentice, Shannon Sullivan, whose agent just happened to be Servis.

"You could see he had some talent even back then," Servis said. "We seemed to hit it off and remained friends even when he left for Boston and Florida and wherever."

After bouncing around several tracks with moderate success, Elliott returned to Philly Park about 10 years ago. He became Servis' regular rider. He bought a house. He met Vannozzi about four years ago, and an August wedding is in the works.

He's been Philly Park's leading rider three times, and is well on his way to a fourth title.

Servis loves the way Elliot rides. He's poised, patient and powerful, especially when it's time to make a move in the stretch.

"He's very laid back, very soft spoken, but completely different when he puts that helmet on," Servis said. "It's almost like 'The Sword in the Stone.' When he puts that helmet on, he portrays confidence, and when it's off, you see him around he doesn't have a lot to say."

Elliott won't bite: "I don't think so. I'm pretty much the same person."

Presented by: Nobody's Perfect

EXPRESS
Women's & Men's
baby phat

WAREHOUSE CLOTHING SALE

1st Quality Merchandise!!

GOT CLOTHES?

4 DAYS ONLY

WARE SALE

NOBODY'S PERFECT

Student Union Ballroom

WAREHOUSE SALE

May 10th - 13th

VISA MasterCard UCard

Moving Off Campus?

THINK
before you sign a lease or sublet!

*Show your lease to one of our lawyers.

Learn your rights and obligations as a tenant and roomate

Student Legal Services Office
922 Campus Center
545-1995
University of Massachusetts Amherst

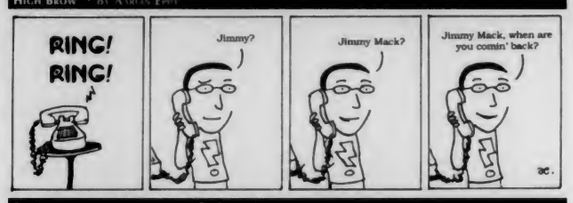
The International Award Winning
Commencement Ball 2004

Friday, May 21, 2004
7:00 pm to 12:30 am, Student Union Complex
A Night to Remember!

Commencement Ball 2004 is supported by:
UMass Amherst Alumni Association, Chancellor's Office, University Advancement, Office of Student Affairs and Campus Life, College of Humanities & Fine Arts, Isenberg School of Management, College of Natural Sciences & Mathematics, College of Social and Behavioral Sciences, Dean of Students Office, Auxiliary Services, Housing Services & Residence Life, University Catering

ALUMNI

THE ZOOT • By Jason Sacks



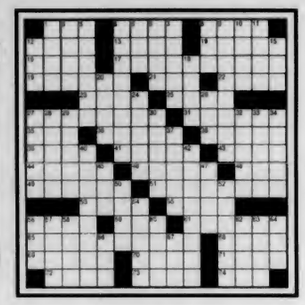
FISH HOOPER • By Kevin D. Kennedy

GET FUZZY • By Darby Conley

HIGH BROW • By Aaron Epps

THE INSURRECTION OF MURIDAE • By Sarah Holtman

QUOTE FOR THE DAY



"Don't say you don't have enough time. You have exactly the same number of hours per day that were given to Helen Keller, Pasteur, Michaelangelo, Mother Teresa, Leonardo da Vinci, Thomas Jefferson, and Albert Einstein."

-H. Jackson Brown

TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

ACROSS
1 Family nickname
4 Pigs' digs
8 Mary Kay rival
12 "The Chinaberry Tree" novelist
13 Nut or bolt
14 Check for ID (2 wds.)
16 — & The Gang
17 Syrup source (2 wds.)
18 Finally (2 wds.)
21 Make tracks
22 Ore deposit
23 Pain relievers
25 Rocket
27 Airport events
31 Pouring aid
35 Spike or Bruce
36 Upright
38 Actress — Davis
39 Breathing spell
41 Sweetie pies
43 Bridge section
45 Actress Hatcher
46 Aristotle's teacher
48 Fighter pilot
50 Too bulky
51 Hardware items
53 Sis lift (hyph.)
56 Stepped on it
58 Hindu princess
59 Flowery month
60 Percolating
65 Perch
66 In a while
67 Freighter hazards
70 Got longer
71 Trace
72 Sit down
73 Blissful spot
74 Sight of consent

DOWN
1 Coin receiver
2 Teen hood
3 Deli meat
4 Brief note
5 Grassland bird
6 Almost, in poems
7 Proggers
8 Cash giver
9 Pecker connections
10 Hunt-and-peck since
11 Sudden shout
12 Alias
15 Born as 19 Coral ridge
20 Keep
24 Go dormant
26 Large cup
27 Islamic deity
29 Be frugal
30 Bird lookalike
32 Snake-swimming kingdom
33 Legislate
34 Bowling alley button
37 Band carriers
40 Trafficker
42 Reeqn (2 wds.)
44 Bird beak
47 Follow orders
50 Hunter's wear
52 Ukrainian port
54 Mountain chain
58 Joplin genre
57 Bird's distance
58 Cleopatra's river
60 Unit of length
62 Sioux City site
63 Wyle or Yannick
64 Stat for Greenspan
66 Egg: endings
67 Wallace or Vidal

THE HARP
Irish Pub
413-548-6900 www.theharp.net
163 Sunderland Rd.- N. Amherst
Just north of the apartments
Great new deck!
TUES. Team Pub Trivia! Win Money and Prizes
WED. Harp Reggae Night
April Special!
Molson:
$2.00 A pint / $6.50 A pitcher
"Start your own tradition"

Dining Commons Menu
D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Nuggets
- Sloppy Joes
- Curried Vegetables (vegan)

DINNER
- Grilled Boneless Pork Chops
- Turkey Divan
- Grilled Portabella Mushroom Steaks (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast
For Amherst

TUESDAY
- High: 84
- Low: 55

WEDNESDAY
- High: 78
- Low: 55

THURSDAY
- High: 81
- Low: 58

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Sheryl Wolnik
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Andy Tamulynas
COPY EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Samantha Nielsen/ Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Glen Straub/ Nikolas P. Markantonatos

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Remember, you have to tease your hair. Tease it.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You will never see your glasses again.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Make up your mind, none of this wishy-washy business.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't love the one you're with, just because. Never settle.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
The Holyoke Mall is calling your name.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
The professor can see you doodling in class.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
I bet you could eat a block of cheese, or two.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Stop throwing all your junk in the hallway.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Take a few moments to reminisce about this weekend.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Soon you will have a little, furry creature of your very own.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Stop jinxing everyone around you.

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You're a small fish in a very big pond.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Apt 2bdrm For Rent 253-2149 AmherstCenter Awesomelocation

Puffton Village 2 Bdrm Apt Avail. Lease begins in June Free Heat and Hot Water Call (914) 393-9505

Mill Valley Estates now Renting 2 bedrm $1050/1100. 4 bedrm $2100 available 6/1/04 No last months rent Free Heat & Hot Water 2 full baths, AC, On busline Mon-Fri 10-5pm 253-7377

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 Geo Prism 113,000 miles great condition New Timing Belt 4 New Tires $1200.00 O.B.O. 577-5129 665-7731

Ford Probe SE 1996 $1075 Call 413-687-7510. Moreza@cns.umass.edu

Honda Civic EX 99 4DR Manual 68K mi. A/C Alarm Great condition $8200 545-1291

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Honda Accord LX 4 door sedan 149K miles good condition $2000 253-6784

EMPLOYMENT

Babysitter position available in Amherst starting 9/11/04 Afternoons and possibly some full days for a 6 and 10 year old. Help with homework, play dates, activities. French speaking preferred. Free room possibly negotiable. Please send letter and CV to Betsy Chiasson 103 Converse Hall Amherst College P.O Box 5000 Amherst, MA 01002

Summer on Cape Cod: Hang out with 2 low maintenance boys 8 and 11. Several days a week. No nights, no weekends. Free room and board plus $50.00 per week Call Jack at 508-888-5230.

Play sports! Have fun! Save Money! Sports Camp in Maine. Coaches needed: Tennis, Basketball, Baseball, Water-sports, Ropes Course, Golf, Archery, and more. Work Outdoors and Have a Great Summer! Call Free: (888) 844-8090 or Apply: www.campcedar.com

EMPLOYMENT

Activism
Summer Jobs
For the Environment
$300-$500/Summer Join the state's largest public interest grassroots organization to protect our environment, public health, human rights and democracy. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Bobby 1-413-256-6434

Summer Office Help Needed! Amherst Leisure Services is looking for a summer registration clerk to begin mid to late may. Duties include: customer service, accepting registrations and payments for numerous programs, data entry, answering phones, filing, and other clerical duties in a busy recreation department. Preferred hours are M-F 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m., but may be flexible. Pay range is $7.44-8.61/hr. depending upon experience. Apply at: Town of Amherst Leisure Services, 70 Boltwood Walk, Bangs Community Center, Amherst, MA 01002. Resumes and letters of inquiry may also be sent to: sleonstang@town.amherst.ma.us. For further information, call Pat t 413-256-4065.

EMPLOYMENT

BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Summer teenage bicycling trips. USA, Canada, Europe. Salary plus expense paid. Student Hostelling Program, P.O. Box 419, Conway, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132. www.bicycletrips.com.

Greenfield Secure Self Storage seeks student P/T to rent our self storage units on campus 413-775-0074

Painters Wanted in Amherst Area. No Experience Necessary Call Alison@413-627-9043

LIFEGUARD Brandywine Apts. needs a certified lifeguard. Call or stop by. 549-0600

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

Lowell Area Driven Leader needed to be crew chief for one of the state's largest exterior house painting companies. Must be hardworking, Independent & have own car. Exp. preferred, but not necessary. Call Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

EMPLOYMENT

Painters Wanted in Danvers area want a challenging Job outdoors w/good $$$.' Seeking driven, Hardworking Individual w/own car to be a painting crew member. No exp. necessary Call: Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Hardworking individuals living around 93/95 belt South of I-90 for fulltime painter positions. Challenging job requires independence, own car. $10-$12 base rate. Call Will @ 617-699-8970

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413)584-4746

Students wanted for a summer painting job. $400 - $600/ week. Experience not needed but a plus. All hired will go through a paid training program. Call 888-277-9787 or go to COLLEGE-PRO.COM. Work with friends.

Buenos Y Sano is hiring for positions for fall semester please apply in person Call for directions 253-4000

EMPLOYMENT

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc.. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

FOR SALE

Microfridge for sale Terrific Condition for $600.00 Asking $300.00 or best offer Call 546-1377.

FURNITURE FOR SALE

Furniture and Two Cars for Sale Call for details (413) 536-7933

Graduating in May everything must go Call 549-0069

HOUSE FOR RENT

3 Bedrooms 2 baths on bus line Amherst 413-323-6453

5 Bedroom house. 2 1/2 miles. On bus-line. Washer/dryer Home 253-3670 leave a message, or cell 413-530-6906.

Hadley 5 Bedroom Plus home, 2 baths w/ laundry hookup. Large yard, minutes from UMass. 549-4270

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female roommate wanted to share 2-bd apt in Sunderland. $418/mo. Includes heat, hot water, and cable. Available 6/1 or earlier Call Lauren @ 860-604-6068.

SERVICES

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-0992

SUMMER SUBLET

Avoid Puffton waiting list 3bed 2bath Puffton upgraded $1305/mo June1-August 31 '04 or take our lease to '05 549-5929

1 bedroom in Puffton for Sublet starting June 1st. Call Stacey at 695-2944 $750 negotiable possible Fall option.

2 Lg Bdrm apt Main St on bus route Minutes from UMass Summer with Fall option 256-1146

SUMMER SUBLET

1 Bdrm Apt in Cliffside Call 665-1218

Live downtown this summer! Large 4BR 2 flush apt next to Amherst T.H. Washer & dryer included. 5 min. to bus stop & town. ONLY $362.50 per room + utilities. Available 6/1 thru 8/15. Contact Robagra@student.umass.edu/978-808-7322

2 bedrooms, fully furnished apartment, 1 full bath. Available June 1st. September 1st. Call Rachel Szyman @ 781-264-1512

TRAVEL

Florida only $69 one way all taxes included Mexico/Caribbean $125 each way all taxes included. Europe $169 one way. Book on-line www.airtech.com or (212) 219-7000

WANTED

EGG DONORS NEEDED: Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.robertmichelesq.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MAY 11, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen take ECAC crown

By Matt Barstow
Collegian Staff

Good times seem to keep rolling for the Massachusetts women's crew team, which picked up another victory over the weekend at the ECAC/Metro Cup Championships. Massachusetts is currently ranked No. 17 in the nation by the Collegiate Rowing Coaches Association poll, its best standing since 1999.

Calm water and beautiful weather led to fast races and even faster victory times for three Minutewomen boats on Worcester's Lake Quinsigamond during the Grand Finals on Sunday. The first and second Maroon and White varsity eights and the novice eight helped UMass to its second consecutive Metro Cup title, with victories over nine competing Division I schools. Colgate took bronze in three events and finished second overall.

Lauren Cromwell and Lizzy Boyle led the UMass varsity eight to a 13-second victory over Villanova, from the five and seven seats, respectively. Senior captain Katie O'Brien occupied the four seat as usual, while Leah Jakobsen, Stephanie Hoph and Faith Harkins rounded out the boat's "engine room." Hayley McGrath rowed at stroke, Faith Harkins sat in the two seat, Carrie Champigny acted as the boat's coxswain and Cat Gariepy added muscle in the bow.

The UMass first varsity eight has faced the top rowers from 55 schools thus far, and has defeated all but one crew.

Fifth ranked Brown bested the Minutewomen by less than five seconds on April 10, during a tri-meet between UMass, Brown and Rutgers. The small margin of victory will bode well for the Minutewomen come May 18, when a committee will select 16 schools to compete in the NCAA Rowing Championships, May 28-30 in Sacramento, Calif.

With his team positioned as the 17th seed, UMass coach Jim Dietz hopes Cornell will swap spots with the Minutewomen as the cutoff team — an option made possible this weekend when Cornell placed fourth in the weekend's Eastern Association of Women's Rowing Colleges Sprints. On April 24, The Big Red fell to Brown by 10 seconds during the tri-meet's first varsity eight competition.

"We'll find out our regional ranking Wednesday, but it looks like we'll continue to be locked into second behind Princeton. My guess would be that we'll move up and be able to send our varsity eight to the NCAA's," head coach Jim Dietz said. "All that's left to do now is hang out and train."

In the second varsity eight competition, Massachusetts raced to victory in 7:14.14. Rhode Island finished second in 7:15.31 and Colgate placed third, with a time of 7:16.74.

The UMass boat was manned by senior captain Kate Bonner at stroke, Naomi Rudov in the seven seat, Faith Miller in the six and Gabriella Papineau in the five. Katie Berger, Katie Freeley and Melissa Stewart were also part of the winning crew. Laura Hutchinson filled in the bow, and pulled double-duty on the day by sitting in for an ill teammate in the second-place JV four.

Three seconds and half a boat's length was all the separation the UMass novice eight could put between itself and Marist, en route to the third and final Massachusetts victory of the day. The novice crew was steered to victory by Kristina Ferraro with help from Jamie Dicke, Kristen Boyce and Jess Bridge.

Massachusetts is coming off last weekend's victory at the Atlantic 10 Championships, where the Minutewomen earned their ninth consecutive title. If they advance to the NCAA Championships, it will be the first time in five years and third time since the program's inauguration in 1995. UMass has never won a national title but has finished second twice.

Florida can't have baseball

Bob McGovern

I tried. I really tried.

After following the Florida Marlins for the last seven years it's becoming more and more imminent that baseball simply can't survive in Florida. It is going to move elsewhere ... can you say, "viva Las Vegas?"

It's not just the fact that the Fish won't be getting a new stadium; it's the weather, the fans, and the allegiances in each county spurned by spring training and the minor league system.

May 1 was the deadline, it came and went, and now it goes without question that the Marlins will not be getting a new home. It seems a bit ridiculous that a team with two World Series rings in ten years is stuck in a veritable concrete jungle that is the home to the Dolphins, the most popular choke-artists in the state.

So now last year's champions will be forced to play for a few more years in front of respectable crowds, lost in a sea of orange and powder blue. That is unless lady luck ships them halfway across the country.

On the bright side, Las Vegas will most likely get the least amount of rain delays.

It's hard to pin this solely on the state legislature; this one runs a little deeper than simple politics. It is that little issue of tradition, or lack thereof, that will cause the Marlins to take their brief history to the City of Sin.

Florida loves its football. It loves it so much that when both college and pro football are in full effect, Saturday and Sunday afternoons are silent. People slowly get drunk rooting for one of the big three (Gators, Seminoles, and the Hurricanes), then sit-off their hangovers on Sunday watching the Dolphins.

When another team starts to get a little bit of the spotlight, the Florida media still puts it secondary to whatever the big story is on the gridiron. I've watched it happen to almost every team, but not as bad as it's hit the Marlins.

The Heat receive modest press about their modest team, the Lightning and the Panthers have been doormats (with the exception of the Lightning this year), and the Devil Rays were given the warehouse known as Tropicana Field to play on.

All the while, the Buccaneers received a stadium fully equipped with a pirate ship, functioning cannons and all, and the Dolphins, well the Dolphins have to "suffer" through one or two games with a baseball diamond on the field.

Another part of this issue derives from our friendly visitors from the north.

Snow Birds, that's what we call them. They are the Buick-driving, knuckles over the steering wheel, old northerners that come down to Florida in droves to marinate on the beaches until the summer burns them awas.

They settle in small communities at their timeshares and clog our roads with driving techniques that have added many teeth-marks to my steering wheel. Their presence is perfectly timed as it usually coincides with the commencement of spring training.

Each major city has a major league team that comes down and a minor league spin-off. My town, Vero Beach, is inhabited by the Los Angeles Dodgers.

Because of this, the townsfolk and the Snow Birds tend to root for the team that they can travel five minutes to see rather than two hours. With this comes revenue, revenue that neither the Marlins nor the Devil Rays will ever see.

Aside from the fans that live in either Tampa or Miami, most baseball fans would rather stay at home, or watch their favorite team play on television. When you ask kids in my town who their favorite team is you better believe it is a squad that plays nearly two thousand miles away.

Of all the marketing ploys that baseball teams in Florida have tried, I think putting the Devil Rays in the AL East was the most intelligent. That way they get to play the team who most of the fans there follow anyways.

The New York Yankees.

Bob McGovern is a Collegian columnist.

Swinging to recovery

BOSTON (AP) — Red Sox shortstop Nomar Garciaparra took batting practice Saturday for the first time since injuring his right Achilles tendon in spring training.

"I'm definitely excited to be out here," he said before Boston's game against the Kansas City Royals. "I can see it is improving every day, and when you see that, it starts to get exciting."

Garciaparra had just eight at-bats this spring before he was injured. Although the team initially hoped he could be ready for the start of the season, his rehab has been slower than first expected.

The Red Sox shortstop, who can become a free agent after the season, said he has no timetable for a return. He said he feels OK in the field but hasn't tested himself on some plays, like going to his right.

"I don't like to jump the gun and say it's going to be all right," he said. "There's going to be a setback, there's going to be those days when it's really sore and some inflammation. Those days are expected. The important thing is to not let those days get you down and go, 'Uh oh, am I going backwards?'"

Garciaparra worked out on Friday by playing a simulated game, hitting off a tee, running the bases and taking some grounders. Garciaparra said he plans to stay in Boston until he is ready for a rehab assignment in the minors.

"You can't just jump into the big leagues as much as you'd like to think you can," he said. "You need to face live pitching."

Also Saturday, rightfielder Trot Nixon (left quadriceps, herniated disk) was examined by Red Sox medical director Bill Morgan.

"He had another MRI and it didn't show anything that required treatment," manager Terry Francona said. "He hit and hit well and he'll stay [in Boston] for a few days. He is starting to improve."

—Associated Press

CHARLES KRUPA/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Boston Red Sox shortstop Nomar Garciaparra, bottom, and outfielder Trot Nixon, rear, watch a Bill Mueller fly out from the dugout during the second inning against the Kansas City Royals.

New England Patriots visit the White House for second time

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Bush huddled at the White House for a second time with New England Patriots, winner of two Super Bowls.

"Congratulations for getting back here to the Rose Garden," Bush told the team Monday. "My hope, of course, is that I'm back here again to see you next year."

In January, New England won its second Super Bowl in three years, beating Carolina 32-29 on Adam Vinatieri's 41-yard field goal with four seconds left. Two years before, Vinatieri kicked the game-winner as time expired in New England's 20-17 win over the St. Louis Rams to give the Patriots their first National Football League championship.

"I appreciate the dramatic comebacks that you are capable of making," Bush said. "I like it when a kicker ends up winning the game. ... I know Adam is with us today. I am really impressed at how cool you are under fire. And how — like I need a few suggestions before a press conference, if you don't mind."

While lauding the team's undefeated record at home, Bush has special praise for the players' commitment to volunteer service. Team members have given thousands of hours to community groups across the state and New England.

"That is an unbelievably important example for champions to set for others," said Bush. "It's one thing to be a champ on the field, and obviously, that's what every player strives for. But to be able to be a complete person like you have been is really important."

Bush also singled out quarterback Tom Brady, who was a guest of first lady Laura Bush at the president's State of the Union speech in January. "I'm trying to figure out what it's like to be around a real celebrity," Bush joked about Brady.

Also on hand for the Rose Garden ceremony was Patriots coach Bill Belichick, and Congress members from Massachusetts, Reps. Edward Markey and James McGovern, both Democrats.

—Associated Press

KEVIN LAMARQUE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

President Bush, center, speaks after meeting with the 2004 National Football League champion New England Patriots, yesterday, in the Rose Garden of the White House.

Bryant's alleged rape victim testifies in pretrial hearings for second time

EAGLE, Colo. (AP) — The 19-year-old woman accusing NBA star Kobe Bryant of rape slipped into the courthouse through a fire exit Monday to testify for only the second time since the case began.

Kobe Bryant and defense attorney Pamela Mackey cleared security as they arrive for the start of Monday's pretrial hearing.

Pretrial hearings were held behind closed doors all day, so it was impossible to determine why she was called in. The woman's attorney, John Clune, was with her.

The woman was questioned for more than three hours during a March 24 hearing. Bryant's attorneys want details of her sex life — especially in the three days surrounding her June 30 encounter with Bryant — admitted as evidence to suggest she was injured by someone else.

Prosecutors probably wanted the woman back in the courtroom to rebut testimony from other witnesses, said Lisa Wayne, a Denver defense attorney who has tried numerous sexual assault cases.

"It would have to be something crucial," she said. "I'm assuming the prosecution had some very hard evidence on certain issues the defense has put forth."

The hearing on the relevancy of the sexual history has been going on for days. It resumed Monday, along with arguments on a separate defense motion to introduce evidence about the woman's mental health, two purported suicide attempts last spring and any evidence about alcohol or drug use.

Bryant, 25, has said he had consensual sex with the woman last summer at the Vail-area resort where she worked. If convicted of felony sexual assault, the Los Angeles Lakers guard would face four years to life in prison or 20 years to life on probation.

Evidence from underwear the woman wore to a hospital examination did not match Bryant. Her attorney has denied she had sex with anyone after Bryant and before she reported the encounter to police. Prosecutors say her sex life is irrelevant in determining whether she was raped.

Colorado's rape-shield law generally bars defense attorneys from using an alleged victim's sex life as evidence, but there are exceptions.

Bryant will formally enter a plea during this week's three-day hearing, triggering a countdown to one of the most closely watched trials in recent memory. A trial must be set within six months of a plea, though Bryant can waive that right.

Both sides have told state District Judge Terry Ruckriegle they think a trial would take two to three weeks.

David Lugert, a former prosecutor in Eagle County, speculated the trial could begin as early as the first week of August. Other experts weren't as sure.

"If both sides believe they can be ready in early August, then yes," said Karen Steinhauser, a former prosecutor and visiting professor at the University of Denver Law School. "One thing you don't want to see happen is the trial get set and everybody is going with that in mind and you end up having to have the case [postponed]."

As the hearing began, both sides wrapped up arguments on a defense bid to bar evidence including Bryant's interview with investigators, a T-shirt stained with the woman's blood and the results of his hospital exam after the alleged attack.

The defense contends investigators botched the execution of a court order and didn't inform Bryant of his rights.

The Lakers are in the middle of a playoff series with San Antonio. Bryant is expected to fly to Los Angeles for a Tuesday night game, then return to Eagle for the final day of the hearing. He has said he hopes to play in the Aug. 13-29 Summer Olympics in Athens, but he also has acknowledged the case could make that impossible.

"Convenience to the accused is not going to be the primary factor," said Scott Robinson, a defense attorney who has followed the case. "But he [Ruckriegle] won't ignore it. If Mr. Bryant is supposed to be in the Olympic Games and there's plenty of time outside that period to try the case, then it's possible."

—Associated Press

The Daily Collegian

WEDNESDAY, MAY 12, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 138

Margaret Cho dazzles Fine Arts Center crowd
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 7

Softball to host Atlantic 10 tournament
SPORTS, PAGE 12

UMass engineering building gets $25M in improvements

By Gabriel Leiner
Collegian Correspondent

Construction was recently completed on a new $25 million engineering building named Engineering Lab II at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Engineering Laboratory II is three stories tall, 57,000 square feet in size, and now houses portions of the university's research programs in chemical engineering and civil and environmental engineering.

Chemical engineering will occupy the third floor while civil and environmental engineering will take up the first two floors.

The new facility will enable the University of Massachusetts engineering program to expand in size and provide better resources for students and faculty in the chemical engineering and civil and environmental engineering programs.

The new building includes an extensive set of laboratories and offices, a 190-seat lecture hall, which can be used to accommodate large lecture sessions from any university department. The facility also includes a 40-seat distance-learning classroom, from which courses can be delivered to industrial students throughout the country.

Alan Lutenegger, professor and department head of the Department of Civil and Environmental Engineering said the new lab will provide new equipment that students need in order to use their time more efficiently.

"The building is completely set up for wireless internet access so students can be anywhere and use the Internet without cables. The building has rooms that are equipped with the latest projectors and video devices, and there are updated research facilities."

Lutenegger added that the updated technological resources will enable the University to expand the scope of distance learning classes, which are currently based in Marcus Hall.

"The video feed devices may also be used to transmit visually the proceedings that occur in a

See ENGINEER on page 3

COURTESY UMASS REV

Engineering Laboratory II recently had $25 million worth of construction completed and houses engineering research programs.

Wiffle champs visit Fenway

By Alison Higgins
Collegian Correspondent

Wet fields and a postponed tournament didn't keep University of Massachusetts Wiffle ball champions, Team Solid, from a once-in-a-lifetime experience at Fenway Park on Wednesday, May 5.

Matt Brown, Justin Diaco, Joe DiRico, Adam Facendola, Rafael Gonzalez, Rick Gould, Brian Pinheiro and Andy Sieurin boarded a bus to Fenway with dreams of Wiffle ball stardom. But rain the day and night before kept the UMass seniors off the field.

Although rained out, the team, accompanied by Melissa Vara, assistant director for student and young alumni; Professor David Bojanic, whose event management class organized the qualifying Wiffle ball tournament locally; and members of the Coca-Cola Bottling Company in Greenfield, took a behind-the-scenes tour of Fenway Park. They saw the 406 Club, sat in the new Monster seats, toured the new seating area above the right field bleachers and got a look into some of the suites around the park.

According to Vara, the best part of the tour was when the team got to visit the Boston Red Sox's clubhouse.

"[We] did something very few other fans ever get to do...we went into the Boston Red Sox's Clubhouse! The cameras were flashing and the cell phones were a buzz with 'You'll never guess where I am!'... What an incredible experience!" she said.

The team returned home later that day without a Wiffle ball title, but far from disappointed with their experience.

Matt Brown, an accounting major and member of Team Solid said, "We were all disappointed that the field could not be played on, but it was still worth going there because we got a tour of the stadium and also were able to go into the Red Sox locker room... It was also worth it because we were told that if we would come back on Wednesday we would receive Red Sox tickets."

The New England regional office of Coca-Cola, which sponsored the event, chartered another coach for the UMass crew on Thursday, the following day, this time to clear skies and a dry field.

Unfortunately, another event scheduled for that afternoon caused the tournament to be abbreviated. Each team was split in half and played a two-inning, revised game. The nine participating teams played the modified tournament in left field, each team given equal opportunity to play and to snap photographs with the Green Monster.

Despite the inclement weather conditions, team members still said they enjoyed their visit to the ballpark.

"While the game time was definitely shortened and not a true tournament, everyone got an experience that the average Red Sox fan does not get, they got to play on the field," Vara said.

Despite the tournament complications, UMass' Team Solid still managed a standout performance according to Professor Bojanic.

"The UMass team scored the most runs of any team in the tournament given the abbreviated status of the rules, but there was no winner; all of the teams were recognized for their accomplishments," Bojanic said.

Bojanic went on to explain that the UMass team received more student support than any other college team that competed in the event.

"We... collected the most bottle caps of any school by far. Coca-Cola is going to use our school as an example of 'best practices' for our coordination of the event between Coke, Student Activities, and the academic component using my class."

For playing in the tournament, Team Solid received a trophy, t-shirts, lunch and two tickets each to a Red Sox vs. Yankees game at Fenway Park in September.

Brown said if the tournament had gone according to plan, the UMass team would have won.

"Of course," Brown said, "I think we would have won... We were named Team Solid for a reason."

COURTESY ALISON HIGGINS

Team Solid, UMass Wiffle ball championship winners, didn't get to play at Fenway due to rain, but toured the Boston Red Sox clubhouse.

Sig Ep brother and cancer survivor raises money for cause

By Kate Walsh
Collegian Staff

For some, freshman year is coming to a close and for others, it has been almost four years since freshman year. Whichever it is, each most likely remembers the obstacles as a new student as if it were yesterday.

All have faced the challenges of meeting new people, adjusting to a new environment, and finding a way to balance our social and academic lives in college.

However, few have been faced with a challenge like a Sigma Phi Epsilon brother; finding a way to beat cancer.

Angel Bermudez was diagnosed in 2000, just after his freshman year at UMass. He had spent the year living like his peers, meeting new people, adjusting to the dorms and even joined Sig Ep; he was having the typical college experience.

Then leukemia entered into his life and disrupted the normalcy of his typical college living.

"When we first found out, it was a very sensitive topic, no one really knew how to act," says senior Erik Diamond. "It was scary because everyone in the house was afraid that we were going to lose one of the brothers."

For Bermudez, the severity of his disease never quite sunk in. It was difficult for him to grasp the seriousness of the hurdle that had just been placed in front of him.

"When I was diagnosed it really didn't hit me that hard. I don't know why, I guess it's because I'm kind of a goof-ball," he joked. "I basically had to just put all of my trust in the doctors and let them do the serious stuff and my parents do the worrying."

The magnitude of support from his brothers in Sig Ep helped Bermudez to get up and over this hurdle, and ultimately beat leukemia.

During his time in the hospital, many of the brothers visited, bringing him movies.

It wasn't until 2001 that he was able to move back to UMass and into the fraternity house. But he says that the brothers continued their support even when he returned.

"When I came back I wasn't in the best of shape, and talking about it was hard because I didn't want to make it a big deal," he said. "The brothers just kept me in the loop, introduced me to new brothers, and took into consideration that I didn't want to be treated any differently."

Unfortunately, finding a way to deal with cancer wasn't a new concept to the Sig Ep brothers. One brother, who has since graduated, watched his own mother die of cancer the previous fall.

"When I found out about his mom, I had no clue what to do," said Bermudez. "I talked to my mom, and she really wanted me to talk to him because I had been through it."

It was a difficult subject for Bermudez to discuss, and so he found that, in this case, actions could speak louder than words. During his own time in the hospital, his sister gave him a rosary from Puerto Rico that had been blessed, which he kept with him while he was there.

"I figured that since I was in remission I didn't need it as much, so I gave it to him," says Bermudez. "That's basically the only thing I saw I could do for him."

The entire fraternity took action as well. Last spring, the brothers held the first "Camp Out For Cancer" to raise money for the American Cancer Society. Their goal of $1,000 was met and exceeded by $200 in three days, and so this year they decided to increase it.

In early April the brothers took turns camping out all night in front of the campus pond, determined to stay put until they reached their goal. At least three people were there at all hours of the day and night, taking donations and

See SIG EP on page 4

Officials warn UMass students against annual 'Streak Night'

By Matt Casey
Collegian Correspondent

After planning by University of Massachusetts officials and Amherst Police for the annual Hobart Hoedown ended in a weekend of minor arrests, UMass officials are aiming to stop another UMass student tradition: Streak Night.

Streak night traditionally happens the first Friday after classes end.

Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vanin distributed a letter to Northeast living area residents April 29, informing them that the UMass police department and administration will punish any student found streaking in the quad of the Northeast Residential area, and the offender may be registered by the state of Massachusetts as a sex offender.

"The University will not tolerate events that present a danger because of crowd behavior, nor will it tolerate public acts of lewdness," Vanin wrote in the letter. "I urge each of you to take responsibility for your own actions so that all residents can enjoy spring weekends without repercussions through the Code of Student Conduct or Massachusetts general law."

The Northeast Area Government is contributing to the elimination of Streak Night by hosting an alternative event on Friday.

"We're working cooperatively with the Office of Student Affairs and the Dean of Students office to put together fantastic, novel and ambitious stress relieving activities to add to the other end of the year activities," said NEAG Governor Matt Pearlson.

Pearlson says that NEAG might sponsor a midnight breakfast, a massage therapy night, or a bus trip to the Holyoke Mall or Hadley's Cinemark Theater.

"At the moment we have tentative plans and tentative permission to do something like this," Pearlson said.

NEAG failed to host an alternative event last year. Their jurisdiction technically ends on the last day of classes, preventing them from holding any events when Streak Night occurs. To get around this problem, NEAG wants to sponsor the event through the Office of Student Affairs, but pay for it with NEAG funds.

"We were very prudent in how we spent our budget," Pearlson

See STREAK on page 4

Grisly video shows U.S. civilian beheaded

Five men stand over Nick Berg, a U.S contractor whose body was found on a highway overpass in Baghdad on Saturday.

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — A video posted Tuesday on an al-Qaida-linked Web site showed the beheading of an American civilian in Iraq and said the execution was carried out to avenge abuses of Iraqi prisoners at Abu Ghraib prison.

In a grisly gesture, the executioners held up the man's head for the camera.

The American identified himself on the video as Nick Berg, a 26-year-old Philadelphia native. His body was found near a highway overpass in Baghdad on Saturday, the same day he was beheaded, a U.S. official said.

- Associated Press

Fight erupts during 50 Cent concert

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. (AP) — Police had to break up a shoving match at a club after the rapper 50 Cent and his entourage jumped from the stage during a surprise appearance and scuffled in the audience.

Two people were arrested for disturbing the peace during the incident in the Hippodrome club early Saturday morning, said Springfield Police Capt. Charles Arpin. Police were also investigating whether a nearby shooting was related.

Hippodrome co-owner Michael J. Barrasso told The Republican of Springfield that the concert sponsor, Hartford radio station WZMX-FM, had said the rap artist might make an unannounced appearance at the invitation-only hip-hop concert.

The crowd of 1,400 people did not know 50 Cent was there until he took the stage after the other acts. About 10 minutes after 50 Cent took the stage, someone in the crowd threw water at him from a cup or water bottle, Barrasso said.

"He removed his gold chain, handed it to someone on the stage next to him and jumped off the stage into the crowd," Barrasso said. The rapper's entourage, including bodyguards, also jumped off the stage.

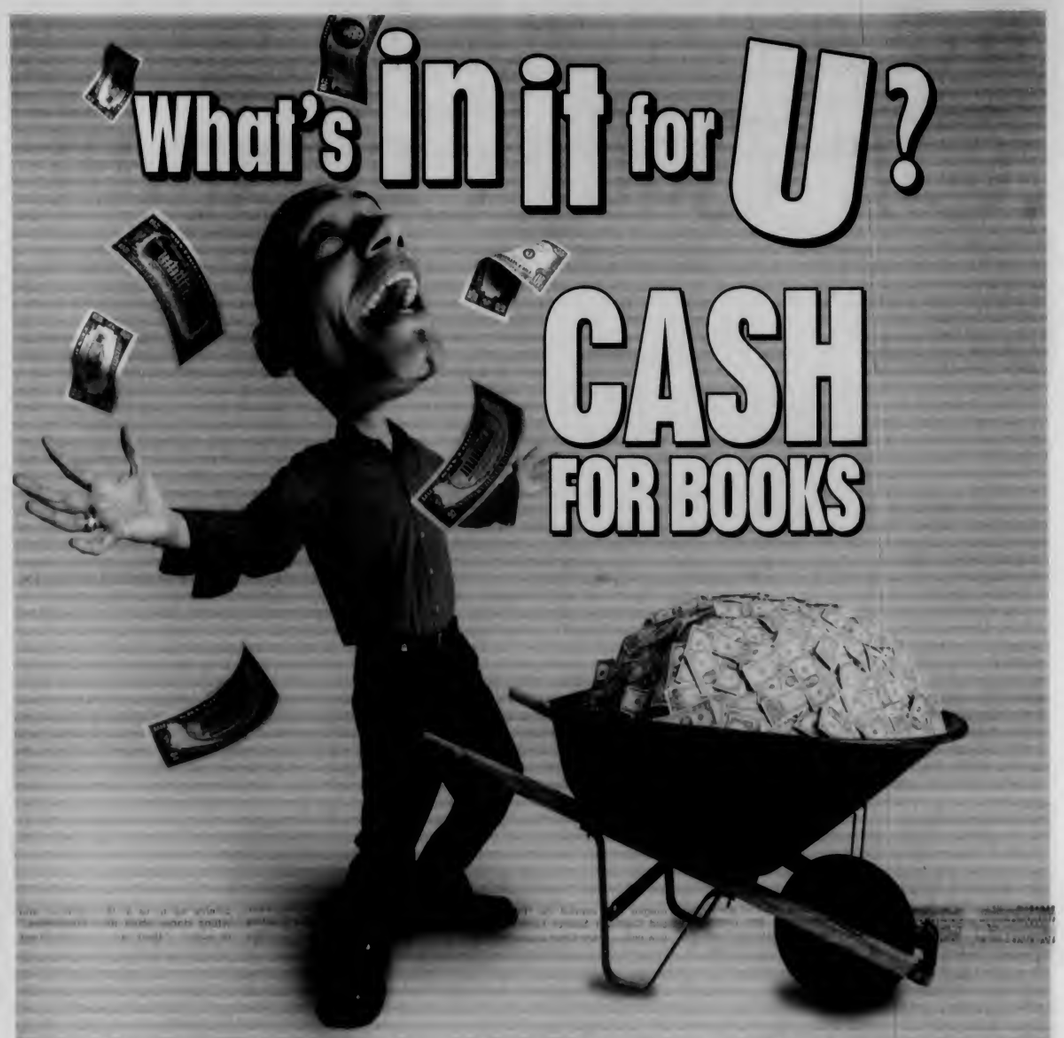
The crowd was so dense Barrasso could not tell if there was any fighting beyond pushing. Security guards had frisked the rapper and his entourage behind the stage; the rapper was wearing a Gucci holster, but the weapon it held fired only rubber pellets, Barrasso said.

Security guards in front of the stage with two extra-duty police officers, pushed the rapper and his entourage back on stage, Barrasso said. Police working in the club called for available units.

"He finished the song, believe it or not," Barrasso said. "Then the whole entourage and him just rushed for the exit, got in their cars and left."

It took police about an hour to disperse the crowd. Police arrested Trevin Smith, 23, of Springfield, and Charlton McLaughlin, 27, of Hartford, who were each charged with disturbing the peace.

After the incident, a man walked into the Mercy Medical Center emergency room with a gunshot wound to the leg at just before 1 a.m., saying he's been shot minutes before about a block from the Main Street theater. Arpin said police are not certain if the shooting was related to the disturbance to the Hippodrome.



50 Cent, whose real name is Curtis Jackson, bought a 52-room, 50,000-square-foot mansion in Farmington, Conn., last year from former boxing champion Mike Tyson's ex-wife, Monica Turner Tyson, for $4.1 million.

- Associated Press

KEVIN LAMARQUE/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Rapper 50 Cent caused a disturbance last Saturday at the Springfield Hippodrome when he jumped off stage into the crowd.

No matter where you bought them, We'll buy them back for up to 66%.*

*Current market value applies.

Lighter backpack. Heavier wallet.
Get cash and buyback bucks for books.

University of Massachusetts UNIVERSITY STORE
Amherst Campus Center
Phone: (413)545-2619
Fax: (413)545-4396

Additional Buybacks Locations:
Boyden Gym
Monday, May 17 – Friday, May 21
9:30 am – 4:00 pm

Hamden Lobby
Monday, May 17 – Friday, May 21
10:00 am – 5:00 pm

Visit us at efollett.com ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundos
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COMICS EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
FEATURES EDITOR S. J. Fort
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salniker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Puppas
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagatic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stanton
HUMAN RESOURCE Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kiggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pachaco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Higgins
ASST ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Crum
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morvin Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Amelia P. Lincoln
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marselli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALLEGE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1920. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1958, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

Weekly Calendar of events

Compiled by Sara-Megan Walsh

May 12 - May 17 2004

Today

UMass — At 5 p.m., a group of university actors will present "The History Of Comic Theater" in room 204 of the Fine Arts Center. "The History of Comic Theater" is a 45-minute presentation consisting of a compilation of various short sketches by European playwrights including: Menander, an ancient Greek; Molière, 17th century French; Shaw, 20th century English; Al Boasberg, American vaudeville writer; and a song by Livingston & Evan.

The Odyssey Bookshop in South Hadley will host "Shelf Life: Romance, Mystery, Drama, and Other Page-Turning Adventures from a Year in a Bookstore " by Suzanne Strempek Shea at 7 p.m. Shea is also the author of Hoopi Shoopi Donna.

Tomorrow

Smith College — "Top Girls," a play written by Caryl Churchill, will be performed at 8:30 p.m. in Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre of Mendenhall. The play explores the role of women in contemporary society though different female's characters perceptions of success. Tickets are $5 for students, children, and seniors and $7 general admission. The play will also run at 8:30 p.m. on Friday and Saturday.

Marion Copeland, a former Holyoke Community College professor, will speak " Cockroaches" in various aspects at 7 p.m. at the Odyssey Bookshop in the Village Commons of South Hadley. Copeland will discuss cockroaches humorously, as a food delicacy, in homeopathic cures, and in literature such as Kafka's "Metamorphosis."

Saturday 15

Smith College — Gallery Talk featuring Elliot Offner, retiring professor, who will lecture about his current exhibition at 2 p.m. in the Museum of Art. The lecture will meet in the Museum lobby.

Sunday 16

UMass — At 8 p.m., a performance Bestorfest Redux celebrating the works of Professor Emeritus Charles Bestor will be held in the Benzanson Recital Hall. The performance will feature a World Premiere by Nigel Coxe on piano; William Hite on tenor; Lynn Klock on saxophone; Eduardo Leandro on percussion; Estela Olevsky, on piano; Paulina Stark singing soprano and the Faculty Chamber Wind Ensemble as conducted by Laura Rexroth. Tickets cost from $5 to $10. All proceeds will go to the Ann Elder Bestor Memorial Scholarship Fund.

South Hadley – Odyssey Bookshop will host "Sundays with Shakespeare" at 11 a.m. out in the Village Commons in South Hadley. This Sunday features a discussion with Professor Arther Kinney of the UMass English department.

Monday 17

At 7 p.m., Odyssey Bookshop in the Village Commons in South Hadley will present the authors Vivien Labaton & Dawn Lundy Martin. Labaton, the first executive director of the Third Wave Foundation, and Martin, a found of the Third Wave and Ph. D. candidate at UMass, will present their compiled anthology of feminism voices from various directions for the new generation called "This Fire This Time."

YOU THINK IT, WE MAKE IT
MDC DESIGN
www.dailycollegian.com

Officials hope building will attract new students

ENGINEER from page 1

normal classroom to students in distance learning classes," he said. "In this way we can expand on our instructional video programs."

The building will specifically give the chemical engineering department, currently located in Goessmann Hall, greater space and better resources. According to Phillip R. Westmoreland, Head of the Department of Chemical Engineering, the new Lab will replace older labs in Marston, Marcus, and Goessmann Halls.

Research conducted by chemical engineers in Engineering Lab II will involve the use of supercritical fluids for semiconductor devices, use of plant cell cultures to treat certain types of cancer, therapeutic treatment and modeling of malignant tumors, use of soft materials tuned for specific biomedical applications, and combustion research. Chemical Engineering faculty will be working on new cancer treatments, production of pharmaceuticals, and creation of an artificial organ from pancreatic cells and polymer gels. The chemical engineering section also includes MassNanoTech research on microelectronics and anti-pollution work on deciphering flame chemistry.

Research done by civil and environmental engineers will be related to the provision of clean and safe drinking water, the treatment of wastewaters, and the protection of water resources.

Lutenegger believes that the new facility will help attract new students as well.

"I think that it's a good recruiting tool," said Lutenegger. "When you bring kids in for a campus tour and show them the new lab, it's a reason to be excited about UMass. I think it shows that people in the commonwealth are truly interested in public education."

The Engineering Lab II, which officially opened Friday, May 7 with a dedication ceremony, is part of a three-phase construction project on the north side of campus near entitled the "Engineering and Computer Science Complex". The new building now forms a quad with the Computer Science building and is located near the Silvio O. Conte National Center for Polymer Research.

The design for the building was produced by Ellenzweig Associates/Whitney Atwood Norcross.

Fraternity camps for funds

SIG EP from page 1

trying to keep warm under blankets and sleeping bags. After four days, they met their goal of $1500. Because their permit didn't expire until the next day, they stayed and raised an additional $300, increasing the total to $1,800.

Sean Musselman, Vice President of Programming for Sig Ep, plans and oversees community service events and activities for the fraternity.

He says that since Sig Ep is so committed to brotherhood that when an event impacts someone's life, the entire fraternity is impacted.

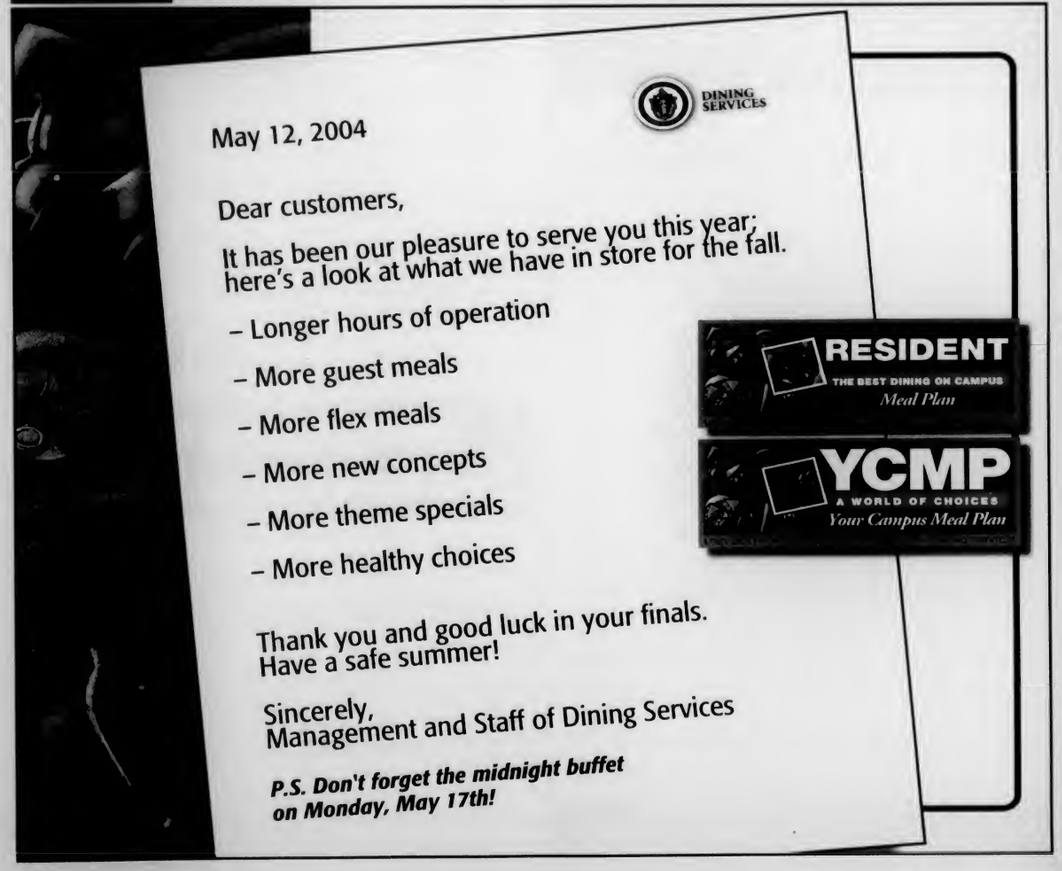
"We really come out and work very strongly on this project because we all feel connected to it and want to be a part of it," he says. We do it not because we're required to do it, but because we all want to do it, and we feel very strongly about doing it."

Philanthropy has always been a large part of Sig Ep. The fraternity does community service every month, like donating blood, having clothing drives, and raising money for organizations such as the American Red Cross, Big Brothers Big Sisters, and the Make a Wish Foundation.

"Community service is one of the fundamental things behind fraternity life in general," says Musselman. "Its purpose is to make people better members of their society."

"The whole idea behind Sig Ep is the balanced man; sound mind and sound body," says Diamond. "We do this to better ourselves as well as the community that we live in."

Out of all the fundraisers, the "Camp-Our for Cancer" is most personal to the brothers.



"I think that this is the one philanthropy we do that everybody is always into. We have other things like clean-ups, but this one hits close to home for two of the members and everybody else around us," says Bermudez.

Perhaps that is why this fundraiser was so successful. For two years its goals had been met sooner than anticipated, and even exceeded.

"Cancer has affected everyone," says Diamond. "Either it's been a family member, or a friend, or a friend's family member that has had it. People were coming up to us at the camp-out and telling stories about their experiences," he added. "There are always the direct and indirect effects."

Although all of the brothers feel very strongly about the camp-out and what it means to them, for Bermudez, it means a

See SIG EP on page 4

UMPD to patrol for streakers on Friday

STREAK from page 1

said. "We have a surplus of money that we have allocated for the possibility of this event."

Pearlson said that the administration is cooperating, but whether the alternative event can happen is still in question.

At a meeting on March 30, NEAG Treasurer Justin May suggested a "Dance in your Underpants" event as an alternative to Streak Night. May said that "Dance in your Underpants" would allow students to strip down to being "almost naked," wearing swimsuits or boxer shorts. May said Pearlson and other NEAG officers thought an event like this could turn into streaking too easily.

Whether or not the alternative event happens, UMPD plan to patrol the North East quad Friday night.

"People have a right to gather, but they do not have the right to engage in criminal acts," said UMass police Chief Barbara O'Connor.

"We'll certainly take action if the event starts to evolve," said Vanin.

The Administration and campus police cracked down on Streak Night after the event in got out of hand in the spring of 2002.

At the 2002 event, an inebriated female student performed a sexual act on an inebriated male student. This prompted police to break up the event. Six students were arrested on charges ranging from disorderly conduct to assaulting an officer.

"I can tell you that what has occurred up there since 2002 crosses the boundary of good fun to completely unacceptable behavior," said O'Connor.

Last year, Vanin distributed a similar letter to residents living in the Northeast residential area. Police prevented an event of significant size from taking shape by patrolling the quad, but several students later reported streaking after police left.

National

Clerk says he will marry gay couples

By Jennifer Peter
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Provincetown's town clerk said Tuesday he will comply with orders to issue marriage licenses to out-of-state gay couples, despite the threat of legal action by Gov. Mitt Romney.

In defiance of Romney's residency edict, the Board of Selectmen in the Cape Cod town voted unanimously Monday to issue marriage licenses to out-of-state same-sex couples.

"We would rather be sued and be on the side of right than kowtow to the governor's personal wishes," said Doug Johnstone, town clerk of this gay mecca at Cape Cod's tip. "To make people feel 'other than' or 'less than' just because of their sexual orientation is not what the ruling is all about and certainly not what Provincetown is all about."

Gay marriages will become legal in Massachusetts next week under a November ruling by the state's highest court.

Romney's office has instructed city and town clerks that out-of-state couples who do not plan to move to Massachusetts will be barred from marrying under a 1913 law that prohibits marriages that would be illegal in a couple's home state.

The Provincetown selectmen voted, however, that the town clerk could issue licenses to these couples, as long as they signed a sworn affidavit saying they knew of no impediment to their marriage in their home state.

Chancellor to-be to leave UMass

BOSTON (AP) — In 2002, University of Massachusetts President William M. Bulger recruited Jo Ann M. Gora to take over as chancellor of the UMass-Boston campus.

Tuesday, Ball State University in Muncie, Ind., was expected to announce that Gora will become that school's new president.

Calls to UMass-Boston officials for comment on the report were not immediately returned.

Last month, Gora withdrew as a finalist for the presidency of Lewis & Clark College in Portland, Ore.

Gora, who is paid $185,000 a year, pushed a $200 million dormitory plan left over from Bulger, who stepped down in 2003, but Gov. Mitt Romney eventually forced the school to cut the dorms out of its building plan. The other main component of the plan, a $75 million campus center, was finished this year.

While some faculty members have questioned Gora's leadership, Steven Schwartz, chairman of the psychology department, called Gora's departure "a blow to the university."

Schwartz was one of three department chairs who drafted a recent letter praising Gora, and which was signed by about 50 department chairs and program directors before being sent to the team that currently is reviewing her job performance.

Ball State has an enrollment of about 18,000 students.

- Associated Press

International

U.S. will most likely turn over Sadaam to Iraqis

By Diana Elias
Associated Press

KUWAIT CITY, Kuwait (AP) — The head of Iraq's war-crimes tribunal said Tuesday that the United States has pledged to hand over Saddam Hussein and about 100 other suspects to Iraqi authorities before July 1 if Iraq is ready to take them into custody. U.S. officials denied any decision had been reached.

"The coalition will hand them over if we are able to hold them in custody," Salem Chalabi told The Associated Press.

Chalabi said trials would likely begin early next year – again, "if we are ready" – and that judges would receive "files" on the suspects at the end of this year.

He earlier told local reporters that Saddam would definitely be handed over before July 1, when Iraq assumes sovereignty from its U.S.—led occupiers, and that trials would begin early next year.

"We will put 100 people ... including Saddam Hussein, on trial," he told the reporters. The suspects, he added, "will be delivered to us by the coalition before the transfer of power."

U.S. officials, who are holding Saddam in an undisclosed location, disputed the report. Secretary of State Colin Powell said he knew nothing about handing over Saddam.

Hamas militants display Israeli soliders' remains

By Ibrahim Barzak
Associated Press

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — Hamas militants triumphantly displayed remains of some of the six Israeli soldiers killed in a roadside bombing in Gaza City yesterday, prompting Israeli threats of punishing reprisals if body parts are not returned.

Eight Palestinians were killed and 123 wounded in a battle that pitted hundreds of gunmen against Israeli troops firing from tanks, helicopters and rooftops. The violence began after midnight, when a small Israeli force entered the crowded Zeitoun neighborhood to look for weapons workshops.

As the troops withdrew around daybreak, an armored personnel carrier transporting at least 220 pounds of explosives for use in the raid was shredded by the roadside bomb.

Through the day and into the night, hundreds of troops searched Zeitoun for the remains of their comrades, which were scattered across a 300- yard radius.

"We are checking every roof and every balcony in order to locate the remnants of the armored personnel carrier and the bodies of our soldiers," army Maj. Gen. Dan Harel said.

Israeli security sources said the search could take days, creating an unprecedented situation in which many Israeli troops would remain in Gaza City – a militant stronghold – for an extended period. Israeli soldiers have raided Gaza neighborhoods before but usually withdrew after a few hours.

Fraternity camps for funds

SIG EP from page 1

bit more.

"Since I've gone through [cancer] I see the camp-out as a way to give back to the community and to help people who might be going through the same thing that I went through," he said.

Bermudez and his other brothers in Sig Ep will continue to make the campout an annual fundraiser to support a cause they all feel effected by. Cancer has changed each of their lives. Bermudez found a way to beat this challenge that he was faced with, and with the efforts of the brothers, other lives can be helped.

"I have a much stronger personality and I'm more outgoing now," he said. "I think you have to just live life the way you want to live it and take it for what it is. Live it day by day."

The International Award Winning
Commencement Ball 2004
Friday, May 21, 2004
7:00 pm to 12:30 am, Student Union Complex
A Night to Remember!

Catholic Seniors:
Congratulations! You're almost done!
Thurs. May 13, 5:30-9pm
"Bringing Your Faith Forward: Transition to the Real World"
Reflect on your experience at UMass, hear from recent grads, and discuss faith in life after college (work, grad school). Free pizza! Call 549-0300 x15 to sign up.
Sun. May 16, 7pm mass
Special Mass for Seniors
Come to the 7pm student mass one last time! Each senior will get a gift as we send you forth to be stewards of Christ in the world.
Sat. May 22, 4.30pm
Baccalaureate Mass
Special Mass for Graduates and Families
Reception to follow
"Go therefore and make disciples of all the nations... And remember, I am with you always, to the end of the age."
We hope to see you there!
472 N. Pleasant St. next to Mahar and SOM 549-0300
The Newman Catholic Center

Moving Off Campus?
THINK
before you sign a lease or sublet!
*Show your lease to one of our lawyers.
Learn your rights and obligations as a tenant and roomate
Student Legal Services Office
922 Campus Center
545-1960
University of Massachusetts Amherst
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com
www.dailycollegian.com

Student Parking Notice
Exam Week Parking 5/17-5/21
During the week of May 17 – May 21, students who do not have a parking permit may park in Lots 25, 26, 27, 33 and Yellow while taking exams. If you possess a valid parking permit, please use the lot you purchased to enable others use of these lots. Use Lots 25, 26, 27, 33 and Yellow ONLY (during exam week), otherwise you will be subject to ticketing and towing.
Brought to you by UMass Parking Services – 413-545-0065. Please visit our website at http://parking.umass.edu for further information. The University community appreciates your cooperation in parking legally.
Congratulations to all graduating seniors!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MAY 12, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Mutual aid bill would benefit campus safety

Campus safety.

It's something people don't think about until there's a problem. While it has been a relatively quiet spring this year at the University of Massachusetts, problems in the past like Hobart Hoedown 2003 and the disturbances and riots in Southwest this fall have highlighted that when safety issues arise, there needs to be as many clearly defined rules as possible and as many ways as possible to handle threats to campus safety.

Clarity, however, is not something that many UMass students have when it comes to the relationship between with Amherst Police and UMass Police. The boundary lines for the two police departments cross several times, leaving jurisdiction in areas like Sunset Avenue unclear in the minds of many.

A new bill in the Massachusetts state legislature would change much of that. Known as the mutual aid bill, the legislation will give arresting powers to UMass police and Amherst police in each other's jurisdiction by recognizing the University as a town when it comes to law enforcement.

While many students may fear what the potential for an increased police presence on campus would be, the plan has positive potential and it is a relative no-brainer decision for state lawmakers in power to pass the bill.

Over the last few years, cuts in state funding have reduced the size of the UMass police department to its current size, with 57 officers. While that may be enough to patrol the campus 90 percent of the time, events like the Red Sox riots in Southwest and the Hobart Hoedown make it obvious that on occasion, the size of crowds that gather are far too large to be handled by just one department.

Events like Hobart Hoedown 2003 make it obvious how closely tied together the Amherst community and the University of Massachusetts can be, particularly when it comes to law enforcement. Violence and vandalism at the Hobart melee last spring may have started off-campus in the jurisdiction of Amherst Police, but it spilled into UMass' North Village family housing section and also resulted in tens of thousands of dollars in damage to greenhouse windows on campus.

While it is true that the two departments and, on occasion, State Police all work together from time to time, passing the mutual aid bill would also result in a better working relationship between UMass Police and Amherst Police when there are large-scale events that require the attention of dozens of officers.

Right now, the two departments have no choice but to work with each other when situations are the most stressful. It stands to reason that having the two departments be as familiar as possible with each other and the territories they do not regularly cover would improve crisis management situations our University has seen in the past.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Parental involvement costly

S.J. Port

In the fall, shocked by the abrupt dismissal of two students prior to proper hearings, I wrote a column about the University of Massachusetts administration's decision to deny students their constitutional right to the due process of law. During the spring semester, it has become alarmingly clear that the University has begun the descent down a slippery slope towards the resurrection of in-loco parentis.

The approval of parental notification following a student's second offense is as close to unconstitutional as it gets, as it denies students due process rights, as well as the right to privacy.

Certainly students at the secondary level have limited rights, due to their status as minors and the obvious governmental interest in maintaining their health and security, but as students of adult age, our rights should not be dismissed — certainly not at a powerfully liberal public campus such as UMass! If we can be tried as adults (Massachusetts tries those ages 17 and over as adults) then we must be respected as adults at the University as well.

Chancellor John Lombardi remarked, according to the Collegian, "If I was a student, I'd be angry."

Lombardi went on to support parental notification because he himself is a parent, but his remark (glib as it was) rings with warning. Student Trustee Hannah Fatemi, however, did not stand up for students when she voted with the Board of Trustees last week in favor of the change.

Fatemi said she hoped that warning parents after a second offense will decrease the chances of a third offense, which results in the students expulsion from housing. Fatemi is misguided: warning parents won't help students, especially when if the student's second violation involves anything related to riots – Hobart Hoedown and the like – they will, according to Michael Gargano, vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life, be immediately expelled and forced from their dorm rooms before a University judicial board hearing or any formal conviction. Students will never get the chance for a third violation.

Furthermore, the distribution of letters to students' parents (whether after a second or third offense) suggests that all students have parents. Or that all students have parents who they have a typical dependent relationship with. This is not the case. The University has long been a place for non-traditional students. A public university is often the place where students are returning to school to finish a degree, or have been away serving in the military, or working to save up for an education to go to.

Students don't respond to threats: students respond to respect — especially when spoken to on an individual basis during hearings or meetings with University officials.

In part it is because public universities are meant to be affordable, but non-traditional students also typically attend universities like UMass because of the diverse and accepting population of students. Unlike a small liberal arts college where they might stand out, non-traditional students are afforded a wide-range of options, opportunities, and support services, as well as anonymity. Even students who appear to be "traditional" are often working to pay there own way through school, are above the age of 17 (the age at which in Massachusetts one is tried as an adult) and often above the age of 21 or even 24 (when a student regardless of their family situation is considered an independent.) This move to involve parents in their adult children's lives is invasion of privacy and prejudicial against students who come from non-traditional homes and families.

Parent involvement is obviously a welcome addition to any campus, and undervalued, but the cost of parental involvement in exchange for the suspension of a student's independence and constitutional rights is too high. Gargano should figure out another way to parley parents onto the University scene. Better, yet, Gargano should focus on student involvement on campus, and how students caught violating student code could be punished in a way that would serve the campus.

Focus on the positive. Turn the negative to gold. Students don't respond to threats: students respond to respect — especially when spoken to on an individual basis during hearings or meetings with University officials who they understand are working to help them, not hurt them.

If the University — or more accurately — Gargano wants to play parent to the 20,000 or so undergraduates than they should learn a basic rule of parenting: trust your children and respect each child's individuality. When I screwed up at home I was grounded, but not my brothers — since they had done nothing to warrant this punishment. Gargano involves the entire campus with his threats of immediate expulsion. He blankets the situation with threats and broad statements meant to frighten students.

The SGA, and students as a whole, must take initiative and challenge the suspension of due process rights for students, as well as the unconstitutional policy of parental notification. It's a slippery slope to re-invoke in loco parentis, folks.

For more information on in loco parentis, it's history, and national resurrection check out: http://universitysecrets.com/ch06.htm.

S.J. Port is a Collegian columnist.

That glorious 'real world'

Mark Ostroff

I'm afraid this is where we part ways. In two weeks, the time will come for me to enter into the glorious "real world" that everyone is so excited about being in ... bitter, yet excited.

In two weeks, it will be my time to forget about all my "utopian" fantasies and join the proud masses who embrace a world that is no less a fantasy, just like everyone else. I will throw out my crazy college "utopia –dreams" for that long-shot "American Dream" that the "real world" has promised me.

I'm going to have to work real hard to earn the respect of those around me. I'll have to find that job that may not be all that I expected, but makes some good money.

Maybe I'll earn enough to buy myself an SUV. Maybe I'll even cover it with little American flags, just to show everyone that I'm now a proud member of "the real world."

There will be some things that I know I won't be doing. For one thing, the glorious "real world" doesn't have time for any complicated literature. So, It looks like I'll have to get into the habit of reading something more with the times.

I'm so terribly sorry, Dr. Marx, Kissinger, Veblen, Zinn, Huberman, Einstein and Feynman. Make room for Hannity, Savage and even Jesse Ventura — "real world" literature.

Every now and then, I'll pick up a copy of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and slam some columnist for not being like me, in the "real world." Maybe I'll give him the line that they gave me, you know, "Some day you will have to be in the real world and make money. Maybe then, you won't be a liberal, blah blah blah ..."

Yes! That'll change his stupid opinion about the Iraq war! (Silly child). You see, in the "real world," it's every man for himself. When someone dies, it's one less person you'll have to compete with. Good.

If I work hard enough and do what I'm told, I'm going to have a house with beautiful green grass and a white picket fence and a big American flag

Just like everyone else, I will throw out my crazy college 'utopia –dreams' for that long-shot 'American Dream' that the 'real world' has promised me.

on an aluminum pole. I'll live in a neighborhood where everyone respects me because I work really hard and have a lot of stuff to show for it.

My son will be captain of the football team at his high school, not to mention class president. Every week, I'll go to his games and eventually encourage him to accept that scholarship that Harvard has been offering him. You know, with one of those "man-to-man" talks.

Every summer, my family and I will go to Cape Cod, where my beautiful, never-aging wife and I will lay on the beach and watch the sun set, holding my hand.

This is the payoff of life in the "real world." My individual happiness and vast consumption habits will be proof that in the "real world," all you have to do is work hard and good things will come to you.

I realize now that in this whole time, I have been wrong. I foolishly sold my readers a world where those who gain at the expense of others is immoral. In the "real world," we call it "business."

It's what improves the quality of our lives. The real world promises that just as long as you partake in this "business," there's the possibility you will live like "The Donald."

In the "real world," we will live our lives knowing that we have done well for ourselves. Even if inflation spins out of control and wipes out your retirement fund, the only dignified thing to do is realize that the "real world" entails some risk and although you have worked for 60 years and had nothing to show for it but a sore back, you at least have your pride. You can look right into the mirror and say how you feel with one word that says it all: "Sucker."

You know, maybe Arthur Miller was right. Maybe it really is a tragedy that we sacrifice our lives for that little piece of dignity and "opportunity" that the "real world" promised us. And with that is my message to those who worship a life in the "real world": keep it.

Never again will I buy into the sick fantasy that a life in constant pursuit of material wealth and dignity will have anything for me in the end.

In the "real world" I am a commodity, where the only people measuring my worth are shareholders.

We wake up in our '60s and realize that despite all the material wealth we have striven for, life only became harder. Families have broken apart, bones became brittle, and one after another, our dreams have been discarded into the dustbin marked, "Childish Utopia." And for some reason, we're proud of it. Those who look on in disgust just "don't get it."

But, whether you are the manager of a big firm or a janitor, in the end there is no first class ticket to your grave.

Don't let the fantastic delusions of the "real world" tell you otherwise.

Mark Ostroff is a Collegian columnist.

A lamb in Hebrew's clothing

Brian Mandrick

This is not an attack on Christianity or Catholicism. It is an attack on a network lying to its audience.

Yeshua. I spell his name here the way it may have been intended to be read and understood by the original writers of the Tenach. It is a name that I first thought was only a different pronunciation of Joshua, however it has come to my attention through the most enlightening source, "Jewish Jewels," aired during the off-peak hours of the Eternal World Network (EWTN). This program, shown at 11 p.m. on Friday, May 7, offered several more insights about Yeshua actually being an alteration of Jesus, and, because Yeshua means salvation, then he was actually prophesized in the Tenach (Old Testament or Torah). Therefore, in a roundabout human tampering of sacred documents, one can surmise that a perfectly good Jewish person has no choice but accept that Yeshua, or Jesus, is the one and only Savior. Right?

I'm not one to down the Bible, seeing that I am Christian myself, but it is hard to overlook that the New Testament references Judaism and therefore knew of the prophecies in the Tenach leading to the conclusion that the Biblical writers could have linked the two together on purpose to fabricate validity. It is basic reasonable doubt. So, frankly, it is perfectly just as valid to dismiss Jesus as a blasphemous man, as those of Jewish faith do. What is left from this sorted argument is that a so-called Jewish man (I am convinced he is just a Christian actor) is creating this connection to subtly convert Jews to believe in Yeshua, the Jewish Jesus on "Jewish Jewels." What is his purpose? Perhaps if I look at my journey to this "little gem," you can discover some deeper meaning along with me.

In a strange twist of fate, the irony that this program was on at all and that I discovered it to only despise it, is actually the reason why I am inspired to create this column at all. At first I was rather refreshed to see any Jewish specific programming at all since Christians tend to dominate television, but after 10 minutes I was appalled. Jews asking Jesus for forgiveness and saying "After all, he died for our sins," was utterly ridiculous. "You either have to accept he was a liar, or the beloved Savior of Man," is only one paraphrase of many ideas expressed on this loosely Jewish television show.

So really, with all of these subtle stabs at this show, what am I trying to say? In one word it can be summed up nicely and it is one that many people think is non-existent in the United States. On the contrary, propaganda — that fearful word believed lost somewhere in the pages of the Cold War — exists in the most ugly form I have ever seen. As if it isn't bad enough that there is an entire network trying to perform conversions via air waves, but it actually donned a Yamaca, ate some Matza, hired a Rabbi live from Israel (which looks something similar to southern California as the show has displayed), and created Jewish Jewels to maneuver through the Scriptures in order to convert the Jewish faith. I am all about free speech, and perhaps I am instituting a personal contradiction, but who has the right to impersonate another's religion in order to convert it to another? Who are these people on a mission from God to brutally verbally attack something sacred to another people who hold views that may be just as valid?

I am treading into a territory that most people are asked to avoid, and yet I am about to mix in the second evil: politics. Not politics in a too specific level to state these are my beliefs and you should believe them; rather display that one needs to examine who is behind which sides of a situation within religion. For the example I've given already, the EWTN had listings saying that they were off the air to try and display independence of this particular program signifying further validity of its propaganda. Does the EWTN really expect people to believe that they had nothing to do with showing Jews converting to Christianity?

Another example was in the newspapers just a few days ago. Governor McGreevy of New Jersey had publicly announced that he is Pro-Choice on abortion. Being election season, it would only be natural for a Democrat to side with his party so this step by McGreevy is not surprising. What is surprising is that the Archbishop of Newark, in response to McGreevy's announcement, declared that the Catholic governor is no longer allowed to receive the sacrament of Communion in any public mass in his jurisdiction. To further the story, the Archbishop of Camden to show support had announced the same. Is it me, or are they a little late? Or maybe on time? The most conservative entity, Catholicism has had the opportunity in McGreevy's initial run for office to present this punishment, but it held its tongue until now, when a conservative President has hit the campaign trail to rally support. I have no evidence to suggest anything more than just offering the questions about the situation, but these are questions that people need to consider when anything from anyone's mouth is said publicly.

I am all about free speech, and perhaps I am instituting a personal contradiction, but who has the right to impersonate another's religion in order to convert it to another?

Looking over this again, it seems like I am preaching to the choir being that you are even reading this article. If I have a little faith maybe I'll be wrong and some devout Jew out there who has seen Jewish Jewels will not be stunted. Generally, I just ask you to ask about motive in anything that is in the media in order to make informed decisions based on facts rather than propagandist lies. Oh and if you see "Jewish Jewels," have a laugh on me.

Check out the websites of the program and article I am referencing to make up your own mind: www.jewishjewels.org and news.findlaw.com/ap_stories/other/

I just need to give one further warning about the "Jewish Jewels" website: it is based on Christianity.com's server.

Brian Mandrik is a UMass student.

A liberal hypocrisy

Ben Duffy

I'm a bit of a political junkie. And yes, I'm unabashedly conservative as well. That makes me an exceedingly rare creature on this campus, where most of the students are pretty apathetic, and those students who do have any political leanings tend to sympathize with the left. At the same time, I strive not to be the unthinking, robotic conservative either. Often times that means devoting at least some of my time to reading what the other side has to say.

In the course of my reading, I've come across an artificially stimulated trend on the left that is nothing short of genius — they're feigning support of our military in order to sew the seeds of defeat in Iraq and Afghanistan. Most liberals these days claim that they revere our service members, and that their views on the war in Iraq are because of respect for the armed services, not despite it.

I read an interesting article recently on a socialist website about the plight of the underfunded soldier. The writer outlined the poor pay that our troops receive, the substandard hospital and school systems that service dependent family members, and the many supplies that our military no longer issues to our troops but expects that they buy out of pocket. The author pointed out that the military, particularly the enlisted ranks, is disproportionately poor and disproportionately African-American and Latino. She explained this trend by pointing out that joining the military is only an economic step-up for those people who have no room to go down. For the average American, joining the military would mean a degradation of their quality of life.

Students who pay attention and contribute to discussions not only benefit their understanding of how the world really works, but the University as a whole.

I read another article about the fact that reservists serving in Iraq haven't been issued the new Point Blank body armor, and have been using the obsolete flak jacket instead. She pointed out that reservists are soldiers too, that reservists face as many perils in Iraq as active duty soldiers, and that all soldiers should have the best equipment available. I knew something that the writer didn't know — that we active duty soldiers in Iraq only got one half of the Point Blank vest. There were sleeves on the outside of the vest that were intended to house armored plates. We never got the armored plates, mostly because they were too expensive. The military decided that they were "good enough" as they were, and really didn't provide much better protection than the old flak jackets.

Ironically, both writers pointed the finger solely at Bush, and both writers were using their arguments as yet another tool to undermine our war effort. Neither one of them mentioned the horrendous reign of Clinton, often called by military old-timers as the "eight years of neglect" of our military. It's not only disgusting opportunism, it's blatant hypocrisy.

Keep in mind that these are the same people who complain about the "bloated" military budget and have the gall to slap that sticker on their Subaru that says "It will be a great day when our schools have all the money they need and the Air Force has to hold a bake sale to buy a bomber." Liberals sure are clever, aren't they?

The sticker is such a contortion of the truth, I can hardly bare it. Yes, the Air Force buys bombers, and they're quite expensive. But that's the purpose of the Air Force — to rain hell down on our enemies. They also provide cover for American lives. It's our air supremacy that allows the United States not to fight every battle in the trenches a la World War I. Fighters jets, attack helicopters, and tanks also provide support for the infantry and save American lives. You can't be "pro-troops" and then tell them that they can't have the air support they need.

More importantly, that's not all there is to military spending. Our military maintains its own education and health care systems, neither of which is being "all it can be." In fact, that was one of several reasons why I decided not to make a career out of it. I wanted to have a family one day, and I thought that my future wife and kids deserved better. Next time you hear a liberal cry that there isn't enough support for health care and education in this country, ask him why he thinks such a disgraceful system is "good enough" for our troops. Then there's housing of course — family housing for married troops and barracks for single troops. The quality of housing varies from base to base, but there are certainly areas where improvement is needed. When I lived on the installation in Germany, I was often embarrassed to see German nationals walking about. The installation was an eye-sore, and I didn't want them to think that all Americans lived this way. I fear that many of them formed that impression, and I sometimes heard the Germans refer to the installation as "Little America" with a disparaging tone to their voices.

Lucky for me, though, I'm just as clever as any liberal. I've got a bumpersticker of my own in mind. It reads: "It'll be a great day when our troops have the equipment they need and Congress has to have a bake sale to fund its abortions." That's right, the U.S. government is in the business of granting money to low-income women who desire to have an abortion. The idea is that all women should have the choice whether they want to salt poison their babies or not, even women who can't afford it. Joe Taxpayer, on the other hand, has no such choice. Joe's going to pay for it whether he wants to or not.

I'll always remember who it was who didn't want me to have armor plates in my flak vest when I was riding around in Baghdad. Besides the folks with the aforementioned bumperstickers, there's John Kerry. After voting to authorize the war, he later voted not to spend the $87 billion to fund it. On his website he defends himself by saying that he didn't want to "throw money at the problem." Apparently ensuring that all of our soldiers, active duty and enlisted alike, had the best body armor was not important to Kerry. That's the biggest bag-over-the-face-punch-in-the-gut to our service members in recent history. But if you ask a liberal, it's all Bush's fault. And even though they acknowledge the fact that our troops aren't being treated right, they still think that our defense budget is "bloated." It's just a darned good thing that there are imaginative people like me out there who can come up with a witty sticker of my own to expose these phonies.

Ben Duffy is a UMass student.

Moving on to life's next chapter

Johnny Donaldson

Tragedy hit someone I knew recently. A woman I work with at the Northampton Big Y, a supervisor of mine, lost her sister in a freak accident. The girl, her younger sister, was, as far as I know, killed underneath the wheels of a tractor-trailer, leaving behind a 2-year-old daughter. She was 21 years old.

Just 21. Only a few months older than I am. She was my age — our age. She could have been someone who went here. And her death coincided with the tragic case of a man dying after falling off the Superman ride at the Six Flags in Agawam. And a few months after my aunt died from complications resulting from cancer (she wasn't even 60 yet). And about 2 and a half years since a pair of hijacked airplanes brought down two concrete towers in the most famous city on Earth, killing a few thousand innocent people and triggering a war with a staggering death toll.

That sister could have been me.

It happened the day before my first day of sophomore classes. I was struck down by a pickup truck while crossing a road in Hadley. I was pretty damn lucky if you think about. I got out of it with just one single broken bone — a metatarsil in my left foot — and some severe soft tissue damage. It helped that the driver had the decency to honk his horn before he hit me, so that I could at least attempt to spin out of his way. So I got clipped, knocked down, my foot run over and — in a state of utter, adrenaline-pounding shock — got up and jogged over to the bus for home. I was that guy comedian Dane Cook was making fun of at the recent Comedy Central 13th anniversary bar mitzvah — the guy who walked away from being hit by a car as if it were no big deal.

It was a big deal though (God, I realized that later). It was a big deal because the Three Sisters of Fate decided not to cut the strings of my life that sunny Tuesday morning. Had the horn not sounded, had I looked in that direction just a fraction of a second too late … I would have been hit dead on by that truck. And what happened could have been a hell of a lot worse.

What could have happened? It's not something I'm keen to reflect on. I could have died, or, at the very least, become paralyzed. Whatever happened, it wouldn't have been pretty.

And yet, at the time, I shrugged it off. The whole incident became a big joke to me and my friends — a kind of therapy through humor — but it didn't profoundly affect me like these kinds of events should. I didn't see the light or God; I didn't feel as though I needed to make a change. I drifted through life as I normally did, the only difference being I had tree branches growing out of my armpits for about three months afterward.

Then my co-worker's sister dies and old wounds, neglected wounds, are opened up again in my psyche. It cemented feelings that had been stirring in me for a while, feelings that I can't quite describe … trapped, maybe? Feelings that I was leaning back against the rails and letting my life drift by me, disappearing to times as I laid back and watched it go. Like a lightning rod in a high gale, these electric swirls of distrubance and emotion had something to ground them, to channel these frustrations into a course of action.

As my own 21st birthday rapidly approaches, I've begun to take stock of my life as it is now and I've come to some harsh realizations. I've come to realize that I've spent my life in cowardice, running to the comforts of safety and conformity despite my belief that I was a budding nonconformist. Too many days of my youth have slipped by without me ever taking hold of it, using it to experience everything that it has to offer me. Instead, I've sat down and done the same old things — woke up, gone to school, gone to work — and have never even attempted to realize my ambitions, of which I have many. I'm the guy who had endless dreams … and then ignored those dreams, coming up with excuses to justify why.

The worst thing that I can imagine is that I awake at 35 and have all the trappings of the American Dream: wife, two kids in the suburbs with the white picket fence and steady, well-paying job at the bank or insurance agency. I have all that but I never followed my dreams, never did the things I wanted to do. To me, that's worse than death.

The band Autopilot Off named themselves that because that believed in living life just like that — with your own personal autopilot switched in the off position. And it's a perfectly fine philosophy to live by. Which is why this is likely to be one of the last documents I'll write for this lovely establishment. I've decided to move on with my life. I'm probably leaving school prematurely to go on and pursue the life that I had always wanted but was too scared, deep down, to pursue. I want to start that band I've been itching to form, write those screenplays and novels that have been swirling around in my head, learn the things I've been saying I've wanted to learn (photography, skateboarding, etc.). School is not a bad thing, but I think I've learned all I needed to learn from it and to continue forcing smething that does not feel right, just for the sake of a society that values a college degree no matter how useless (or useful) it may end up being in life.

Once you finish a chapter in your life, you can't stay reading it, or you will be living an unhappy and unfulfilling life. And me, being a fast reader, I have finished this chapter. And though it's a scary thought about what lies ahead of me I've learned that it's better to leap into the void.

In life there's three things to remember:

Take the risk.
Follow your heart.
Regret nothing.

Johnny Donaldson is a Collegian columnist.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SADDAM MORE THAN JUST A 'BAD GUY'

I am writing in response to Professor Peter Kerr's letter that appeared in the Collegian on May 10. First, I must shamefully admit that I was a supporter of the war with Iraq when it first began. Since then, I and other Bush supporters have stood back in the shadows, embarrassed by the way the campaign has gone thus far.

Maybe Bush did knowingly lie about weapons of mass destruction. Maybe all the other underlying conspiracies about what is happening in Iraq are true. Maybe the U.S. did not belong in Iraq in the first place. Even as a former supporter I can find almost nothing positive to say about U.S. actions in Iraq thus far.

But one positive thing that has come out of the war with Iraq, maybe the sole positive thing, is that Saddam Hussein is gone. And to label Hussein as "simply a 'bad guy' " as Kerr did is an understatement to say the least. Hussein may not be a Stalin or a Hitler, but he is close. Hussein is guilty of the third or fourth largest case of genocide in history, the only discrepancy existing because Pohl Pott kept such bad records of his massacres during his reign of terror in Cambodia.

Dismissing Hussein as a bad guy makes it sound as if everything would have been different if he was hugged more as a child.

The U.S. has created a mess in Iraq that could have and should have been avoided. Rebuiding Iraq is a project that will take years, but it is nothing less than a biessing that the people of Iraq will be able to embark on this long and arduous journey of reconstruction without Hussein in their future.

Andrew Mulligan
UMass student

COLUMN LACKS SOURCES

Dan O'Brien acknowledges that information from several Armenian sources was used in the writing of his May 5 article, "Genocide victims deserve respect," but oddly, he cites not a single Turkish source. If one is to print accusations of one group of people against another, does it not behoove a journalist — even a sophomore and amateur one — to consult the group being accused?

O'Brien cites numbers apparently fed to him by slick operators of the well-heeled Armenian lobby. But I am curious as to another number, the number of Turks that have been massacred by Armenians before, during and after 1915. Perhaps O'Brien can do some research and write another column on this obscene canard and lucrative cottage industry of an "Armenian genocide." To date, quite a few Armenian slicks have gotten rich from this odious Armenian hoax.

I'll provide a number of my own. Nine members of my grandmother's family (four adults, five children) were slaughtered by a goon squad of the Armenian DASHNAKS (Armenian Revolutionary Fed-eration). They were among 120 Turkish villagers who were herded into a mosque that was then set afire by the aforementioned Armenian butchers.

Keenan Pars
Wayne, New Jersey

Studying abroad a meaningful and unforgettable experience

World Perspectives

Meimei Thai

Living at the Emmanuel College residential area at the University of Queensland in Brisbane, Australia as an exchange student from the United States is one of the most interesting and unforgettable experiences, because it allows you to meet other American and international students, as well as immersing yourself with other Australian citizens. You get the full experience.

Dorm-life at the University of Massachusetts and the University of Queensland are quite similar in many ways. Emmanuel College residential area, for instance, has a similar setting to Southwest at UMass, where students have access to the computer lab, dining hall, sport facilities, and study areas that are less than a five-minute's walk. However, there are several additional factors that make the experiences at Emmanuel College special.

American students from all over the states, such as Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, California, Colorado, and several others, are studying abroad and staying at Emmanuel College this semester.

"We're really lucky to have lots of Americans staying at college this year," Australian International Student Co-ordinator, Benjamin O'Brien said, "with over 60 Americans coming from everywhere from Florida to Alaska, the American students do form a large part of the identity of our college, and they have a great time."

To help exchange, first-year, and older students be acquainted with one another, Emmanuel College had their own week of orientation full of activities, where everybody had a chance to get to know each other. Such activities included dressing up in ugly outfits to go bowling, dining with older students, setting up a toga party for dancing and drinking, and putting together a talent show.

"Coming from a country so far away without knowing anybody here," said Dacey Campbell from Pennsylvania, who is studying at UQ as a post-graduate student, "it really helped me meet people and make friends before getting busy with classes."

Orientation week was not the only way new student residents could bond with one another. There were sport competitions between the ten colleges (dorms) at UQ.

Unlike the intercollegiate sports system at UMass, where teams from different schools play against each other, the sports' competitions at UQ are weekend tournaments played between the colleges. Another way to explain it would be a basketball (or any other sport) tournament played between teams, one from each residential area: Northeast, Southwest, Sylvan, Orchard Hill, and Central, which is how the sports' competitions work here at UQ.

Both American and Australian students at Emmanuel College practiced, played, and worked together in touch football, cricket, field hockey, and many other team sports.

About a month ago, three Americans, who were all beginners, made the cricket team and helped Emmanuel get fifth place in the cricket competition. Stephanie Davis, one of the Americans on the team, had trouble keeping her arm straight while bowling because she was used to pitching in softball for her university in Virginia.

"It was an exciting experience," said Davis, "It was fun to learn a new sport that was similar to softball. It was challenging, but I got the hang of it."

"It's great that they [Americans] get involved with sports because it shows that they are really becoming a part of the college," said Ben O'Brien.

With eager students wanting to get involved and meeting new people, Emmanuel College had the perfect atmosphere to do so.

Australian Emiko Young said, "I think it's really great because it gives Americans a chance to mix and interact with Australians."

Studying abroad is an opportunity that every student at UMass, or any other school, should take advantage of because it allows you to get out of your familiar comfort zone and see a different part of the world.

When I was in high school, my teachers always mentioned how they regretted not going abroad and that I should take advantage of that while I'm an undergraduate. Ever since then, I was determined to go study abroad somewhere. I found out where the study abroad office was located, Hills South, and asked the advisors questions about places to go and did some research. Eventually, first semester junior year came, I was juggling through the busy application process, classes, studying, and working. It was all worth it because now I'm having the time of my life here in Australia.

Yeah, the thought of leaving your family and friends is extremely scary, but when you think about it, you're only going to be away temporarily. When will you actually get the chance to live in another country for a few months? Probably never. So, why not?

It will only help you grow as a person, see what it's like to live in another country, make new memories, and form lasting friendships for a lifetime. Dare yourself to get out there and see the world. It's not so scary once you get used to it.

Meimei Thai is a UMass student studying abroad in Australia.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
ARTS & LIVING
WEDNESDAY, MAY 12, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass welcomes Margaret Cho

By Mike Busak
Collegian Staff

Talk about an easy crowd.

If you were young comedienne who had a large fan base in the gay, Asian, liberal and college communities and you wanted to have a sounding board to test out your new material, where would you go? The University of Massachusetts isn't too bad of a start.

Since the age of 16 when Margaret Cho was told by a young Jerry Seinfeld to quit High School to become a comedienne, this eccentric girl has done a great deal of living. She has worked the stand-up circuit, had her own sitcom, had multiple successful DVD's, and a Grammy nominated CD. Then again on the other hand she has lost that same sitcom, battled depression, and fluctuated in weight in a way that compares only to Oprah Winfrey.

Following her 2003 "Revolution" tour that spanned 37 cities and ran from March until December, a transformed Margaret Cho is going back to the drawing board and this time she means business.

Cho's audio release of "Revolution" was nominated for the prestigious Grammy Award in 2003. Although she did not walk away with one of the little statuettes, Cho still was lighthearted enough about the subject to joke to the sellout crowd at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

"I beat out 15,000 people to win the worst dressed award," referring to her specially made dress she wore to the Grammy Awards. Her tight fitting gown was fashioned to resemble a peacock and was awarded the notorious "worst dressed award," by the near prehistoric fashion aficionado, Joan Rivers.

Monday night Cho strolled on stage at UMass with a new agenda. She is attempting to enter a genre that few contemporaries have been able to succeed in. With her upcoming State of Emergency Tour, Cho and opening act, comedian Bruce Daniels will travel through the presidential election swing states in attempt to sway votes of those who have yet to make up their minds.

Still battling a cold that forced her for the first time in nearly 20 years of performance to reschedule a show, Cho refused to hold back any energy from her hysterically bursting performances. She ripped on stage immediately addressing the most current of controversial media topics: Iraqi prisoner abuse pictures.

Cho said that she believed the pictures of Pfc. Lynndie England and cohorts were not only disgusting but also ignorant in judgment. Cho continued ripping the controversial figures involved in the prisoner abuse scandal, saying: "I think we should send them to prison, but before we send them to prison we should send them to kindergarten … kindergarten is where you learn how to destroy evidence."

Margaret Cho
Fine Arts Center
UMass
May 10

This being a pre-tour show, Cho lacked the usual flow that her polished shows generally bring. While the energy and animation remained constant in Monday nigh's performance, Cho referred often to a pair of notebooks that were laid out on a stool that hugged her side for the shows entirety. It seemed as if Cho, like many comedians and comediennes alike, wanted to work through the kinks as to perfect her language, topics, and delivery.

While much of the new material she brought to the table sought to grab not only the attention, but the opinion of her audience, Cho did not neglect many of the staples that have made her a fan favorite for many minority groups. While being encroached upon by a front row chock full of cheering gay men and women and even a couple of resident drag queens, Cho gave the diehard fans what they had been waiting for. She discussed such important lessons in life as "don't mix your old gay with your new gay" and that when making use of a dildo designed in the likeness of gay porn star, Jeff Stryker, it's always smart to apply the suction cup tip to a lint free surface.

The show was full of laughs, but this did not seem to deter Cho's message. She spoke at length giving humorous, but thought-provoking reasons why people who oppose gay marriage were wrong in their ways. She urged that you could not "legislate morality" and that a tax paying American should receive the rights of any other tax paying American. The crowd roared when she imitated her gay friends thoughts about the opposition. She jokingly emulated a homosexual friend saying, "girl, if I can't have a wedding, neither can you. Good luck doing your own makeup. Look who needs a nice flower arrangement now."

Another reoccurring topic throughout the show was a woman's right to choose. Not only did Cho speak positively on many of her friends recent trip to Washington D.C. to protest in an abortion rights rally, she said that she was disgusted on the recent overturn of a vote to make the morning after pill legally sold in non-prescription form.

Throughout the show she screeched, "give me my morning after pill," joking that even if she did not need them she would take them daily with her Geritol in the morning.

A woman who has teetered back and forth with her ideas and self-image, not only seemed revived on the issues, but she was also ostensibly renewed in the physical sense as well. Dancing with more energy than most students in the crowd, Cho has shed the extra weight she had in the past, to reveal yet another side of this complicated woman.

She was light, opinionated, and hard to deny a chance to con-

COURTESY MAGNOLIA ENTERTAINMENT

TV line-ups turn to reality shows in prime time

Magic Picture Box

Ryan Aubert

A decade ago, the term "summer television" meant a long three months of re-runs, without any new shows to gawk at. NBC even once proclaimed, "If you haven't seen it, it's new to you!" This has changed in recent years, with the networks deciding to air a handful of new shows, most of them being of the reality genre. Some shows have scored big time debuting in the summer including "Survivor", "American Idol", and "Who Wants to be a Millionaire?" This summer, the networks are again offering up new shows, and maybe, just maybe a few will become hits.

Over at the eye network, CBS is planning to bring back two popular reality shows: "Big Brother" and "The Amazing Race." "Big Brother 5" debuts July 6, pitting a group of strangers against each other in a house where every action, every move is filmed live. The remaining player at the end of the summer wins a cool half-mill. Also on July 6, "The Amazing Race 6" premieres which has 11 duos racing around the globe for a million dollars. Allison, the girl you love to hate from "Big Brother 4" is apparently one of the contestants too.

Fox is planning a plethora of new shows and is attempting to have a full-year round schedule. Two new dramas include "The Jury" (premiering June 8) about the happenings in a jury room and the courthouse, and "North Shore," an ensemble drama of young, beautiful people in a hotel in Hawaii. Wow, what a 'great' concept!

Two new comedies will debut on Fox, one called "Method & Red" (debuting June 16) staring Method Man and Redman living in an upscale neighborhood and the other called "Quintuplets" staring Andy Richter as a dad of teenage quintuplets. "The Simple Life" returns June 16 in its second installment along with a new reality show called "The Casino" (starting June 14), which will follow the trials and tribulations of workers at a hotel/casino in Vegas.

See PICTURE BOX on page 8

The work of influential video directors hits DVD

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

The music video was at one time one of the most innovative and inspiring mediums. When MTV began over 20 years ago the idea of a music video wasn't new, but it was still in its earliest stages. Over the years MTV has become a showcase of some of the most visionary directors and artists. Videos were awe-inspiring, clever, funny, and dramatic. Unfortunately, MTV has become more watered-down and easy to swallow and subsequently less creative.

Not to worry though, MTV may not be the bastion of art that it once claimed to be but there remains a few survivors. Surviving are the people that mix a love of music and film together to create short little masterpieces. Three of the most prominent modern video directors, Spike Jonze, Michel Gondry, and Chris Cunningham have recently released DVDs that displays many of their videos. It also includes commercials and other short films in packages so full it will take weeks for the average person to make their way through everything.

Director's Label Series
'The Work Of: Spike Jonze, Michel Gondry, and Chris Cunningham'
Palm Pictures

The Director's Label Series of which these three discs (sold seperately) are the first installment was created by these three auteurs but is most definitely a gift to fans, not a self-aggrandizing pat on the back. Perhaps the best thing about these discs is that they appeal to anyone with a love of music or film, whether it is a casual or diehard fan, or perhaps someone who aspires to be a groundbreaking director themself.

Jonze had a great deal of success and acclaim for his videos which include the Beastie Boys' famous and hilarious, "Sabotage" clip and Weezer's "Happy Days" inspired "Buddy Holly" video. Jonze reached new peaks in the direction of "Being John Malkovich" and "Adaptation."

Gondry also had some fame for his clips, which include Foo Fighter's dream/nightmare "Everlong" and The White Stripes' all-Lego "Fell In Love With A Girl." He has begun to enter the mainstream's consciousness with his films "Human Nature" and "Eternal Sunshine Of The Spotless Mind".

Cunningham is the only one of the trio yet to make his film debut, but thanks to his video work, such as the alternately awesome and terrifying Aphex Twins' videos for "Come To Daddy" and "Windowlicker," he has already built quite the reputation for himself.

Jonze's disc is certainly the most likely to be recognized by viewers. He has the biggest name thanks to the success of his films and videos, and his double-sided disc boasts the most popular artists. The DVD, of course has the real big name clips by Weezer, The Beasties and other big name acts, but it also contains some great and memorable videos that had more success then the band did.

Sadly forgotten pop-punkers, Wax may not sound familiar but their clip for "California" should be instantly recognized by anyone who watched MTV even the slightest bit in the mid-90s for being entirely comprised of a slow-motion tracking shot of a man on fire running down the streets. Also included were beloved indie-rockers Dinosaur Jr. who flirted with the mainstream with their "Feel The Pain" video that combined golling and punch-ups.

The disc is packed with Jonze's best work, from his most popular to a few rarely seen and underappreciated clips — like Pharcyde's brilliant "Drop" — but it isn't quite complete. It is missing a few clips, including Soundgarden's "Ms Wave" and Pavement's "Shady Lane." The latter is talked about in the packed booklet as a video that Jonze is unhappy with, which would make it all the more interesting to see.

The disc's b-side has a few short films and documentaries that range from interesting to, well, not that interesting. The disc is also the only one of the three that has audio commentary from some of the artists (including Christopher Walken talking about his unexpected and unforgettable dance performance in Fatboy Slim's "Weapon of Choice").

Gondry's disc is very possibly the most packed of the three. It also contains in an insanely thorough booklet (Cunningham's does as well, for the record) and a lot of behind-the-scenes footage. What makes Gondry's disc unique is that the footage is incorporated into an original feature-length documentary film. "I've Been 12 Forever," which is separated into two parts — one half on each side of the double-sided DVD.

While Gondry has some very famous work, such as the "Everlong" video, MTV and the public as a whole have underappreciated most of his videos. Chemical Brothers' trippy "Star Guitar" video and

See DVD on page 8

The Director's Label Series brings the work of some of today's most talented video directors to DVD. Included in the series is Spike Jonze, Chris Cunningham and Michel Gondry.

Olympics, reality TV keep summer new

PICTURE BOX from page 7

ABC has not officially disclosed what its summer offerings will be, but expect numerous reality shows as the network continues to struggle.

Over on the peacock network, NBC is planning a plethora of returning reality shows. "For Love or Money" premieres June 7, with one guy and a goggle of women deciding what is more important — money or love. How about both? "Last Comic Standing 2" debuts June 8 as the search for America's top new comedian continues. "Who Wants to Marry My Dad?" starts up June 21 with three daughters attempting to find love for their single dad. Finally, "Next Action Star" premieres June 14 with 14 people vying to become a star in the stunt world for movies.

The biggest television event of the summer though will be the 2004 Olympic Games in Athens, Greece. Airing on NBC, the opening ceremonies will be held on August 13, with the Olympics lasting two weeks after, all in the place where the Olympics started thousands of years ago. Extended, comprehensive coverage of the games will also be shown on all the NBC networks including MSNBC, CNBC, Bravo and Telemundo.

Have a great and fun summer! And don't forget to check out your Magic Picture Box once in a while, you never know what you might find.

Ryan Aubert is a Collegian Columnist.

Boys will be girls at this year's Drag Ball

By Yasmene Dawson
Collegian Correspondent

Meet "the fiercest 'ladies' on campus," at the UMass Drag Ball held the last day of classes at the top of the Campus Center.

Promotional fliers for the Drag Ball boast a "night of wonder and flawlessness," tomorrow at 9 p.m. The UMass Drag Ball is sponsored by the UMass Pride Alliance.

Dan Pomeroy, UMass Pride Alliance treasurer, describes the organization as "a political and social group designed to raise awareness of the queer community on campus."

The UMass Drag Ball, "is an amateur drag contest," said Pomeroy. "It's a great time and a great way to celebrate the end of classes."

Brandi Dawson, Drag Ball coordinator and Pride member, encourages "anyone and everyone [to attend]."

"Whether you are someone who is queer and looking for a queer community event, or someone who is straight that is curious about drag kings and queens, or someone that is just looking for a good time, this will be a good time," Dawson said.

Drag Ball
Tomorrow
Campus Center
UMass
$3 to $6

The amateur drag performance begins at 10:30 p.m. and will be hosted by JuJu Bea. Some may know JuJu Bea as M.C. Airline. JuJu Bea is often recognized by her frequent performances at Diva's nightclub in Northampton.

"I'd like to say that the UMass Drag Ball is the fiercest thing UMass will ever [see]. It breaks boundaries and crosses that murky line," said JuJu Bea. "It brings people together to just have fun. Everyone goes," she continued. The evening also promises a special guest appearance by last year's winner, drag queen Monica.

"The drag contest is open to anyone who wants to perform," said Pomeroy.

"Anyone who wants to perform must bring their own music," Dawson said. "There will be one winner each for the best drag king and queen. The winners "will receive a crown [and other] prizes [that] are kept a secret until they are given away," said Dawson.

With expectations of at least 100 guests, Dawson wants this ball "to be bigger and better than past drag balls. I expect people will have a lot of fun and laughs," said Dawson.

Dawson described the evening as, "a night of fun and excitement, giving queer and sometimes straight students a chance to express themselves in a way that they don't normally get to."

According to Dawson, "the money collected will go towards further political and social events that raise awareness about queer issues."

UMass Pride Alliance holds many yearly events. The UMass drag ball happens twice a year on the first Saturday after Halloween and on the last day of classes.

Dawson has future expectations for the UMass drag ball. "In the future we plan to get professional drag queens to perform at our show. [We want] to attract more outside visitors to UMass," said Dawson.

For anyone who is interested in signing up to perform in the drag performance, or for more information on the UMass Drag Ball, contact Brandi Dawson at 546-1374, or at mosskittie@yahoo.com. Brandi will also take last minute performance sign ups before the show begins.

The doors open at 9 p.m. and the evening ends at midnight. General admission tickets are available at the door for $6 or $5 for Five-college students and $4 for UMass students. Any person dressed in drag will receive an additional $1 off his or her admission price.

Jonze, Gondry subjects of DVD series

DVD from page 7

Massive Attack's one-shot "Protection" are perfect examples of overlooked clips that will now finally be acknowledged on a larger scale. The extra features on Gondry's disc also range from the very cool to the watch-once-and-then-ignore. On one hand Gondry has the hysterical short film, "One Day", in which the director's, um, leavings (played by comedian and "Eternal Sunshine" co-star David Cross), refuse to leave him alone. On the other hand there is the not-so-gripping "Pecan Pie", an incredibly short film that features "Eternal Sunshine" star Jim Carrey rolling down the street in a bed.

Cunningham's disc has the least content but his stunningly dark, mechanized style more then makes up for this. While Jonze and, to a lesser extent, Gondry have begun to make names for themselves in the movies (though that's not to say either of them has 'gone Hollywood') Cunningham is still relatively unknown but this disc more then proves his worth.

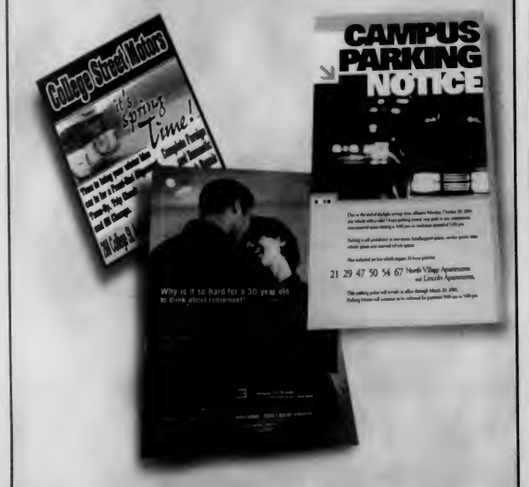
Cunningham moves from the bleak to the stylish, from trippy to downright frightening, without blinking an eye. Aside from the videos, mostly done by electronic artists whose musical style fits perfectly with Cunningham's futuristic visions, the disc (which is the only one in the set that is only one-sided) features a making-of documentary for Bjork's robotic romance "All Is Full of Love" and a few commercials and video segments. Cunningham's booklet, like the other two, features interviews with the director himself about the making of each video.

The sheer amount of content on these three discs stacks the odds of pure perfection pretty high, but that's not necessarily a bad thing. On Gondry's disc he talks about quantity over quality and he has a point; sure not everything on these three DVDs is great, but for the collector and completist in all of us it sure is nice to have. While the focus of the sets are the videos, which are almost all excellent clips, the supplementary materials give an informative and interesting behind-the-scenes look at how the creativity flows, or sometimes struggles. The short films, commercials, and documentaries do have their ups-and-downs but all in all it makes the sets feel more packed and more complete. The sets aren't for everyone; the average consumer or, say, the average White Stripes fan, might not be completely enthralled. For anyone interested in any of the three directors, music video, or film in general all three of these discs (even if you are only really familiar with just one of the directors) are bound to entertain and inform for weeks and weeks — and that just covers the first viewing.

COURTESY IMDB.COM

Spike Jonze is one of the influential directors whose best work is part of the series.

BARELY THERE



THE ONE YOU WANT. THE WAY YOU WANT IT.

Steve Madden

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

GRAPHICS
the Collegian is hiring for next semester

Come talk to Scott, Shannon, or Rachael or call 545-1864
105 Campus Center Basement
Freshmen and Sophomores are encouraged to apply

Clip & Curl
Route 116, Sunderland 665.2629
Open Tuesday-Friday 9 to 6:30, and Saturday 9 to 4
Best Wishes
SENIORS!
We can help with all your Commencement needs.
Facials ~ Massages ~ Hair Styling

Hit the books, then hit the beach!

- Day and evening classes start May 24th
- Affordable resident cost is $136 per credit
- 5- or 10-week courses
- A great way to earn college credits quickly
- Credits are transferable to your school! (When you are a university or college student, or incoming college freshman)
- Wellesley, Framingham, and Ashland

Looking to get ahead in your course work? Short on credits and need to catch up? Or just looking for something satisfying to do this Summer? A MassBay Summer Session course is the way to go!

Don't sweat it.
Check out MassBay's Summer Session Courses in:
Business
EMT
English
Health
History
Lab Sciences (such as Anatomy & Physiology, Biology, Microbiology)
Math
Social Sciences
and other transferable courses!

Classes meet Monday-Thursday so there's plenty of time left for other Summer activities.

To register or obtain additional information, call 781-239-2703.

Call MassBay today at 781-239-2703 or go to www.massbay.edu

MassBay Community College
Start here. Go anywhere.

Have a great summer. Check us out all summer long on www.daily-collegian.com

NEW ON TUESDAY:
LAST SAMURAI
CALENDAR GIRLS
CHASING LIBERTY
ELEPHANT
GIRL WITH A PEARL EARRING
PETER PAN
TRIPLETS OF BELLEVILLE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Bruegger's
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

Student Sized Self Storage
Only $26 a month
You Keep the Keys
Greenfield Secure Storage
1135 Bernardston Rd.
413-775-0074

Home, sweet home in NBA

By Mark Long
Associated Press

MIAMI (AP) — Home is where the wins are in the NBA playoffs.

Just ask the Heat: They're 5-0 in Miami and 0-5 everywhere else this postseason. They were awful in two losses at Indiana to start the second round, then returned to the comforts of home and a Game 3 victory.

Similar scenarios played out in the Lakers-Spurs and Nets-Pistons conference semifinals.

"I don't care how many five-star hotels you've been to, nothing is like your own bed," Heat forward Lamar Odom said. "I don't care what restaurants you've been to, nothing's like Mama's home cooking. That's what we need."

Odom and his teammates have won 17 straight games at home, a streak that started in early March.

It's part of a general trend in the NBA, where the hosts won 37 of 51 playoff games through Monday night. That's a .725 winning percentage, the highest for home teams in the playoffs since 1990, according to Elias Sports Bureau.

Indiana, Los Angeles, New Jersey and San Antonio also are unbeaten at home this postseason.

"That's why you play 82 games in the regular season _ to determine home-court advantage," Pacers coach Rick Carlisle said. "Now there's a lot of pressure to win at home."

The New Orleans Hornets know all about it. They went 3-0 at home against the Heat in the first round of the playoffs but lost all four games at Miami.

When a team plays at home, Pistons center Elden Campbell said, "You're within your daily routine where you're comfortable. You know what you're going to do, you know what you're going to eat, you know your wife will have lunch for you, and all that.

"It's all those little things that make it a slight advantage to being on the road," added Campbell, a 14-year veteran who has played in 86 playoff games.

His team won the first two games at home against the Nets by a combined 37 points. When the series shifted to New Jersey, though, the two-time defending Eastern Conference champions turned everything around and won Game 3 by 18 points.

"It was established early that it wasn't about Xs and Os, or coaches, or running plays," Pistons center Ben Wallace said. "It was just about heart and determination. Everybody knows when they get running and get that crowd involved, they're a tough team to beat."

The Spurs beat the Lakers by 10 points in each game in San Antonio; in Los Angeles, Shaquille O'Neal and Co. dealt the reigning NBA champs a 24-point drubbing Sunday.

The only conference semifinal where the pattern didn't hold was Timberwolves-Kings. Through three games, each team already lost once at home.

In the Pacers-Heat series, Miami lost Games 1 and 2 by an average of 11.5 points — and the contests weren't even that close.

But in Miami's raucous arena, where the seats are red and the fans wear black, the Heat won 94-87 to snap Indiana's 11-game winning streak.

The Pacers set an NBA record by winning each their first six postseason games by double digits. But even the team with the league's best regular-season record couldn't win in Miami.

Several improbable things made it happen:

Miami magic? Home-court advantage?

Maybe both.

The Heat certainly have no reasonable, rationale answer for it.

"Every day, I watch the game and try to figure out why we're a lot better at home," guard Rafer Alston said. "But I don't understand it. For some reason, guys just make spectacular plays and just do unbelievable things out there.

Kim lifted from Sox rotation, Arroyo to start on Tuesday

By Jimmy Golen
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) - Jeff D'Amico and Byung-Hyun Kim won't have a chance for another rematch for a while.

The two pitchers faced each other for the second time in a row, and for the second straight time they both struggled.

After Cleveland beat Boston 10-6 on Monday night to snap a five-game losing streak, the Red Sox dropped Kim from the starting rotation, and Indians manager Eric Wedge sounded ready to skip D'Amico's next turn in favor of Chad Durbin.

Kim lasted just 3 1-3 innings and gave up six runs — four earned and two more on a passed ball when he crossed up catcher Jason Varitek.

"I just went out there battling" with control, he said. "It's harder than it needs to be."

Ben Broussard hit two of Cleveland's eight doubles and Ronnie Belliard had two hits to raise his AL-leading batting average to .383.

Kim (1-1) gave up five hits and three walks in 3 1-3 innings before leaving to catcalls from the Fenway crowd. Manager Terry Francona said the team hadn't decided whether Kim, who has a 6.17 ERA, will go to the minors or the bullpen.

"Right now, it's just not working starting," Francona said. "I don't think it's fair to him or to us.

"So we're going to make a change for now." Bronson Arroyo will start Saturday in Toronto.

"It's an opportunity for me," Arroyo said. "I've just got to try to step in and run with it."

It was a rematch of last Wednesday's matchup between D'Amico and Kim in Cleveland, when the two combined to allow 11 earned runs and neither made it to the sixth inning.

But the Indians won this time, thanks to four shots off Fenway's left-field wall and two more that short-hopped it.

Byung-Hyun Kim surrendered six runs in three-plus innings against Cleveland on Monday night.

Baseball's true home?

By Adam Gorlick
Associated Press

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) — City officials and baseball historians have struck out the long-held belief that baseball didn't start becoming the national pastime until the 1800s.

Their pitch to rewrite the sport's history is based on a 1791 ordinance that aims to protect the windows in Pittsfield's new meeting house by prohibiting anyone from playing baseball within 80 yards of the building.

"It's clear that not only was baseball played here in 1791, but it was rampant," baseball historian John Thorn said Tuesday at a City Hall news conference to announce the find. "It was rampant enough to have an ordinance against it."

The document — dug out of an archive vault at the Berkshire Athenaeum library in Pittsfield — is the earliest known written reference to baseball, predating the next known documentation of the game by three decades.

"Pittsfield is baseball's Garden of Eden," Mayor James Ruberto said.

But it was an Eden that was stumbled upon accidentally by a historian with insomnia.

Unable to sleep one night, Thorn took to the Internet to research a book he was writing on the origins of baseball. That's when he found a reference to the Pittsfield ordinance cited in an 1869 book on Pittsfield's history.

Thorn sat on the information for about a year, until he met former Major League pitcher Jim Bouton at a baseball conference in April.

"If I made a big deal of the find myself, it would've been seen as self-promotional," said Thorn, author of "Total Baseball" and several other books on the sport.

Bouton, who lives in nearby Egremont and is helping to organize a restoration of Pittsfield's Wahconah Park baseball field, prompted city officials to hunt down the original ordinance.

"We knew we had the document catalogued in our vault," said Ron Latham, director of the Berkshire Athenaeum. "But we didn't necessarily appreciate the significance of it."

The document, well preserved if not a bit yellowed around the edges, was authenticated by researchers at the Williamstown Art Conservation Center, who dated the paper and ink to 1791. For now, the ordinance will be tucked back in the vault until city officials figure out how to properly display it. A copy will be hung at Wahconah Park.

The long-accepted and recently disputed story of baseball's origins centers around Cooperstown, N.Y., where Abner Doubleday is said to have come up with the rules for the modern game in 1839.

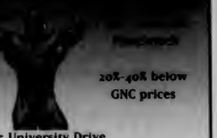
That legend long legitimized the National Baseball Hall of Fame's presence in Cooperstown, although later evidence pointed to the first real game being played in Hoboken, N.J., in 1846.

And in 2001, a librarian at New York University came across two newspaper articles published on April 25, 1823 that show an organized form of a game called "base ball" was being played in Manhattan.

The Pittsfield group hopes their find will put to rest once and for all the debate about the game's origins, but they acknowledge it may just be a matter of time before they're one-upped by another town.

"Pittsfield is baseball's birthplace until further notice," Thorn said. "We know that baseball was like a field of dandelions in the late 1700s and early 1800s — it was growing up everywhere."

Experts say it may be impossible to ever say exactly where and when the game was created because it evolved from earlier games, such as cricket and rounders, English games played with a bat and ball.



"There's no way of pinpointing where the game was first played," said Jeff Idelson, a spokesman for the Hall of Fame. "Baseball wasn't really born anywhere."

But Pittsfield might be a sensible home for the sport. Some historians have documented "the Massachusetts game" as a precursor to modern baseball, where runners were thrown out if they were hit by a ball.

Bouton, whose decade-long career as a pitcher included stints with the New York Yankees and Houston Astros, is betting that the discovery will bring attention to Wahconah Park, one of the nation's oldest ballparks and the former home of several minor league teams.

"We thought this was a lucky stroke," Bouton said. "I'm sure Pittsfield will live off this for a while."

ABSOLUTE NUTRITION
Weight Loss and Body Building Specialists

Weight Loss
Student Discounts
20%-40% below GNC prices
65 University Drive
Next to Beach Club Tanning
687-6083

Studio 204 Theater Department

Students PERFORM COMEDY Through History
DON JUAN, and other short plays.
5:00 PM (ends at 5:45)
Wednesday, May 12
(Free Admission)
Fine Arts Center Room 204

ISLAND GIRL

THE ONE YOU WANT. THE WAY YOU WANT IT.

ZANNA
downtown Amherst

The last day to Cancel your Fall 2004
Housing Assignment
without being charged a Cancellation Fee is Friday, May 28th

Cancellation Fee Schedule for Fall 2004:
5:00pm, May 28 through 5:00pm, June 30 $200
5:00pm, June 30 through 5:00pm, July 30 $300
5:00pm, July 30 through Fall 04 Semester $400

If you are eligible, you may call or visit the Housing Assignment Office to cancel your housing. Only the student may cancel his or her own housing assignment.

COURTESY KAREN WINGER

Junior righthander Kelli Arnold will likely get the call to pitch in the 2004 Atlantic 10 tournament.

UM to host A-10 tournament

SOFTBALL from page 12

er Aisha Franke said. "We want to come out right from the gates, first inning, just dominating, we want to be chasing them instead of being chased.

"We want to stay at our [level], because we know what we work on, we work so hard at practice, and we've have so many great games against great competition in New England. We're just so far ahead, they know it and we need to know it."

Franke has been the text-book example of the perseverance that has embodied the young Minutewomen in 2004. After starting off the season hitting .218 through the first 19 games, she has bounced back from her slump tremendously. Through the last 26 contests, she has batted .424 with 19 runs, seven RBI and 10 stolen bases, giving her a .324 average on the year.

"Coach [Sortino] was telling me 'you've got to slow down' and we talked about it in a conversation. She wanted me to get it in play on the ground one time each game, and it kind of made things seem a bit easier," Franke said. "She worked a lot with me on the side batting-wise, and I think that really helped me out.

"It helped me to learn that I didn't need to do so much all at one time, and even me getting it in play one time during one game would make a difference and help the team out."

The young infield of Hilary Puglia, KI Kelley, Kristi Stefanoni and Amanda Morin continue to be in peak form as the season winds down, having turned a team-record 22 double plays this season.

"As far as defensively, it's business as usual," Sortino said. "This is the best defense we've ever had."

Zito: a Preakness veteran

By David Ginsburg
Associated Press

BALTIMORE (AP) — He's won so many big races, Nick Zito could probably get by on reputation alone.

After 31 years as a trainer — and two Kentucky Derby victories — Zito certainly earned the right to delegate work.

That simply is not his style, however. So Zito was at Pimlico Race Course before dawn Tuesday, watching The Cliff's Edge and Sir Shackleton prepare for Saturday's Preakness Stakes with easy jogs around the track.

He also escorted his horses out of the barn in the late afternoon, just to make sure they're comfortable with their new surroundings.

"When you get older, your energy level isn't there. But winning cures everything," said Zito, who remained at Pimlico until early evening. "If you win a lot more than you lose, that keeps you going."

Kentucky Derby winner Smarty Jones might be the most notable horse in the Preakness, but unless Bob Baffert or D. Wayne Lukas comes up with a late entry, no trainer here this week has better credentials than Zito.

In addition to training Derby champions Strike the Gold (1991) and Go For Gin (1994), Zito saddled Preakness winner Louis Quatorze (1994) and won countless other big events, including the Blue Grass Stakes (three times) and the Wood Memorial (twice).

"I always thought I was going to win more races than I did, but when you add them all up, I sound like Woody Stephens," Zito said. Comparing himself to one of the greatest trainers of all time was not an idle boast. Any list of horseracing's greatest figures wouldn't have Zito's name far from the top.

"He's fabulous for this industry," said Steve Taub, owner of Preakness entrant Imperialism. "He's a good guy, a great trainer. He gets high quality horses, doesn't get in their way, allows them to develop and have great success."

Zito has spent countless hours preparing The Cliff's Edge and Sir Shackleton. He didn't have a horse in the Preakness last year; now he has two entries in an effort to end his personal dry spell in the Triple Crown's middle jewel.

"It's been eight years. It would nice to put that on my resume again," Zito said. "If it doesn't happen, I'll just try again."

He thought he had a shot at a third Kentucky Derby win with The Cliff's Edge, but the horse ran a disappointing fifth after losing his front shoes on the sloppy track.

"You don't like to make excuses, because people hate excuses, but obviously his feet must have been stinging him a little bit. They had to be," Zito said. "The winner is a very good horse, no question. I do know that if we had some kind of traction, we probably would have come with some kind of run."

Sir Shackleton has won three of four career starts but was held out of the Derby and probably will need a perfect run to prevail at Pimlico.

"He's a horse that's getting better and better," Zito said. "You try to put all that in a proper perspective. That's why we're here. We're trying to have a shot. It's going to be interesting."

With Baffert and Lukas nowhere to be seen, Zito knows he's fortunate to have two entrants Saturday.

"I'm grateful to have top horses like this and to be in this position," he said. "It just shows you how hard this game is that those fellows aren't here. I'm not as big as those two guys, but maybe the man upstairs said, 'You can come in their place.'"

It's a privilege that Zito does not take for granted. After calling Lukas a "workaholic," Zito was asked if his rival works harder than he does.

"No. But just as much," he replied. "You have to."

That's how he's operated since entering the business in 1973.

"In this industry it takes many facets for a horse trainer to be successful, but I've heard he works as hard as they come," Taub said. "He is just unbelievable."

Mondesi to sit out 2004

SANTO DOMINGO, Dominican Republic (AP) — Pittsburgh Pirates outfielder Raul Mondesi, his pay withheld for most of the season because of a civil suit, will sit out the rest of the year.

Mondesi, 33, said the decision was only for this year and he may return next season.

A Dominican civil court ruled in February that Mondesi owed former major leaguer Mario Guerrero about $640,000 for helping him improve his baseball skills, a claim which Mondesi denies.

Mondesi appealed the ruling, but said the court ordered his nine accounts in nine Dominican banks frozen and the Pirates withheld his pay.

Last Wednesday, a Dominican court order that caused the Pirates to hold his pay was lifted. The Pirates then said they would release Mondesi's wages from an interest-bearing escrow account.

OLYMPICS

ATHENS, Greece (AP) — To the great relief of organizers, a section of roof for the main Olympic stadium began moving into place in a crucial step toward completing the centerpiece of the Athens Games.

In meeting a deadline set by IOC inspectors, Athens officials clearly are intent on avoiding the spectacle of an unfinished roof when the world's athletes assemble in three months.

One of the two 231-foot-high half-domes crept along tracks pulled by hydraulic jacks, and officials said it could reach its anchor location by Tuesday.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL

AMELIA ISLAND, Fla. (AP) — The Atlantic Coast Conference has requested proposals from nine cities to host its football championship game, which begins in 2005.

Jacksonville, Charlotte, N.C., and Orlando are considered among the top candidates. Miami, Tampa, Atlanta, Washington, Baltimore and East Rutherford, N.J., are also being considered.

ACC commissioner John Swofford didn't rate the cities, other than to say Atlanta was a long shot because it hosts the Southeastern Conference title game.

COLLEGE BASKETBALL

SPOKANE, Wash. (AP) — Gonzaga scoring leader Ronny Turiaf will return for his senior season, the 6-foot-10 forward said.

Ending weeks of speculation, the native of Martinique said he would forgo early entry in the NBA draft to complete his degree and work on his skills next season.

Turiaf led the Bulldogs with a 15.5 scoring average as Gonzaga went 28-3, 14-0 in the West Coast Conference.

TOWSON, Md. (AP) — Pat Kennedy was hired as Towson's men's basketball coach after spending the last two seasons at Montana.

Kennedy has coached three schools to the NCAA tournament — Iona, Florida State and DePaul. At Towson, he inherits a team that went 8-21 last year and hasn't been to the NCAA tournament in 13 seasons.

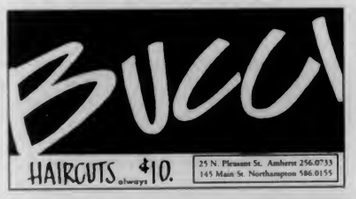
TENNIS

HAMBURG, Germany (AP) — Defending champion Guillermo Coria came back to beat qualifier Nicolas Almagro 3-6, 6-4, 7-5 in the first round of the Hamburg Masters, his 27th straight win on clay.

Coria, seeded second behind Roger Federer, hasn't lost a clay-court match since the 2003 French Open semifinals. He's 12-0 on the surface this year.

Also advancing after a bit of a struggle was Marat Safin, who saved two set points in the first set en route to a 7-6 (6), 7-5 victory over eighth-seeded Sebastien Grosjean.

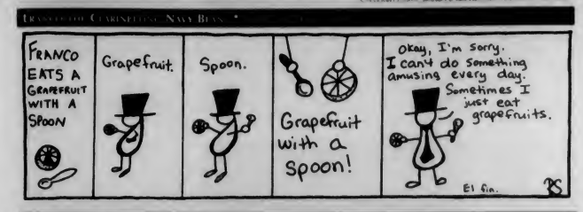
Three other seeded players lost: No. 10 Mark Philippoussis went down 7-6 (5), 6-1 against Joachim Johansson, Olivier Rochus beat No. 11 Paradorn Srichaphan 6-3, 6-4, and local wild-card entry Florian Mayer defeated No. 15 Jiri Novak 7-6 (5), 3-6, 6-4.

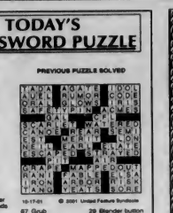


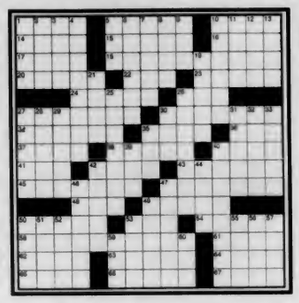
In other action, No. 16 Tommy Robredo rolled past Antony Dupuis 6-2, 6-0, and Sargis Sargsian eliminated Nikolay Davydenko 6-2, 6-4. Tommy Haas advanced when Vincent Spadea quit with a thigh muscle injury after losing the first six games.

ROME (AP) — Maria Sharapova beat Tatiana Perebiynis 6-4, 7-5 to reach the second round of the Italian Open.

In other matches, No. 10 Silvia Farina Elia beat Barbara Schett 6-4, 6-4, No. 14 Francesca Schiavone defeated Nicole Pratt 6-2, 6-3.







TODAY'S CROSSWORD PUZZLE

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

ACROSS
1 People with beaks
5 Time period
10 Abominable Snowman
14 With, to Pierre
15 Hightops
16 Lab culture
17 Cowboy star Laffoon
19 Foundation
20 Inundate
22 Casual top
23 Stands up
24 Turkish coins
25 Pantry item
29 Fishing (an activity)
34 Mountain flower
35 Endorsers' needs
36 Stag's mate
37 Yours and mine
38 Give the slip
40 Aabudge (dam)
41 Information
42 Wormlike
43 Fixes potatoes
45 Most profound
47 "Get outta here!"
48 Tripe — soan it with
49 VCR button
50 Not fresh
52 Hunter's weapon
54 Qualified
57 Stitched
58 Kitchen appliance
61 Travel choice
62 Reality unit
63 Accuse
64 Dot in the sea
65 Out
66 Model airplane wood
67 Grub

DOWN
1 Lug part
2 Famed office
3 Mexican money
4 They're learned
5 High school suits
6 Threshold
7 Plaintives needs
8 Sherlock's rival
9 Chick's mom
10 Bird's all-country
11 Sweetest heads
12 Container weight
13 Annoys
18 Pulls along
21 Very serious
26 Let go
27 Nick sheesers
27 Not whispered
28 Take a break
29 Blender button
30 Valentina
31 Bowl
32 Boiled tackle
33 F scout features
33 Billy ones
35 Settle up
39 Computer abbr
40 Abenuse
42 On the —
44 Honed
46 Final word
48 Fine
47 Snake sound
49 Counstified
50 Mop
51 Tijuana snaco
52 Curly hardo
53 Arizona river
55 Walrus load
56 About 2 2 pounds
57 Bulb
59 Subside
60 Teachers org

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Chicken Burritos
- Hungarian Noodle Bake
- Garden Vegetable Chili (vegan)

DINNER
- Extra Crispy Fried Chicken
- Meatloaf with Gravy
- Native American Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

WEDNESDAY
- High: 77
- Low: 54

THURSDAY
- High: 74
- Low: 53

FRIDAY
- High: 81
- Low: 59

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Glen Straub

PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Amelia P. Lincoln

COPY EDITOR
Scott Eldridge

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg

PRODUCTION STAFF
Jennifer DiMeglio/ Molly Eggleston/ Dave Pessah

H·O·R·O·S·C·O·P·E·S

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
It's all over.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You should learn how to swim. You fall in the water a lot.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
There are people who need free hot dogs more than you do.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Nice mullet.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Take it easy and enjoy the day.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You should pick some flowers. They're pretty.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Watch out for inanimate objects while riding your bike.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You never should have drank the water. You're destined to be weird for eternity.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Your family should have it's own reality show.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Live long and prosper.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You are never going to get laid. Are you kidding me!

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
That money is literally burning a hole in your pocket. It's smoking.

Quote for the Day

"When the world is on your shoulder/Gotta straighten up your act and boogie down"

-Michael Jackson

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

APARTMENT FOR RENT

Apt 2bdrm For Rent 253-2149 AmherstCenter Awesomelocation

Puffton Village 2 Bdrm Apt Avail. Lease begins in June Free Heat and Hot Water Call (914) 393-9505

Mill Valley Estates now Renting 2 bedrm $1050/1100. 4 bedrm $2100 available 6/1/04 No last months rent, Free Heat & Hot Water, 2 full baths, AC. On busline Mon-Fri 10-5pm 253-7377

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

AUTO FOR SALE

1994 Geo Prism 113,000 miles great condition New Timing Belt 4 New Tires $1200.00 O.B.O. 577-5129 665-7731

Ford Probe SE 1996 $1075 Call 413-687-7510. Morera@cna.umass.edu

Honda Civic EX 99 4DR Manual 68K mi. A/C Alarm Great condition $8200 545-1291

AUTO FOR SALE

1992 Honda Accord LX 4 door sedan 138K miles good condition $2000 253-6784

EMPLOYMENT

Babysitter position available in Amherst starting 9/11/04. Afternoons and possibly some full days for a 6 and 10 year old. Help with homework, play dates, activities. French speaking preferred. Free room possibly negotiable. Please send letter and CV to Betsy Chaisson 103 Converse Hall Amherst College PO Box 5000 Amherst, MA 01002

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413)584-4746

Play sports! Have fun! Save Money! Sports Camp in Maine. Coaches needed: Tennis, Basketball, Baseball, Water-sports, Ropes Course, Golf, Archery, and more. Work Outdoors and Have a Great Summer! Call Free: (888) 844-8080 or Apply: www.campcedar.com

EMPLOYMENT

Activism

Summer Jobs

For the Environment

3000-5000/Summer Join the state's largest public interest grassroots organization to protect our environment, public health, human rights and democracy. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Bobby 1-413-256-6434

BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Summer teenage bicycling trips. USA, Canada, Europe. Salary plus expense paid. Student Hosteling Program, P.O. Box 419, Conway, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, www.bicycletrips.com.

Resort Real Estate Sales Assistant: World renowned multi-million dollar real estate development company seeks motivated and confident individual to market high-end real estate at The Greenbrier Resort in White Sulphur Spring, West Virginia. Ideal candidate is very comfortable speaking on the phone & interested in pursuing a career in luxury real estate. Immediate openings available. Please send resumes to Mitch Johnson-mjohnson@gbmc.com

EMPLOYMENT

Summer Office Help Needed! Amherst Leisure Services is looking for a summer registration clerk to begin mid to late may. Duties include: customer service, accepting registrations and payments for numerous programs, data entry, answering phones, filing, and other clerical duties in a busy recreation department. Preferred hours are M-F 9 a.m.-4:30 p.m., but may be flexible. Pay range is $7.44-8.61/hr. depending upon experience. Apply at: Town of Amherst Leisure Services, 70 Boltwood Walk, Bangs Community Center, Amherst, MA 01002. Resumes and letters of inquiry may also be sent to: dez-marasp@town.amherst.ma.us For further information, call Pat t 413-256-4065.

Greenfield Secure Self Storage seeks student P/T to rent our self storage units on campus 413-775-0074

Painters Wanted in Amherst Area. No Experience Necessary Call Alison@413-627-9043

LIFEGUARD Brandywine Apts. needs a certified lifeguard. Call or stop by. 549-0600

EMPLOYMENT

Summer on Cape Cod: Hang out with 2 low maintenance boys 8 and 11. Several days a week. No nights, no weekends. Free room and board plus $50.00 per week Call Jack at 508-888-5230.

Boero Y Sano is hiring for positions for fall semester please apply in person Call for directions 253-4000

Lowell Area Driven Leader needed to be crew chief for one of the state's largest exterior house painting companies. Must be handworking, Independent & have own car. Exp. preferred, but not necessary. Call Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Painters Wanted in Danvers area want a challenging Job outdoors w/good $$$? Seeking driven, Hardworking Individual w/own car to be a painting crew member. No exp. necessary Call: Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Hardworking individuals living around 93/95 belt South of I-90 for fulltime painter positions. Challenging job requires independence, own car. $10-$12 base rate. Call Will @ 617-699-8970

EMPLOYMENT

Students wanted for a summer painting job: $420 $630/week Experience not needed but a plus. All hired will go through a paid training program. Call 888-277-9787 or go to COLLEGE-PRO.COM. Work with friends.

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hiuspromotions.com

"Bartending" $300/Day Potential. No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

FOR SALE

Microfridge for sale Terrific Condition for $600.00 Asking $300.00 or best offer Call 546-1377.

FURNITURE FOR SALE

Furniture and Two Cars for Sale Call for details (413) 536-7933

Graduating in May everything must go Call 549-0069

HOUSE FOR RENT

3 Bedrooms 2 baths on bus line Amherst 413-323-6453

HOUSE FOR RENT

5 Bedroom house 2 1/2 miles On bus line Washer/dryer Home 253-3670 leave a message, or cell 413-530-6906.

Hadley 5 Bedroom Plus home, 2 baths w/ laundry hookup. Large yard, minutes from UMass. 549-4270

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

ROOMMATE WANTED

Female roommate wanted to share 2-bd apt in Sunderland. $418/mo. Includes heat, hot water, and cable. Available 6/1 or earlier. Call Lauren @ 860-604-6098.

SERVICES

Math/Physics tutor available: $30/hour, 20/hour (travel); call Dr. Kline (413-552-3805)

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

SUBLET

Avail Puffton waiting list Wed 2bath Puffton upgraded $1305/mo June1-August31 '04 or take our lease to '05 549-5909

SUMMER SUBLET

1 bedroom in Puffton for Sublet starting June 1st Call Stacey at 695-2944 $750 negotiable possible Fall option.

2 Lg Bdrm apt Main St on bus route Minutes from UMass Summer with Fall option 256-1146

1 Bdrm Apt. in Cliffside Call 665-1218

Live downtown this summer! Large 4BR 2 floor apt next to Amherst HS. Washer & dryer included. 5 min. to bus stop & town. ONLY $362.50 per room + utilities. Available 6/1 thru 8/15. Contact Rob agraff@student.umass.edu/978-808-7322

2 bedrooms, fully furnished apartment, 1 full bath. Available June 1st- September 1st. Call Rachel Szyman @ 781-264-1512

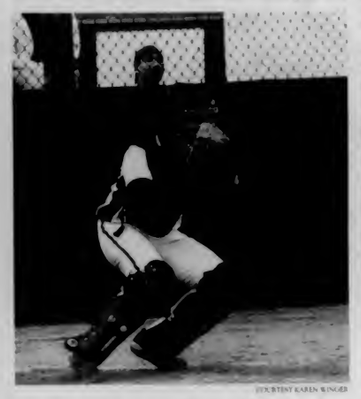
Good Luck with Finals!

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MAY 12, 2004 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass to host softball A-10's



Minutewomen set to battle Fordham

By Brendan Hall
Collegian Staff

Some might say the University of Massachusetts softball team carries an advantage leading into the postseason.

The Minutewomen (32-13, 11-1 Atlantic 10) will not have to travel an inch for tomorrow's A-10 Tournament. Rather, they'll be staying in their own backyard. For most of the teams around the area and A-10, the UMass Softball Complex is a formidable place to have a softball game.

The Maroon and White haven't lost a home game since April of 2000, and have won a nation-leading 72 straight at home. In all, they have lost just two decisions at the Complex since its opening in 2000.

COURTESY KAREN WINGER

Catcher Jamie Cahalan and the Maroon and White haven't lost a home game at the UMass Softball Complex since April of 2002.

Needless to say, the Minutewomen will be in a comfortable position to capture their tenth consecutive A-10 title when they take the field tomorrow against the fourth-seeded Fordham Rams.

"I don't think it's an advantage as much as it is just comfortable," coach Elaine Sortino said. "It's comfortable for us to play here, we know the terrain, we know the grounds, plus we get to have our fans here."

To Sortino, home field advantage is simply a myth.

"It has nothing to do with [the field], in our minds," she said. "In our minds, we're pursuing an Atlantic 10 Championship for 2004, it's got nothing to do with the field, it doesn't have anything to do with being home. It only has to do with what we need to do, and the things we've been working on and preparing for all season long to get to this point."

If the Minutewomen are to come out on top, the most important thing will be to play at their own level of ball.

Against the Rams two Saturdays ago, the Minutewomen found themselves in a hole early. Down 3-3 in the second inning, it took a bases-clearing triple from resident clutch hitter Denise Denis to get the ball rolling and eventually mercyrule Fordham 14-6.

Third-seeded Temple handed UMass its last loss, on April 25 in the first double header at Temple's brand new Ambler Softball Field. With runners in scoring position, Lesley Ferrara grounded out to the shortstop to give the Owls their first win at the new field, 2-1, and their first win against the Minutewomen since 1997.

UMass has embarked on an eight-game win streak since the loss.

"We know that these teams don't think they can beat us, and we really have to play on that. These teams fear us," centerfield-

See SOFTBALL on page 10

COURTESY KAREN WINGER

Junior Hilary Puglia and her infield teammates have turned 22 double plays during the regular season.

UM calls off game at Vermont

Tuesday's non-conference baseball game between the University of Massachusetts and the University of Vermont, scheduled to be played at 3 p.m. at Centennial Field in Burlington, Vt. has been cancelled due to a conflict with exams. No make-up date will be made.

In addition, previously postponed games with the University of Hartford and Marist will not be made up, as they have also been cancelled due to exam-related conflicts.

The Maroon and White (16-22 8-10 Atlantic 10) currently sit in fourth place in the A-10 East Division after taking two-of-three from Temple over the weekend. Rhode Island leads the division with a 17-4 conference record, followed by St. Bonaventure (12-6) and Fordham (11-10).

The Minutemen return to action this afternoon, when they will host Central Connecticut State in their final non-conference matchup of the season. First pitch is scheduled for 3 pm at Earl Lorden Field.

UMass will then complete the A-10 portion of their schedule over the next two weekends.

They will travel to Olean, N.Y. for a three-game weekend series with St. Bonaventure this weekend, and will host defending A-10 champion Richmond for a three-game series beginning a week from Saturday in Amherst.

-Mike Marzelli

Damon to shave for local Boston charity

By Howard Ulman
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) — Johnny Damon plans to lose the caveman look for charity.

The Red Sox center fielder said Monday he'll shave the black beard he's had since the offseason to benefit Boston public libraries and reading and tutoring programs for youngsters.

The Gillette Co., based in Boston, will provide the funds for the programs, Damon said before Monday night's game against Cleveland. A call seeking comment from Gillette was not returned Monday.

"Gillette told me to pick out an organization" to help, said Damon, who believes his shaving will take place May 21. He plans to keep his shoulder-length black hair.

"Gillette's the leading shaving brand anyway, so they're not too concerned" about providing funds for the programs, Damon said. "They don't have to do this but they want to."

Damon said he's not getting paid for his participation.

The reading program is geared to making sure students can read by the time they're in third grade, he said. Money also will go to a program for students to go to public libraries for help with homework.

Damon was thinking of getting rid of the beard anyway.

"It's starting to get hot," he said. "It's looking sloppy. I can always grow it back in two weeks."

Damon reported to spring training in February with long hair that he said he hadn't cut for more than a year. He also had the beard, which he has trimmed since then.

When he arrived at spring training in Fort Myers, Fla., he talked about an after-dark race he said he had on the Orlando street where he lives, which has a 25 mph speed limit.

"Once a car starts coming, I'll just race it to my house," he said. "I scare the cars to speed up a little more, seeing a caveman-looking guy with long hair running at 10 or 11 at night."

Might his next shaving experience lead to commercials for Gillette?

"Hopefully, there's future things with them," Damon said. "It would be nice."

TONY GUTIERREZ/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Johnny Damon will shave off his now-famous facial hair to benefit the Boston Public Library's reading and tutoring program.

Bryant pleads not guilty

Trial date to be set at May 27th hearing

By Jon Sarche
Associated Press

EAGLE, Colo. (AP) — Nearly 11 months after his arrest, NBA star Kobe Bryant pleaded not guilty Tuesday to a rape charge that could land him in prison for life.

Standing impassively before state District Judge Terry Ruckriegle, Bryant said only four words during his brief arraignment.

"Yes sir," he said, bending slightly to speak into a microphone when asked if he understood the charge and potential penalty. Asked for his plea, he answered "not guilty" and sat down shortly afterward.

The judge adjourned the hearing moments later, saying he expected to set a trial date during a May 27 hearing. Bryant left, with plenty of time to fly back to Los Angeles for Tuesday night playoff game against San Antonio.

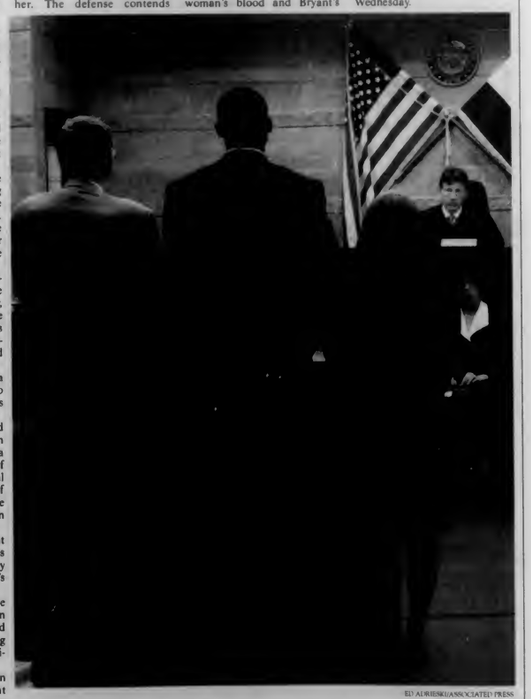
The parents of the 19-year-old accuser watched the arraignment from the gallery, sitting about 20 feet from the Los Angeles Lakers star. As they walked out of the courtroom, they smiled and nodded at acquaintances.

The woman, who made a surprise appearance Monday to watch pretrial arguments, was not in attendance Tuesday.

Bryant, 25, has said he had consensual sex with the woman last summer at the Vail-area resort where she worked. If convicted of felony sexual assault, the married father of one would face four years to life in prison or 20 years to life on probation.

Ruckriegle chose to read Bryant the formal charge and penalties even though defense attorney Pamela Mackey waived Bryant's right to hear the details.

The last time Bryant spoke in open court was Aug. 6, when he said "No, sir" when asked whether he objected to giving up his right to have a preliminary hearing within 30 days.



The trial must be set within six months unless Bryant waives that right. Both sides have told the judge they think a trial would take two to three weeks.

Key issues remain unresolved before there can be a trial.

Earlier Tuesday, attorneys argued behind closed doors on a defense motion to use the accuser's sexual history against her. The defense contends injuries found during a hospital examination could have been caused by other sexual partners.

The defense also wants Bryant's statements to authorities, a T-shirt stained with the woman's blood and Bryant's hospital exam barred as evidence because of alleged missteps by authorities.

The quick pace of this week's pretrial hearing prompted the cancellation of a court session scheduled for Wednesday.

ED ANDRIESKI/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kobe Bryant, between attorneys Hall Haddon (left) and Pamela Mackey, stands before judge Terry Ruckriegle on Tuesday in Eagle, Colo. Bryant officially pleaded not guilty to one count of rape.

UMass professor's script goes to Berlin Film Festival
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 8

Sports sheds a tear in their 2004 Misty Eyes
SPORTS, PAGE 12

The Daily Collegian

THURSDAY, MAY 13, 2004 NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 139

New bill proposes APD and UMPD cooperative effort

By Erika Lovley
Collegian Staff

Whenever there is a problem on the University of Massachusetts campus that the 57 officer UMass Police Department cannot handle, Amherst police have always been ready to lend a helping hand by loaning officers.

When departments swap officers, however, there is no formal legislation to determine which department is responsible for the additional funding, or where and when officers have arrest powers.

Now, there is a new bill in front of the state Legislature that would solve this problem. Sponsored by Rep. Ellen Story of Amherst, the mutual-aid bill will allow the UMass campus and it's 24,000 residents to be considered a town, allowing UMass police to have arrest powers in the town of Amherst, and Amherst police to have jurisdiction on the UMass campus. It would also allow UMPD to call on police departments in neighboring towns for assistance, such as Hadley.

"In an emergency, we can call town police and they can call us and ask for help," said Chief Barbara O'Connor of UMPD. "The bill formalizes our ability to do that."

Currently, the lines of jurisdiction are fuzzy for both departments. Although Amherst police technically have no arresting powers on the UMass campus, there are also areas very close to campus that UMPD has no jurisdiction over, including some parts of North Pleasant Street, East Pleasant Street, or "Frat Row", and Olympia Drive.

"We have no jurisdiction outside of campus property that isn't owned, controlled, or rented by the University," said O'Connor.

This means that UMPD officers cannot make arrests in Amherst even if they see a crime being committed.

"We have the same rights as [a citizen does] which is citizen's arrest power," O'Connor said. "If an officer was in a marked cruiser, we can [only] stop immediate danger and call the town police."

The bill will also determine when the department will be responsible for the fees incurred by swapping officers, such as such as overtime pay, injury and worker's compensation.

"Right now, if I call Amherst police because Southwest [Residential Area] is out of control, Amherst police assume those costs. It is part of our understanding," said O'Connor.

O'Connor said that in the past, UMPD has sent officers to aid Amherst police with prisoner searches, bad weather accidents and disabled motor vehicles.

Charles Scherpa, chief of Amherst Police, said he created the bill after realizing the need for a mutual aid agreement between the departments.

"There are no downsides that I can see," he said.

However, O'Connor said she thought the bill might encounter some problems in getting passed in Boston.

"I think there's a lot of concern in the police field about jurisdiction issues. Some people would not want to see UMass considered a town solely for the mutual aid reason," she said.

O'Connor also stressed that if the mutual aid agreement does pass, it will not address chronic underfunding that her department has experienced due to budget cuts.

SGA selects Higgins as Speaker

Senators approve new executive cabinet members

MATTHEW B. REISS/COLLEGIAN

Patrick Higgins was selected as the Student Government Association Senate Speaker during last night's meeting.

By Melissa Blanksteen
Collegian Staff

The Student Government Association Senate picked its Speaker for the 2004-2005 year last night, voting for for Patrick Higgins, former chair of the Ways and Means Committee and SGA presidential candidate, with a 22-18 vote.

Seamus Brennan, former chair of the Administrative Affairs Committee, will be the new Associate Speaker, after winning with a 23 to 17 vote.

Higgins ran against former Associate Speaker Chris Eckel, who acted as Speaker for five weeks this semester after Jared Nokes vacated the spot to fill in as Interim SGA president. Brennan ran against Craig Goldschmidt, who worked as associate speaker with Eckel.

"I know many of you are thinking, 'You've run for president, what are you thinking?'" Higgins said. "When you've been here for so long, you want to advocate to the highest level. You want to be that go-to person."

Higgins said he wants to help new senators get acquainted with Senate business faster, and have their interests listened to by the Speaker.

As for Brennan, he said he wants to make sure the Senate minutes are more detailed. In order to do this, he said he would like to bring a computer down to the Senate floor to type the meetings as they progress.

Debate over the candidacy of Brennan, a freshman, focused on some typos he made as Administrative Affairs Chair. In response, he noted that he will triple check his work in his new position.

"There was one line that I forgot and omitted [in the Office of ALANA Affairs Charter]. I feel that I know the bylaws well enough, I am more than capable of taking attendance," Brennan said.

In other Senate business, six nominees by SGA President Eduardo Bustamante for the Executive Cabinet stood in front of the Senate in lengthy debates.

All the nominations were approved, including Tru Lang as Secretary of the Registry, Felicia Awosan as Secretary of Finance, Jeff Napolitano as Secretary of Public Policy and Relations and Brian Long as Secretary of University Policy. Also, Ruhaina Raza was approved as Secretary of Finance, and Valerie Louis was approved as the Secretary of Administrative Affairs.

The Senate spent three hours debating the candidates' qualifications, and their desire for the positions.

Heavy debate focused on two candidates: Jeff Napolitano and Brian Long.

Several SGA officials felt that Napolitano's columnist position this year with The Massachusetts Daily Collegian was a conflict of interest. Mina Safain, former Secretary of Public Policy and Relations, brought up several columns where Napolitano voiced negative opinions on the SGA.

"If you were talking about me, then I don't know what I'd want to do," Safain said. "That is the most hurtful thing you can say to me as a member of the SGA."

Goldschmidt countered Safain's argument.

"Would you rather have somebody come and bash the SGA and do nothing about it? Or would you rather have someone have troubles with the SGA and do something about it?" he said.

Napolitano gave up his position on The Collegian staff based on his appointment last night, and was approved with a 21-12 vote, with six abstentions.

With Long, who was former Secretary of University Policy and presidential candidate, debate came from Russell Plato, former Secretary of Diversity Issues, and Sen. Timothy Busiere. Plato focused on Long's record under the last administration and Busiere focused on Long's alcohol policy.

"[Long]'s proven past inability to address most issues proves that he will be ineffective of advocating in the future," Plato said. "[Long] missed meeting after meeting with the Cabinet and the President, on several occasions choosing to go to a sporting event."

Sen. David Peterson was in disbelief that he had to debate for Long.

"He pretty much knows the University front and back," he said. He went on to say that in a University Policy trivia game, Long would win, hands-down.

The meeting adjourned a little after 12 a.m., leaving one motion unheard for the semester on an alcohol policy roundtable for next semester, and three ties unbroken in area government.

At the beginning of the meeting, Sen. Raul Brens and Dan Pomeroy played a song from a musical called "Avenue Q."

The song's main lyric was "I think that everyone is a little bit racist sometimes." It included jokes on racism on all sides. They followed it by a song with lyrics including, "Why can't we be friends."

Many Senators nervously laughed, and Speaker Jared Nokes stepped aside to let the song complete.

Sen. Gladys Franco expressed some discomfort over the song. "The song is a little bit troubling. If we know we are a little bit racist, we should try and change that," she said.

During his Chair Report, Pomeroy explained his actions.

"It's good to laugh and be friends. We thought it was funny and we thought we'd play it," he said. "The first step to overcoming any prejudice is to recognize that it exists. We didn't want to offend anyone."

From the bean to the cup

Free Trade coffee's global effect

By Ferron Salniker
Collegian Staff

GUATEMALA — Towering inactive volcanoes hover over the glistening body of water that is Lake Atitlan. The sun beams softer than it would on most days, and a cool breeze brushes past the cheeks of the local women washing their embroidered clothes in the lake, which is surrounded by several villages.

Children run up to European tourists offering bracelets, purses, or even just friendly questions. Elderly women, carrying bundles of flowers on their heads walk down cobblestone roads past the small pastel-colored houses, and later stop to chat near the shore.

Miles away in the highlands, away from the tourists and the clear water the sun beats harder on the ground. Only a few cars pass by, stirring up the dust that falls back down on the unpaved ground.

Two women giggle like middle schoolgirls. Their faces stay shaded by the barely standing shack behind them. While blushing at the occasional passersby, the sisters Gloria, 26, and Elvira, 19, keep a watchful eye out for their children playing beside them. A truck passes by and Gloria's head lifts up, she peers through the dust, hoping to see her husband, and then leans back once the dust clears, and only a barren road, her daughter, son and niece are left.

For the three young children, bright-eyed, with dirt-smudged cheeks, the garbage, egg crates and soda bottles are toys and the row of wooden shacks, plantation housing, is a playground. For Gloria and Elvira, the one-room shack, labeled "19" in bright red, is home. Ten months out of the year, they sit next to their home, waiting for their husbands.

They wait for any coins that might jingle in their husband's pockets. They wait for their tortillas that are eaten even after several days of becoming stale. They wait for their children to grow into the trade their fathers work in: coffee. They wait for November and December, the two months when the two sisters wake up earlier than the sun does to spend their days working in the fields. Elvira and Gloria are coffee pickers making less than $1 a day.

FERRON SALNIKER/COLLEGIAN

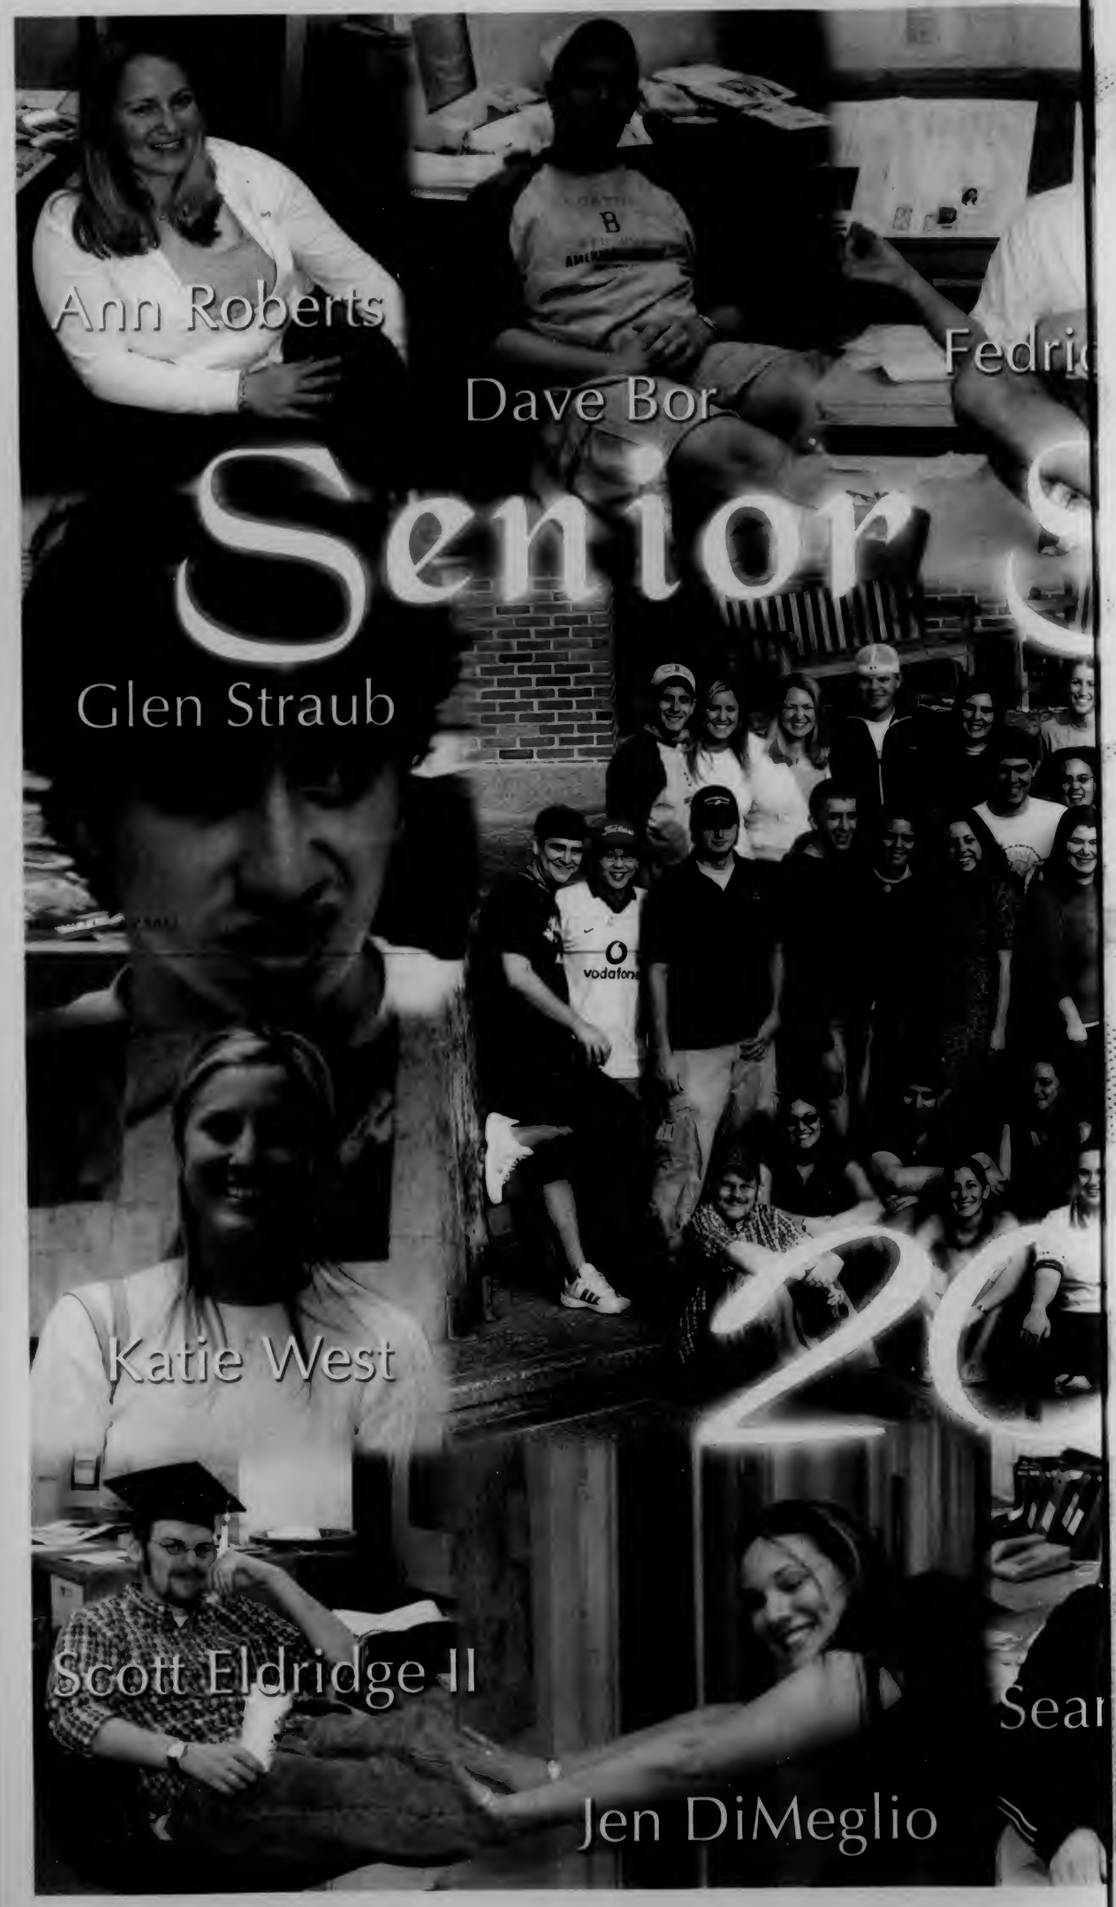
Coffee pickers Gloria and Elvira, sit outside of their one-room house in a coffee plantation in the highlands of Lake Atitlan, Guatemala. The sisters each make less than $1 a day for two months out of the year.

THE INTERNATIONAL COFFEE CRISIS

Sadly, the lifestyles of Elvira and Gloria are common in developing countries like Guatemala, one of the Top 10 coffee-producing nations in the world. After oil, coffee is the world's second most valuable commodity exported by developing countries, and is grown in over 50 countries in South America, Central America, Asia, Africa and the Caribbean. The International Coffee Organization estimates that nearly 25 million farmers worldwide depend on growing coffee for their economic livelihood.

Meanwhile, the demand for coffee is booming, extending to more than 500 billion cups being served worldwide each year, according to the ICO. Coffee is drank daily by more than half of all Americans over the age of 18 — 107 million people. Students devour it, hitting up coffee shops to fuel late-night studying. Professionals wake up to it, a necessary fuel before heading to long days at work.

But the production still outweighs the demand, and the situation is causing a great imbalance, leaving the major players in the coffee business highly successful and the farmers coping with the disintegrating prices of their crop.



"The main reason prices have gone through the floor is that the International Coffee Agreement fell apart in the late 1980s," said Carmen Deere, an economics professor and development economist at the University of Massachusetts specializing in Latin American agricultural development issues. "The ICA managed an international quota system for producing countries that kept supply more or less in tune with demand at a target price."

Deere said that once the agreement broke down, countries started trying to export more, each trying to gain market share at the expense of the other. Since all of the countries were pursuing the same strategy, the market was flooded with coffee and prices plummeted.

The fall has made prices for coffee on the world market the lowest in 100 years, according to the ICO. The value of coffee retail sales exceeds $70 billion, but coffee producing countries only end up with $5.5 billion in their hands. The result is that coffee, is being paid for by the poorest people in the world.

Small farmers are devastated, and forced to compensate their health and education to survive. Families are pulling their children, specifically girls, out of school. Many can no longer afford basic medicine, and are forced to cut back on food. In Vietnam, according to ICO, farmers are selling their possessions to satisfy debt collectors. In Colombia, coca plantations

See COFFEE on page 4

Around the nation

Washington

Senators see additional abuse photos

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senators are getting a look at more photos of American soldiers brutalizing Iraqi prisoners but won't have the authority to release the pictures that the Pentagon warns could deepen international fury over the abuses.

The photographs were being made available for three hours yesterday afternoon in a high — security, classified office in the Capitol. After that, they were to be returned to the Pentagon while the Bush administration decides whether to make them public.

Fears that the prisoner abuses would trigger a violent backlash appeared to be realized Tuesday when a video was posted on an al-Qaida linked Web site showing the beheading of an American civilian. The video said the killing was to avenge the prisoner abuse.

The viewing of pictures in the Capitol comes a day after senators challenged military officials who pinned most of the blame for the mistreatment on a small group of soldiers and on supervisors who provided inadequate training and leadership.

The Army officer who investigated the abuses, Maj. Gen. Antonio Taguba, told the Senate Armed Services Committee that military police who acted improperly did so "of their own volition."

But several senators questioned whether low-ranking soldiers would have created the sexually humiliating scenarios by themselves.

San Francisco

Gap describes working conditions in factories

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — In an unusual display of corporate candor, Gap Inc. yesterday acknowledged that many of the overseas workers making the retailer's clothes are mistreated and vowed to improve often shoddy factory conditions by cracking down on unrepentant manufacturers.

The San Francisco — based owner of the Gap, Old Navy and Banana Republic stores made the comments Wednesday in its first ever "social responsibility" report a 40 — page document that mixed contrition about the past with promises to do better in the future.

"We feel strongly that commerce and social responsibility don't have to be at odds," Gap CEO Paul Pressler told a small gathering of shareholders yesterday at the company's annual meeting.

As the company strives to hold its overseas suppliers more accountable, Gap is uncovering thousands of violations at 3,009 factories scattered across roughly 50 countries. "Few factories, if any, are in full compliance all of the time," the report said.

Washington

Government proposes new safety rule

WASHINGTON (AP) — Safety standards proposed yesterday to protect people in side-impact crashes are intended to save as many as 1,000 lives a year and reduce head injuries, auto regulators said.

The plan, which could be in place by 2009, goes beyond the current standards that require only protection for people's torsos.

Automakers will decide for themselves how to comply. The Alliance of Automobile Manufacturers, a trade group representing 10 automakers, estimates the required safety changes will add between $200 and $500 to the cost of a vehicle.

"While it's very expensive, this is a rule that will have tremendous benefits," said Dr. Jeffrey Runge, head of the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration.

Side-impact crashes kill about 10,000 people annually. That is about one-quarter of all deaths on the nation's roads.

Vehicles will have to meet a basic level of safety to be on the road. Consumers will be able to see how well the vehicles performed on the agency's Web site.

"Quite often the person struck in the side had been doing everything right: driving sober, wearing a safety belt and going through a green light, only to get rammed in the side by a driver who ran a red light or ignored a stop sign," said Runge, a trauma surgeon.

Around the world

Iraq

Beheaded American civilian had been advised to leave Iraq, US officials say

BAGHDAD, Iraq (AP) — An American civilian who was beheaded in a grisly video posted on an al-Qaida-linked Web site had been warned to leave Iraq but refused, U.S. officials said yesterday. The masked men who butchered him claimed they were angered by coalition abuses of Iraqi prisoners.

The American captive identified himself as Nick Berg, 26, of West Chester, Pa., a suburb of Philadelphia. His body was found near a highway overpass in Baghdad on Saturday, the same day he was beheaded, a U.S. official said.

After pushing Berg to the floor, the men severed his head and held it up for the camera on the video posted Tuesday. It bore the title "Abu Musab al-Zarqawi shown slaughtering an American," referring to an associate of Osama bin Laden believed behind a wave of suicide bombings in Iraq.

It was unclear whether al-Zarqawi was shown in the video or simply ordered the execution. Al-Zarqawi also is sought in the assassination of a U.S. diplomat in Jordan in 2002. The United States has offered a $10 million reward for information leading to his capture or killing.

Iraq

US soldiers battle al-Sadr supporters

KARBALA, Iraq (AP) — U.S. soldiers backed by tanks and helicopters battled fighters loyal to radical cleric Muqtada al-Sadr near a mosque in the holy city of Karbala yesterday, hours after Iraqi leaders agreed on a proposal that would end al-Sadr's standoff with the U.S.-led forces. Up to 25 insurgents were killed, the coalition said.

Half of the Mukhaiyam mosque, which had served as a base for al-Sadr followers, was destroyed and seven hotels were on fire after tanks opened fire and jets bombed the area. Most of the shops in Tal al-Zeinabiya, a central market, and three ambulances were also destroyed.

American troops and al-Sadr's followers also fought overnight on the outskirts of two other southern cities, Kufa and Najaf. Residents heard large explosions. One Iraqi was killed and four were wounded in Kufa, and four Iraqis were wounded in Najaf, hospital officials said.

U.S. soldiers raided houses Tuesday night in Sadr City, a Baghdad neighborhood where support for al-Sadr is strong, witnesses said. Three Iraqis were killed. At a funeral ceremony yesterday for one of the slain men, mourners raised Iraqi flags and al-Sadr posters as they chanted: "Down, down U.S.A."

Gaza Strip

Israeli missile kills seven Palestinians

GAZA CITY, Gaza Strip (AP) — An explosion destroyed an Israeli armored vehicle yesterday, killing five soldiers, in the second such attack by Palestinian militants in Gaza in two days. Hours later, an Israeli missile attack killed seven Palestinians, residents and Palestinian medical officials said.

Fourteen other Palestinians were wounded in the missile strike on the Rafah refugee camp near the Egyptian border, the medical officials said.

The military said it targeted a group of militants planting bombs and firing at soldiers searching the area of yesterday's blast, which occurred next to the camp on the Gaza-Egypt border.

Residents said at least four of the Palestinians killed were gunmen.

In all, 11 Israeli soldiers and 23 Palestinians were killed in three days of Gaza fighting Tuesday and yesterday, and more than 175 Palestinians were wounded in the biggest operation in Gaza in nearly a decade.

The Israeli deaths reignited debate over Prime Minister Ariel Sharon's plan to withdraw Israeli troops and settlers from Gaza, despite a veto by his Likud Party and fierce opposition by ultranationalist coalition partners.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
113 Campus Center
University of Massachusetts
Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Jennifer Eastwood
MANAGING EDITOR Dan Lamothe
BUSINESS MANAGER Peter Foundas
PRODUCTION MANAGER Scott Pihl
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Nick Markantonatos
ADVERTISING MANAGER Sean Costello
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Shannon Farrington
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Glen Straub
COPY EDITOR Molly Eggleston
EDITORIAL EDITOR Matthew Reid
FEATURES EDITOR S. J. Port
NEWS EDITOR Ferron Salsiker
PHOTO EDITOR Scott Eldridge II
SPORTS EDITOR Andrew Merritt
CIRCULATION MANAGER Kristen Weiss
CLASSIFIED ADVERTISING Marty Pappo
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Mark Lagatic
FINANCE MANAGER Greg Stamm
HUMAN RESOURCE Renee Brand
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING David Bor
ASSISTANT BUSINESS Jaclynn Sorenson
ASSISTANT DISTRIBUTION Josh Kiggins
ASSISTANT FINANCE Richard Pacheco
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Rachael Bruno
GRAPHICS ADVISOR Charlie Huggins
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Meghan Healy
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Cameron J. Woods
ASSISTANT EDITORIAL Paige Cram
ASSISTANT NEWS Erika Lovley
ASSISTANT NEWS Morris Singer
ASSISTANT PHOTO Amelia P. Lincoln
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Marzelli
ASSISTANT SPORTS Robert McGovern

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE THRICE-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AUDITED SINCE 1940. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

DAILY COLLEGIAN
DAILY COLLEGIAN
DAILY COLLEGIAN
DAILY COLLEGIAN
DAILY COLLEGIAN
DAILY COLLEGIAN
DAILY COLLEGIAN
DAILY COLLEGIAN
DAILY COLLEGIAN
DAILY COLLEGIAN
DAILY COLLEGIAN

GRAPHICS
the Collegian is hiring for next semester

Come talk to Scott, Shannon, or Rachael or call 545-1864
105 Campus Center Basement
Freshmen and Sophomores are encouraged to apply

STUDENT VALUE MENU Pick any number

1 One large one topping pizza
2 One small, 2-topping pizza
3 One small, 1-topping pizza & one order of Bread Sticks.
4 10 pc. Buffalo Wings, & one order of a Bread side item.
5 10 pc. Domino's Pizza Buffalo Chicken Kickers & one order of a Bread side item.
6 Small Specialty Pizza. (Deluxe Feast , Hawaiian Feast , MeatZZa Feast , Veggi Feast , Pepperoni Feast , Bacon Cheeseburger Feast)
7 Two orders of Bread Sticks & 2 cans of Coke®.
8 Medium 1-topping pizza & 2 cans of Coke®.
$1.99 Second Pizza
Buy anyPizza Get Second Pizza
Amherst 256-8911
Hours Sun-Wed 11a.m.-3a.m. Thurs-Sat 11a.m.-4a.m.
$1.99

Students support Fair Trade coffee at local retailers

COFFEE from page 1

can now be found in coffee areas, as farmers across the globe are being forced to abandon their crops, and often invest in illegal crops.

The worldwide struggle has reached extremes, as coffee farmers in Mexico have died after abandoning their crops and attempting to reach the U.S. border, and farmers in India are using suicide as their way out. The disaster has been labeled the international coffee crisis, and has people on a global scale searching for a remedy.

FINDING A FAIR TRADE

While reverting back to an international coffee agreement could release farmers trapped in poverty, the realization of this seems unlikely.

"[One solution is] commodity stabilization agreements among countries — these seek to smooth out prices via supply management that is, international coordination of decisions on how much to produce and sell," said Professor James Boyce, who teaches development economics and environmental economics.

With coffee giants like Kraft, Nestle, Proctor & Gamble, and Sara Lee each having their hands on $1 billion plus in annual sales, according to ICO, and cheap prices being grabbed from across the globe, though, an agreement will be difficult to achieve.

One solution has popped up and is gaining popularity by the coffee cup.

"The main small farmers that have been able to withstand the crisis are those that are part of marketing cooperatives that are supplying 'niche' markets, such as organic coffee producers," said Deere. "This is why the Fair Trade movement in the U.S. is so important and should be expanded."

Fair Trade, an alternative method to insure buyers and consumers quality coffee and provide farmers with appropriate benefits, is gaining attention and has many coffee fiends becoming fair trade-only addicts.

FAIR TRADE AND LOCAL BUSINESSES

Fair Trade, by seeking to balance the inequalities found in free trade, is made up of several criteria. Small-scale farmers, while receiving a larger sum per coffee pound, are part of democratically run cooperatives. This means the growers themselves are involved in making decisions and communicating with buyers. Middlemen involved in the buying process who often take profit for themselves are taken out of the picture, and farmers have direct access to the market.

But while Fair Trade labels have been popping up in coffee shops around the country, including in coffee chains such as Starbucks and Dunkin Donuts, Dean Cycon of Dean's Beans, a Fair Trade coffee roaster based in Orange, Mass., said there are two forms of Fair Trade hitting the market.

Formal Fair Trade, as he calls it, is when businesses buy coffee beans under Fair Trade regulations. Often, though, only one percent or less of the coffee bought by these companies is certified Fair Trade.

"If it is less than one percent, how much of a commitment are they really making?" said Cycon. "... It is a shame that these businesses stop there — they don't tell the public about the other 99 percent."

The Fair Trade movement, as Cycon calls it, is a much broader commitment, including roasters and importers that buy only Fair Trade, and commit to practices that improve life for farmers. Dean's Beans is a leader of the Fair Trade coffee movement, beginning in 1993 with the goal to model how a for-profit business can work to heal communities that it relates to.

The cooperatives of farmers working with Dean's Beans and other Fair Trade roasters reinvest in community development, often building schools or health care facilities.

"Farmers desperately need the money for community needs," said Cycon.

Maintaining environmental protection plans often goes hand-in-hand with Fair Trade, as Cycon explained that cooperatives that sell Fair Trade are often also already organic coffee producers. These farmers don't use pesticides and typically grow their coffee in the shade of a taller forest canopy, which provides habitat for wildlife, such as songbirds.

"Fair Trade helps farmers to maintain sustainable systems of agriculture," said Calli Genzale, the coffee buyer for People's Market. Genzale explained that farmers not working with Fair Trade are pressured by the market and end up raping their land to produce more plants.

People's Market, a cooperative founded almost 30 years ago on the ideals of socially conscious consumerism, is one of thousands of food retailers to support fair trade.

"It [Fair Trade coffee] can be a little more expensive, but it is a much more quality product," said Genzale. "As more people become aware of the benefits that come from fair and just trade, we can support that, and by being dedicated to that cause we can make a change, just by saying how important that is."

People's Market buys their coffee from Equal Exchange, a cooperative providing retailers with Fair Trade coffee. Currently over 130 coffee roasters and importers all over the country are licensed to sell Fair Trade coffee, according to TransFair USA, the only U.S. Fair Trade certification organization.

Black Sheep, a local Amherst cafe, also offers Fair Trade coffee bought from Dean's Beans.

"It is important to support sustainable practices. Fair Trade coffee is one we are able to do. It is available now, and we are committed to it," said Deli Manager, Shannon Weiland. "We're not going to make a pretty penny without making sure workers are paid decently."

Weiland said that local Amherst coffee-goers appreciate Fair Trade coffee, and many come to Black Sheep specifically looking for it.

"Students can participate in getting the movement out, students can go into coffee shops and ask for fair trade," said Cycon. "Colleges should make a formal stand ... it's up to students to inform them, it's up to students to say here's what's available and commit to doing something that is really in sync with their values."

But while awareness in many parts of America, like Amherst, is increasing, it is still desperately needed elsewhere. Women like Elvira and Gloria are still waiting, and the challenge to make coffee work for all, still remains.

MATTHEW REDWOOD/COLLEGIAN

David Torchiano, a senior computer systems engineerng major, adds cream to his cup of coffee at People's Market in the Student Union.

JESSICA SALVATERRA/COLLEGIAN

Coffee, shown here still in plant form, is the world's second most valuable commodity exported by developing countries.

MATTHEW REDWOOD/COLLEGIAN

Marta del Pozo, a Hispanic literature and linguists graduate student, pours herself a cup of joe.

HermanMiller AUTHORIZED DEALER
MHEC Vendor
LEXINGTON GROUP
Buyers & Sellers of Quality New & Used Office Furniture
♦ Design & Space Planning ♦ Installations
♦ Furniture Rental & Leasing ♦ Panel Systems New & Remanufactured
Eric Bascom 413.746.3064
eric@lexingtongroupinc.com
380 Union St., West Springfield,MA 01089

The Interdepartmental Program in Film Studies
University of Massachusetts Amherst
Congratulates
the Film Studies Certificate Student Nominees for the 4th Annual
Michael S. Roif Award
in Film Studies
for Exceptional Creativity and Accomplishment
Co-Winners
Ben Garry ('04, "Move")
Christopher O'Coin ('04, "The Making of Codes")
Honorable Mention
Paul Brennan III ('04, "It's About This Girl")
Finalists
Esteban Arguello ('04, "How the Walls Fell Down")
Zachary Max Cover ('05, "One Full Circle")
Sarah Daggett ('05, "Dumpster Diving")
Timothy William Hunt ('04, "Behind Blue Eyes")
Thomas O'Connell ('04, "C'est L'Amour")
Award Ceremony: Monday 17 May 2004
12:30pm Herter 601 All are welcome.

Hit the books, then hit the beach!
Looking to get ahead in your course work? Short on credits and need to catch up? Or just looking for something satisfying to do this Summer? A MassBay Summer Session course is the way to go!
• Day and evening classes start May 24th
• Affordable resident cost is $136 per credit
• 5- or 10-week courses
• A great way to earn college credits quickly
• Credits are transferable to your school! (When you are a university or college student, or incoming college freshman)
• Wellesley, Framingham, and Ashland
Call MassBay today at 781-239-2703 or go to www.massbay.edu
Don't sweat it.
Check out MassBay's Summer Session Courses in:
Business
EMT
English
Health
History
Lab Sciences (such as Anatomy & Physiology, Biology, Microbiology)
Math
Social Sciences
and other transferable courses!
Classes meet Monday-Thursday so there's plenty of time left for other Summer activities.
To register or obtain additional information, call 781-239-2703.
MASSBAY COMMUNITY COLLEGE
Start here. Go anywhere.

TONIGHT!!
Short Cuts Sixth Annual Publication Party!
Live readings by authors! Free food and drinks!
Come, enjoy, and be the first to get your free copy of Short Cuts!
Thursday, May 13th
7:00 pm
Campus Center 162-175

Running Out of Room? Roomate Invading Your Space?
Brand new concrete and steel College sized storage units $26/mo
Greenfield Secure Storage
1135 Bernardston Rd.
413-775-0074

UMASS AMHERST
STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
Helping students protect their rights for over 30 years
Free Legal Advice,
Referrals, Representation and Counseling
for UMASS Students
Student & Worker Rights, Family & Criminal Law,
Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
Call 545-1995
or stop in at 922 Campus Center

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
EDITORIAL OPINION
THURSDAY, MAY 13, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Maintaining our dignity and honesty

In the past eight months this University has seen numerous changes in not only its ruling bodies, but also in the way in which the University as an educational community functions.

Both the University and the Massachusetts Daily Collegian have been tested throughout the year by events ranging in scope from local incidents such as the Southwest residential area riots and the tumultuous Student Government Association elections to the larger issues of the world community today, such as the war in Iraq. It is with a sense of pride that we say that, though many may have taken exception to some of the decision we made as a newspaper, we never shied from our journalistic duties.

We remained as unbiased as possible in our presentation of the day's news and did our very best in exploring and illuminating the local area's wealth of events that were of possible interest to our readership.

Though we already strive to continually do the very best for our readers within the limitations of our journalistic code, there is always room for improvement. It will be a process that will continue into the 2004-2005 school year and beyond. It is not a job that we as journalists can do on our own. To hone our paper and elevate it to ever higher levels of excellence will require not only hard work from within the paper but also diligence from our readership. Constructive criticism on any aspect of the paper is constructive and beneficial not only to us but to the community as a whole who will be better served by a strengthened publication.

Though we have a responsibility to our readers, in that we are required to provide them with the news, and opinions of the day, it has been the case of late that disagreeable opinions are sometimes aired through us. In addition to the responsibility of putting forth information we are also responsible for ensuring a certain level of diversity in what we put out to the public, and that includes even those opinions and stories that you as a reader may not personally support or wish to read.

It is in the hopes of a continued strong and close relationship with our readers that we close the 2003-2004 academic year with pride and eagerness to begin the next with renewed vigor and diligence.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

Here, now, and the rest of our lives

Elizabeth Carter

Throughout the course our lives, it seems we are continually asked, "What are you going to be when you grow up?" Over the years, while the answer invariably changes, one thing doesn't: the question itself.

As college students, that's what we're all here trying to do — we're trying to answer this question to the best of our ability, with the hopes that we can later on live with our prior conclusion.

It wasn't very long ago when I changed my answer to this question, and I took about 20 minutes out of my day to switch my major, and to shift the course that I hope my life will take. In retrospect, it's really rather strange how little time it took me to create such a large change. I walked nervously down Machmer Hall, searching for the anthropology department. My heart was beating in my chest so loud I could hear it in my ears, and my mothers voice was echoing in my head "What are you going to do with an anthropology major?"

Despite this, my mind was made up. I was changing my life, switching majors and there was no turning back. It's strange to think about a major switch in those terms; however, that is what we're doing here at college. We are deciding now the paths we are going to walk later in life.

Some of us come to college with majors already, and some of us don't, but one way or another we're all here to make a life for ourselves, and part of creating a future is making decisions in the present time. When junior year inevitably comes— like it or not — we all must finally answer the dreaded question, "What is your major?"

Two years ago, (when I was a freshmen) the answer was simple, "I'm a political science major, and when I graduate I'm going to law school." It seemed clear cut enough, my parents were happy and I thought I was too.

Some of us come to college with majors already, and some of us don't, but one way or another we're all here to make a life for ourselves, and part of creating a future is making decisions — both great and small — in the present time.

Yet, after time and research, much to the dismay of my parents, I began to realize that being lawyer is something I personally could never allow myself to become. Like so many others who have realized they need to switch their majors, I found myself was left alone with one question echoing in my mind and it kept asking over and over, "What are you going to do with your life."

I was horrified — I had always been the girl with a plan. Yet, time and education had revealed to me my former naiveté about myself, and while I was glad to recognize that the law was not for me, I wasn't very sure what was.

I was lost, and with little time left before junior year was upon me I felt as if I was running full speed ahead without a plan. I sat around thinking about the things I like to do, trying to envision myself 20 years in the future, and where I wanted to be. For a while, I hoped someone else would give me the answer, it seemed too large a decision to make on my own.

I asked friends, family, even sunk to the depths of buying a career assessment test online (which was worthless, don't waste your money), yet nothing yielded an answer. It was a choice I had to make on my own. And eventually I did make the choice.

I decided on anthropology, and I'm happy with that. Am I 100 percent positive that this is the right major for me? No. In truth, I'm not totally sure, but that's just the point. We can never know exactly what is right for the future — I don't care what Miss Cleo says.

In the end, I decided I would try to pursue the course that I felt would bring me the most happiness.

Although I can't be sure that it will work out exactly as I have pictured, cynicism be damned, I keep hope that it will turn out well in the end.

Elizabeth Carter is a Collegian columnist.

More than just a teacher

Leah Wyner

Mr. Barstow's H-Block Marketing class was full, and I wasn't on the list. My guidance counselor informed me that there was no way I'd make it into the class, so I didn't really know what to expect when I arrived unannounced on that fateful Monday afternoon. I walked over to the man leaning against the desk in front of the room and said, "Hi, I'm Leah Wyner. I'm not exactly on the list, but ..." I trailed off.

"Don't worry about it at all! It's very nice to meet you Ms. W., I'm Mr. Barstow," he said with a smile. "Have a seat, it's great to have you in the class."

Barely five hours into my junior year, I was already confused. It's common for teachers to welcome students to the first day of class, but Mr. B. seemed to mean it more than most. I had known him for five minutes, but I could already tell. It was strange, even foreign amidst all the unexcited, bored, uninterested teachers I was used to. But I realized right away that Mr. B. truly cared.

I was on the brink of the most difficult year of my scholastic career, absolutely terrified about the prospect of graduation, college, and the challenges that lie ahead. Then there was Mr. Barstow.

He had all the qualities you look for in a teacher, and in a friend. He was fun, interesting, intelligent, enthusiastic, trustworthy, wise and kind. But what touched me on that first day of class was how real he was, and how much he meant what he said. Mr. B. assigned homework every day without fail, but it wasn't like any homework I'd ever seen.

"Ladies and gentlemen, your homework today is to take care of yourself in all ways. Do your homework," he'd say. Mr. B. was different from all other teachers because not only did he mean that, he made sure to assign it every day, because he really wanted us to do it. I was captivated by him. Here was a man who truly wanted make a difference.

One of our assignments was to go through magazines to find and present examples of 10 advertising principles. I had been completely swamped with homework, and I'd only found five. I felt absolutely horrible, but I asked Mr. B. if I could present another day, and I'll never forget his response.

"It's okay, I understand that this isn't the only class you have. Hang in there, and remember, we're all in this together."

And we were all in it together, because with respect, understanding, compassion, and kindness, Mr. B. turned a group of students more diverse than the characters of "The Breakfast Club" into a community.

A large aspect of education is about making the grades, but there's so much more to it than that. It's about the relationships you make, the ways you grow, the skills you learn

Over the course of the semester, Mr. B. accomplished the impossible. He captured the interests and the hearts of every single one of his students. I learned more about marketing than I thought possible in a high school elective class, but what's more important is what I learned along the way.

He taught me that going to school doesn't have to be a miserable experience. It's not a disagreeable chore that has to be endured. Rather, it's an opportunity to be taken advantage of. School is not about surviving until graduation, it's about what happens along the way. Teachers aren't the enemy, they're there to be a part of something special.

Students are at a place in their lives where not everything is decided for them. We've all felt it, and it's scary. Suddenly every decision you make is yours alone, and your future is in your own hands. It's an incredibly important time for students, and teaching them as they prepare for life's tasks ahead is a very difficult, but rewarding job. Mr. B. knew better than anyone that as a teacher, he was a part of something truly extraordinary, and that he had the opportunity to contribute to an exciting and significant time in our lives.

Mr. B. forever changed my outlook on teachers, learning, school, and life, and in the process, helped me figure out the kind of person I wanted to be. I've never met anyone who cared as wholeheartedly as Mr. B. did about his students. He was passionate, considerate, and more. He wanted more than anything to make our experiences in his class enriching and worthwhile. He had so much to give, but at the same time knew that he could learn a lot from us. It was so refreshing and invigorating to find someone so genuine.

It's far too easy to forget, and become lost in the stressful world of term papers, exams, and grade point averages. Every so often you need to step back and remember that that's not what it's all about. A large aspect of education is about making the grades, but there's so much more to it than that. It's about the relationships you make, the ways you grow, the skills you learn. It's about the contradictions, mistakes, and successes. It's about finding out who you are, and who you want to be. But more importantly, it's about the people that touch your heart.

So think about that when you're writing papers, studying for finals, and taking tests. It may not always seem like it, but you're part of something incredible. Remember, we are all in this together. And ladies and gentlemen, make sure to do your homework.

Leah Wyner is a Collegian columnist.

Our neighbor to the north deserving of our respect

Jaryn Harrington

Who wants to be a Canadian? I sure don't. I mean, if you live in Canada, you must live in some sort of igloo. I've never met anyone in an igloo, but I know I wouldn't be wearing my good heels in any such establishment. Furthermore, Canadians are just a bunch of hockey freaks and Mounties, guzzling beers and saying things such as "aboot" and "eh?" Since when do I, an American, associate with such backwards individuals?

Fortunately for any Canadians, I was just kidding. I personally think Canada is a fine country, a country far wiser than its years. Essentially, it's the Americans you need to watch out for. Canadians, or, "our friendly neighbor to the North" as they are commonly referred to, aren't really any different from the average U.S. citizen on the surface. But if you delve deeper into the Canadian spirit, you find things Americans have overlooked for centuries.

When was the last time Canada was in a war with another country?

Never. Canadians are seemingly too good for that fighting stuff. Americans on the other hand, can't seem to keep their hands to themselves, constantly provoking other counties and essentially getting involved in things they should just simply ignore. Vietnam? The "war" on terrorism? I don't think there is anything left to say.

Canada ignores outside conflict, and if we are so much better than them, why can't we follow suit? Canada has proven that you don't need to be a tyrannical nation in order to gain a spot in international politics, they have found that in taking a step back and merely watching other nations nuke themselves into billion dollar debts, that they can come out without a stitch of hatred towards them from any other nation. Well, except America, we still find some way to criticize their humbling, peaceful ways.

America can't even provide healthcare and prescription drugs to its citizens through an affordable means. Canada can. If Canada is so awful, why does it one up us yet again? Lawmakers in the U.S. even support Americans if they chose to cross the border into Canada or order their prescription drugs from Canada.

It's seemingly the only way in which they the average American can attain them in a reasonably affordable means. Furthermore, do you think your tuition bill is outright outrageous? Well, move to Canada. At least their universities are subsidized so you don't owe your first-born or necessary limbs to a government that probably owns those already after you went to a routine doctor's visit. Socialism, it's not just some crazed idea the Chinese had, it's a practice, and it works. Canada has proven it.

Essentially, what I am trying to say is Canada deserves to be more than a punch line to a series of bad jokes. We are the joke, why are we all of a sudden trying to flip things around? We need to realize that just because a country isn't exactly like us, it doesn't make it any less of a success. Maybe I'm speaking for myself here but Canada doesn't seem half bad. Just stay away from those "Frenchies." Canadians don't like them either.

Jaryn Harrington is a UMass student.

The black column

Matt Brochu

I stand before you today — well my goofy picture stands before you today — to announce my retirement as a Collegian columnist. Everyone wants to retire on top. Jay-Z did it. Michael Jordan did it twice. The Fraggles did it. And now, DMX is doing it (and in his honor, I plan on treating this column like a DMX radio edit, meaning every potential swear will be replaced by a WHAT, an UH, or any sound made by a dog). So I figured I should weigh my options too.

I mean, how could my life get any better right now? I've got almost $300 in my bank account (30-packs instead of bars). I'm graduating into the wonderful world of unemployment (OK, 12-packs instead of bars). I'm moving home for the summer (living behind bars). And I have two — yes, two — coupons in my glove compartment for a free Happy Ending Sundae with the purchase of any Friendly's Supermelt. What else could I need?

Actually, I could use a little less complaining from everyone as this year draws to a close (and this isn't a complaint, it's a critique). I understand that the amount of work given to us college students in the last few weeks is the equivalent of giving Frankie from "Real World: San Diego" a set of steak knives as a wedding gift. It's just asking us to freak out. But the papers and finals are no excuse to lose your damn minds and forget about AOL Instant Messenger etiquette.

I'm sure you've all seen it happening in our sheltered little AIM world. Away messages like "Sooo much work to do! (annoying slanted mouth face)" litter the Internet like upside-down ice cream cones in our dining hall stairwells. But guess what? You're not alone. We all have (WHAT) to do, so shut the (RUFF) up.

This is college. The real world needs a way to differentiate the good-looking, qualified people from the ugly, unqualified people. And even though the hippies at Hampshire College haven't figured that out yet (not that it matters, they fall in the ugly, unqualified group anyway), this is why we need grades. To get grades, we need to take tests. And, for most people, to take tests, we need to study.

Everyone who isn't complaining about work is turning their profile into a nostalgic Vitamin-C-Graduation-Song yearbook quote. For anyone who hasn't figured this out yet, yearbooks do not exist to help us remember. They exist to help us remember what we'd love to forget: braces, bangs, cliques, tapered jeans, lunch ladies with bad teeth...and cheesy yearbook quotes. We didn't know any better back then, and that's what made these things OK. But as we go on ... we remember ... all the times we ... had together ... and as our lives change ... we should realize that we were losers back then and know not to repeat these mistakes. So calm down with the quotes, the thank you's, and the BFF's (Best friends forever).

I think Snoop Dogg said it best: "It's cool to grow old." Despite what recent alumni may have told you, growing up isn't that bad. Next year, our precious current freshmen won't be able to say, "I went to a frat last night," without being hassled by their friends, while most current sophomores will be able to enter Liquors 44 without being hassled by the cops. Current juniors, on the other hand, will learn the art of sneaking a keg into Puffton Village, while coming to the realization that friendship is actually based on walking distance, as dorm hallway friendships cease to exist when the hallway ceases to exist. But no matter what, you kids will never again experience a Hobart Hoedown as it was meant to be.

Seniors are going through something a bit different. We're realizing that college isn't necessarily about reading books or writing papers or going out, it's about the people we meet along the way (the soundtrack to this portion of Matt's column is brought to you by Sarah McLachlan).

Regardless of where we end up four months from now, there exists this intangible, unmistakable feeling among us that from now on, ridiculously overcrowded bars won't be quite as stomach able, greasy calzones won't be quite as edible, and "The OC" won't be quite as watchable.

We don't wanna grow up. We're UMass kids. There's a million girls and boys at UMass that we can play with. This environment may have been difficult to enter, but it's going to be absolute hell to leave, and like it or not, we are big kids now. Yeah, thought finals sucked. Well, now it's time to worry. We have to worry about how many years must pass before we're not cool anymore. We have to worry about when we must stop wearing American Eagle and start wearing Eddie Bauer, as well as stop wearing undershirts and start letting our gross chest hair creep above the top button. We have to worry if it's OK that one day we will ask our granddaughter to, "Please hand me my Dr. Dre CD, honey." And we have to worry about turning our tassels to the side, turning our brims to the front, and turning our backs on four amazing years in Amherst.

I think Snoop Dogg said it best: 'It's cool to grow old.' Despite what recent alumni may have told you, growing up isn't all that bad.

So, say your goodbyes as if your diploma prepared you for them. Say goodbye to your friends.

The ones who are worth it will stick around anyway. Say goodbye to the one that got away. Maybe you've met her already, or maybe you're years away from the moment you wish you hadn't met her at all. Say good riddance to enemies, RA's, and skateboarders on campus who never land a damn trick. Some people will leave that you wish to God wouldn't, and some that you wish had peaced out years ago will stick around to bother you until the day you die. That's just how it works.

As all great things come to an end, so must this column, and with it my writing career. Or better yet, (GRRR) it. See you next fall.

Matt Brochu is a Collegian columnist.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SENIOR MEMORIES

THURSDAY, MAY 13, 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE Editor's PICKS

ARTS & LIVING
Oct. 22, 2003

Emilie Duggan
Asst. Photo Editor '03-'04

ARTS & LIVING
Sept. 3, 2002

Jennifer Eastwood
Editor in Chief '03-'04
Arts & Living Editor '02-'03

BACK PAGE
Sept. 12, 2001

Scott Eldridge II
Photo Editor '04
Managing Editor '02-'03

ARTS & LIVING
Oct. 16, 2003

Dan Lamothe
Managing Editor '03-'04
News Editor '02-'03

A matter of pride

Emilie Duggan

The other day, one of my best friends asked me if I was proud of myself for getting this far, for being so close to graduation. I had no choice but to say, "Yes," but it doesn't seem like those question can be answered with one simple word.

There is a sense of accomplishment when you get to this point in your college career. Everything finally becomes clear when you sit down to take your last final exam, turn in your last paper or — for me — write your last column or photograph your last concert for The Collegian. And, all of a sudden, you realize that this is it. You're finally finished.

I'll be the first to admit that I never thought I'd get here.

A lot of people in my life wrote me off when I dropped out of college in 1999, telling me that the longer I stayed away, the less chance there was that I would ever go back. It's hard, they all said, to return to school as an older student; hard to be surrounded by people four and five years younger that don't have a true grasp on how the real world works. And, even if you do go back, you'll never stay. Because, I heard constantly, you don't have the patience to stay still long enough to finish this; you didn't when you started, and you don't now.

This is me proving them all wrong.

I've come a long way in my life, been through a lot of things I'd never care to repeat. That's not to say I would trade any of my days for less turbulent ones, because I wouldn't. Each event that I have survived has made me who I am today. And I might not like who I was, and I might have no idea about what it is I'm doing with my life, but love the woman I am becoming.

I am not fearless, but I'm not afraid of what lies before me, because I know I'm not alone.

I have found the best kind of friends — not only at UMass, but in my journeys while gone, too. They have accepted me for who I am, without judgment or censure. They listen to me when I lose my cool over the most idiotic situations. They offer hugs when I sob the kind of tears that only frustration can bring, and patient ears when I rant and rave about, well, anything. They watch as mischievous smiles dance around the corners of my mouth as I prepare to tell my latest tale of adventure. They love me. And, more importantly, they encourage me. Without them, I can assure you that I would not be standing at the edge of my future, ready to face whatever comes my way.

And they will be there to help catch me if I fall off that edge.

For the first time in my life, I don't know what happens next. As a kid, there was always something: elementary school led to middle school, which led to high school and on to college. There was always a plan. Even when I wasn't in school, I was always going back, so I never had to worry about what the future held. I always said I'd figure that out when the time came. Well, now it's here, and I still don't have a clue. What comes after college graduation? Other than working for the next 40-plus years, with only a two-week vacation to break up the monotony of life?

But, I can't focus on the things I didn't do. Because, it's the things I did do that matter. And what I have done is finally, finally, finished something I started.

College is the beginning of the rest of your life, right? So, maybe I should look at the end of my UMass days as another new start. Only, it feels strangely like an ending, and the college version of me is preparing for my final farewell. I spent this year counting down a series of lasts — last fall semester, last winter and spring breaks, last spring semester, last final exams. The last chance to take that class I always wanted to take but could never fit in my schedule, with that professor that everyone always talked about. I never did get to study abroad.

But, I can't focus on the things I didn't do. Because, it's the things I did do that matter. And what I have done is finally, finally, finished something I started. I have no idea where I am going or what I will do when I get there, and the only thing certain in my life is its uncertainty. But, I'm okay with that, because not knowing can be its own adventure.

So, am I proud of myself? You're damn right I am.

Emilie Duggan was a Collegian columnist.

One last parting shot

Dan Lamothe

"There is no turning back now
Everything you've ever wanted
Everything is in this moment
There is no turning back now"
-Shinedown

So. I'm graduating.

After four years, hundreds of stories, and more than 50 columns, I'm walking away from the University of Massachusetts and The Massachusetts Daily Collegian with a journalism degree, a big ol' book of newspaper clippings and several internships under my belt — all things that have helped me land a home (at least temporarily) at The Republican newspaper in Springfield.

Big deal.

As cool as all of that is for someone like me (read: a blue collar journalist), in the grand scheme of things, what does it really mean? There's a simple answer for that: me finding a job right out of school doesn't mean crap.

I know it. You know it. Eunice, that nice lady spooning the mashed potatoes at the dining hall — she knows that finding your first job doesn't mean crap, too.

Why? Because if walking through the doors of a professional newspaper is the greatest thing I can pull off in my entire lifetime, then frankly, I really haven't accomplished shit.

That isn't to say I'm not thankful for the opportunities I've had at the University of Massachusetts — I am. And it's not to say I'm unhappy with what I'll be doing next year — that wouldn't be true, either.

What it is to say, though, is that although I'm feeling pretty happy right now with the opportunities I've got, I'm recognizing something that I feel too many seniors forget: graduating college and finding a job isn't the end of the road and the ultimate prize, it's barely a step toward getting off the runway.

In journalism, getting off that runway usually means a hell of a lot of hard work, something that is lost on many people who criticize The Collegian regularly. In my four years at the paper, I've heard it all. I've listened to students, professors and members of the professional media trash The Collegian for decisions its editors have made. I've watched as the paper gets called out for being too conservative by ALANA, too liberal by key members in the Student Government Association, and too sloppy by just about everyone else.

And at times, they'd all be right. That doesn't take away from all the good things we have accomplished, though. One thing that I'll always take great pride in is being a long-standing member of a staff that consistently did a lot with little. No, this newspaper isn't The Boston Globe or The New York Times. What you hold in your hands, though, is a longstanding University institution that takes great pride in doing its best to produce something worth reading every day. Sometimes we succeed and sometimes we fail, but it's the consistent effort we make and the improvising with limited resources that we do that keeps us competitive with the best college newspapers in the country.

Am I biased when I say that? Yeah, probably. For the majority of us who spend our lives putting out this newspaper, though, The Collegian is much more than what shows up in print — it's an identity. It's a distraction when you're down, a source of pride when you're happy and a family when you're alone. People have called The Collegian a clique, but that's never seemed fair to me simply because the majority of the people I have worked with seemed to legitimately care about one another. You might think working on a news layout at 2:30 in the morning would suck your will to live, but many people have stayed with the job simply because of all the personal and team satisfactions it brings along the way.

I'd be one of those people. I'm the dork who started saying I wanted to write a long time ago, the one who wore a felt hat and a fake press pass to a career day in fifth grade. They laughed at me, but that's OK. By the time I got to high school, I'd write for just about any publication that would give the space, regardless of how many sports teams I was playing on or how much homework I had. It mattered to me.

I had no idea what I was in for when I walked through the Collegian doors in September 2000, though. They may just be names to many on campus now, but watching and reading Collegian veterans — names like Rob Schulze, Sam Wilkinson, Ryan Benharris —is what sparked a passion in me to contribute so much to something that seemed to have so much purpose on this campus. I wanted to write with the voice of Schulze, the presence of Wilkinson, the wit of Benharris. Who knows if I've pulled that off or not. They had convictions and took chances, though, and for better or worse, I patterned myself after them. The results aren't too bad, if I say so myself.

Over the last four years, I've served this paper — and by extension, I'd like to think the community — as a columnist, an ed/op editor, a news editor, a police reporter, a features writer, a managing editor, and lastly, as a leader. I've shed tears at Ground Zero, ducked bricks at a riot and talked to famous musicians, all while covering stories for The Collegian. I've missed out on parties, bar trips, dates and Intramural games, and been criticized, threatened and laughed at for what I do.

Now that it's time to go, though, I can honestly say I wouldn't have changed a thing. Will I do this the rest of my life? Maybe. I'm taking all of my UMass experiences with me, though, from participating in the goofball Mr. UMass Pageant last year to meeting all kinds of random people while chasing classic stories like "Goat head found in sink." My memories and war stories of UMass will be wackier than most.

So I thank you. All of you. You've made growing up as a person and a journalist on this campus a hell of a lot of fun, and that's more than I ever could have asked.

Dan Lamothe was the managing editor of The Daily Collegian.

Blinded by the light

Glen Straub

I never meant to be the Brandon Walsh type.

Excluding looks, it's hard to be identified any other way when you spend 85 percent of your time in a newsroom.

Hear is my plea though: Newspapers are what I do, not who I am.

In fact, as I have worked closer and closer to the newspaper I have realized, what I do and what my soul asks polarize on a daily basis.

My dream to be a journalist has always been an effort to fulfill my obsessions. The Knicks drive me to be a sports reporter. Reggae motivates me to become a music writer. Traveling to South Africa has stimulated me to write about social justice and race relations. And a girl with a skirt over her pants inspired me to write a column like this.

Still, the one thing I have always wanted out of my writing is missing. For as long as I have a conscious I have been searching for a cathartic release. Being a writer, with a passion for expression through words, you would think writing is my therapy. It is a conundrum to me that it isn't. All it has done though, is provide disappointment and many times shame.

I am envious of those who can successfully use their craft to keep their minds working smoothly. Joel can pick up his bass and forget if the scene is ballsy or not. Dee Dee can drop what she is doing at a dime and sketch out the most beautiful specimen of a human onto a canvas. Jen doesn't let a damn thing affect her – a simple font change, a box tilt or gradient can make a beautiful smile appear.

But me, I have yet to find something therapeutic about what I do habitually. I thought newspaper work was helping me cope with issues that haunt my mind routinely. But all it does is mask them. They are still there everyday.

I grew up a little different from the rest – let's just say its tough having the not so ordinary family life on the block when all your friends in the affluent Brooklyn neighborhood live in the shelter of their wealthy nuclear families. It may sound trivial, but it takes a toll.

Openly dreaming of becoming a journalist was, and still is in some manner, my escape. It provides hope for a change, a way to block my inner-thought by covering and analyzing others from head-to-toe.

Staying late after school to finish editing the high school paper was part of my laid out path toward the hope of developing into a professional journalist. In another light, it was a way to not be home.

The 50+ hours a week that I have put into The Massachusetts Daily Collegian this year has been another way to continue on the path and, in a way, a channel to express my creativity. However, when I leave the cracked-out, asbestos-filled basement I am only reminded of all the things that suffocate my soul. The past, the future, the support system, the 'golden lady.'

I can't help to ask to myself. Why do I spend so much effort and time to develop a skill (writing) or a product (The Collegian) as if it's what cures me, when all it does is create a disguise for the things in life I should face with the same exertion?

And yet, I know it's easier to be distracted than face-up.

But then again, I don't think this is all that bad. We all use tangible things to distract us from our thoughts. I just want to make sure I don't forget my thoughts in the hysteria of making a deadline.

Glen Straub was the Arts & Living Editor.

"You ain't gonna miss your water, until your well runs dry."
-Robert Nesta Marley

Through the looking glass

Jennifer Eastwood

"'Let's pretend the glass has got all soft like gauze, so that we can get through ...'
"She was up on the chimney-piece while she said this, though she hardly knew how she had got there. And certainly the glass was beginning to melt away, just like a bright silvery mist."
-Lewis Carroll,
"Through the Looking Glass (And What Alice Found There)"

During my junior year of high school, a girl I'd known since fifth grade gave me a birthday card. Nothing fancy. Just simple tidings of my reaching age 16.

Rumor had it she was a lesbian. Worse yet, rumor had it she liked me.

My friends taunted me about this. All in good fun, of course, but something inside said I had to prove I was not accepting of this card, this girl, or any affection she would ever show me. In an exaggerated display, I tore the greeting before my friends and vowed never to speak with her again.

I never did. Not even five and half years later when I saw her in a bookstore back home in Wilkes Barre, Penn. As I snuck a glance at her then, my face reddened, and I felt so ashamed of shunning her those years ago.

So ashamed of turning on her to divert attentions from me.

And so ashamed of for so long internalizing disgust with myself as a lesbian.

• • •

I came to the University of Massachusetts questioning when my stage of loving women would end, and I had no intention on admitting it to anyone, let alone myself.

But in junior year, I found myself in Arlene Avakian's social autobiography course and faced with a choice: to write about myself as I am or as I had always pretended to be. I struggled, alone, with this decision and finally wrote down the truth. It was amazing.

I wanted to share my happiness, my identity, with others from that moment on. Over the next six months, I revealed myself to the three people who mean the most to me and found love and support. I was pleased, but unsure where I could go from there.

But what I never expected was to come out to anyone at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian. All of us women in the newsroom have always fallen into one of two categories: incompetent or an exception to the rule.

By freshmen year, I realized the nice girls did their work on time and left quietly. Only the bitches argued. I was nice. By sophomore year, I saw that women who spoke in meetings endured skeptic looks from their male counterparts. Only the brave spoke. I was silent. But by junior year, I found others who noticed these trends, and we found support in each other.

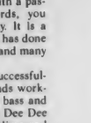
This year, I did come out to some. It felt unnatural not to, for I knew I was withholding them and myself from potentially deeper friendships. And I didn't lose their respect in the process. Knowing that I'm a lesbian didn't take away from the quality of all my work; it just added another dimension to my personality.

Around the same time, I began realizing I had gotten myself to a position at the paper too politically important not to expose my full identity.

• • •

When I saw that girl from high school those few months ago, I could feel the change within me. Only she and I really knew how I had treated her, and I could have kept it that way.

But I didn't. My best friend, the only friend who I afterward let read my autobiography from Arlene's class, was there to listen to my story.



In the last four years, I've learned that I can keep my identity to myself and survive, but that I'm so much happier when I share it.

It's been scary to write this. But all year when I've looked at my reflection in a mirror, I've see a writer, a woman, an artist, a lesbian and a newspaper editor.

It's about time I share that.

Jennifer Eastwood was editor in chief of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian and graduates from the University of Massachusetts as a journalism and women's studies major and a profound admirer of fairy tales.

Leaving UMass-Amherst

Fedrich Torres

As I, a proud University of Massachusetts, Amherst student, prepare to leave college and head into the "real world," I have come to realize many things. These realizations seem to have been developing in my subconscience for the last three years because I have known that I would be graduating this May, but I never reached the level of conscienceness as I have achieved today.

I assume many, like myself, who are getting ready to graduate either don't know what step to take next, or maybe have found a job, but don't want to be tied down for life. As for me, I am ready to change the world!

Many would argue that this is only a reaction to not knowing what the real world is going to bring me. Some may say, "this is only a phase," or "once you're out of college, you'll realize you can't do anything to make the world a better place."

Well I say, just because you, the people in the "real" world, chose this path, doesn't mean that the next generation of hopeful college graduates will follow suit.

THE GRADUATING CLASS OF 2004 IS A GROUP OF CARING, INTELLECTUAL, HUMANITARIAN, and even ENVIRONMENTALIST, people who have the power to change ANYTHING we want.

It's funny because when we were little, we were always told we can be anything or achieve anything, if we put our minds to it. Once we're near the end of high school, we have high expectations for college, but are told to study to find a secure job, within some "think tank," where the only thinking we will do is useless in the big scheme of things. We are rarely told that we should focus on becoming more active in society, and learn about the real subjects that matter to humans and the world as whole. We are rarely told to develop our own ideas, beliefs and even own culture. The key here is to develop them, not just think. Everyone thinks, but taking the initiative is the problem.

So the point of this article is to make it known that we are the generation who can and will change the United States, thus the rest of the world will follow, as we are often the leader. We don't need to have all the solutions to make changes. We need to maintain interests in subjects and issues that are important for us as a town of Amherst (like the Coca-Cola contract situation), as residents of the state of Massachusetts (budget cuts to education), as citizens of the United States (war in Iraq, amongst a long list of other problems), and as people of the World (as corporations turn international to maximize profits, while exploiting the people in developing countries who have no labor unions, and cannot afford to live outside the box).

University of Massachusetts, Amherst, you have done a great job of opening the mind of one graduating, astronomy major, from California, who came to Massachusetts on the flip of a coin, as an impressionable out-of-stater, to a Red Sox loving person who enjoys the change of seasons, reached the goal of earning a fine education, making the next goal to change the world one step at a time!

Fedrich Torres was a Collegian graphic designer.

Always avoid the mist

Scott Eldridge II

When the space of four years winds down to a matter of days, you can do little beyond reminisce.

When you're done doing that, you can do little more than remember and recall the best and the worst of the most earth shattering, the dullest, the most meaningful and even the most innocuous moments of the past set of years.

College is supposed to go beyond the teenage world where pubescent bickering and sniveling and aimless grandstanding still occurs. College is supposed to be a step up from the aimless wasting of time and effort on looks, or image, or cliques and clichés.

Instead, it is the same old story, as if you were perpetually stuck in the waiting area to a senior prom, where every girl is peeking and peering to see if anyone else has her style of gown. In that same waiting area is a group of guys, all in rented tuxedos, seeing who has the hotter date or the more outlandish limousine. This is the precursor to college that we were all supposed to grow out of.

Bitching and moaning be damned, we were supposed to come to college and eschew the immaturity that plagued our high school years. But those who make the grade and grab the spotlight have instead perpetuated those superficial years. Now, with four years of advanced learning under their belts, most of the collegiate celebrity-crowd, those who we entrusted by vote or deed to take the reins, are the mirror's shimmer of that group stuck outside the prom — allowing in the most selfish and the most pretentious image of themselves.

What benefit has been served by someone who can do more with their time than just sit in a class, read a book and pass a test, but chooses not to act accordingly.

What benefit do we feel when someone who shines so brilliantly that they can attract the eye of even the most discerning viewer, buries everyone's trust deeper and deeper into the ground till we are all so covered, so dark, that we can no longer see the shine.

Blacked-out barons of misdeeds, this rotten core of our peer group consists of such a minute percentage of everyone around us. There are probably no more than a dozen people who entirely mistreat the trust they have been given and there are probably no more than twice that who let it happen knowingly, but are too timid to step up and stop the show.

And the bravest of all of us who can stand up, who do speak up get shot down. Rejected protestors, these few are relegated to silence because they were not chosen to hold the leash.

But this is the downside, the negative of four or so years where certainly some positive exists. There are people who shape the lives and lifestyles of each of us. Such personally impacting types are harder to call out, harder to describe in one sweeping way.

For each of us they are so different that they cannot be categorized fairly without leaving out everything they are.

Bitching and moaning be damned, we were supposed to come to college and eschew the immaturity that plagued our high school years.

They might be the heart-stopping type, who you stumble across when and where you least expect it. They might be the one or two people who really made you stop and think about what you want to do and what you have done so far. These are the most genuine and intangible people that you will meet and more than half the time it will take you so long to realize they matter that they will have gotten away, without time for you to thank them.

When it all wraps up it is the latter group, the impacting thinkers and doers and feelers who stopped your heart or made your mind race that matter. All the vapor of those who you can notice simply because they are out front will simply blow away. They were harmless, delusional and so ephemeral that in four more years they themselves might realize what little change they impacted.

As a siren or a beacon, avoid the mist; avoid the vapid leaders who have squandered your time by grabbing your attention. They will mean little when your time is done, and you will regret what effort you exerted on their behalf.

Scott Eldridge II is a fairly bitter graduating senior.

THE Editor's PICKS

ARTS & LIVING WRAP
Dec. 13, 2002

Nick Markantonatos
Night Supervisor '03-'04
Asst. Arts & Living '02-'03

ARTS & LIVING
Nov. 6, 2003

Scott PiN
Production Manager '03-'04

ARTS & LIVING
Sept. 3, 2003

Glen Straub
Arts & Living Editor '03-'04
Asst. Sports Editor '02

ARTS & LIVING
Oct. 30, 2003

Fedrich Torres
Graphic Designer '02-'04

BUT EVERYONE'S FAVORITE MAGAZINE WAS THIS YEAR'S THE SCENE ... AND THESCORE.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MAY 13, 2004 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Pharoahe, M.O.P. hit Pearl St.

By Monique Jemmott
Collegian Staff

Northampton will be the victims of a double lyrical assault when Roc a Fella records' M.O.P and Rawkus Records' Pharoahe Monch perform at the Pearl Street Nightclub Friday night.

Pharoahe Monch, whose most famous effort was the single "Simon Says" from his debut album "Internal Affairs" (1999), has been on a bit of a hiatus. Munch got his start as the other half of the hip-hop duo Organized Confusion — who enjoyed minor success in the early '90s with their witty lyrics and concept oriented LPs, such as 1997's "The Equinox", where the entire album was through the lens of two brothers, Life and Malice.

M.O.P./ Pharoahe Monch — Tomorrow — Pearl Street — Northampton — $20, $23

Label conflict, and the eventual release of Organized Confusion from their contract gave Pharoahe the opportunity to pursue a solo project.

Aside from "Internal Affairs" which garnered decent first album attention, reaching Number 41 on the Billboard Top 200 R&B album charts, Monch also appeared on many of Rawkus's home grown projects, such as "Sound Bombing" Vol. 1, 2, and 3 along side label mates Mos Def, Common, and Talib Kweli.

Monch is known not only for his lyrical skills and freestyle abilities, as seen on Lyricist Lounge mix tapes, but also his ability to transcend politically conscious views on songs such as "Mumia 911."

"When you take the attempted assassination of Mumia Jamal they set em up/ Ready for war now for certain Biological warfare suits black gas masks black boots /Half-as niggas become troops." He is able to appeal to the mainstream without sacrificing quality as well, like on "Oh No." "Ferocious, the lyrical prognosis/The dose is just leaving you mentally unfocused here/Emcee's

See M.O.P. on page 10

UMass professor's script hits the big screen

By Randy Allain
Collegian Correspondent

A University of Massachusetts professor's script premiered as a feature film in an international film festival in Germany.

Sabina Murray, an assistant professor of English, who began developing the story for "Beautiful Country" on finishing graduate school some nine years ago, saw the finished product for the first time at the recent Berlin Film Festival.

Even though the film debuted almost a decade after her script, Murray said she loved the opportunity the debut provided. She was fascinated by the travel and the surreal experience of watching her words come to life on the big screen.

"I [would] say these things in my head ... and all of a sudden you have Nick Nolte saying it on screen," Murray said.

Nolte stars in the film along with Tim Roth of "Reservoir Dogs" fame and newcomer Damien Nguyen.

Murray said she met Roth at the festival and shared the joke that.

"Every time Tim is on screen, somebody has to die."

Roth portrays the captain of an illegal refugee ship and functions as a stop on the voyage of Binh (Nguyen), a young Vietnamese man on a six-month journey in search of his father, an American GI. Binh's voyage begins in 1990 as an escape from the ridicule he receives in Vietnam for being the lovechild of an American. After seeking out his mother, Binh journeys through many obstacles, including a Malaysian detention camp, the illegal refugee ship and an economy of near-slavery in New York City.

Murray praised the work of Director Hans Petter Moland and said she sees the movie more as his vision than her own. Although Murray was not involved in the filmmaking process, she was invited to the filming of scenes shot in New York. She said it is her job as a writer to help the director realize his vision, and she is completely happy with the changes that were made during the production process.

"His character was written for an old Korean guy," Murray said of the British actor, Roth. Her Vietnam scenes were written for South Vietnam, Murray added, but Moland shot it in North Vietnam. Murray suggested one of her biggest contributions to the film sprang from

See MURRAY on page 10

COURTESY RANDY ALLAIN IMAGE | COURTESY SONY

Sabina Murray, an assistant professor of English, who began developing the story for "Beautiful Country" on finishing graduate school some nine years ago, saw the finished product for the first time at the recent Berlin Film Festival.

Duo of local bands set to rock Iron Horse

COURTESY MIKE BANE

Punk-rock-reggae band Brookfield, above, and the progressive rock duo Dead Waves, below, play a show at the Iron Hores Music Hall Friday night, starting at 10 p.m.

By Shawn Gilligan
Collegian Correspondent

A young band called Brookfield has exploded onto the Massachusetts music scene, playing nearly 20 shows in the past two months. Wielding their own brand of high-energy rock, Brookfield, promotes music with a message, just not in that Creed sort of way.

Friday at the Iron Horse, Pioneer Valley residents will get a chance to experience it first hand.

Brookfield — Dead Waves — Friday — Iron Horse — Northampton — $8 , $10

Brookfield plays rock, laced with nice-feeling undertones. Matching ambition with musicianship, their goal is to create positive sounds through a singular medium mixing punk, rock, and elements of reggae. They hope to inspire their audience the way their influences inspire them.

With songs like "Set-Go" and "Doin," one cannot help but hear the echo of bands like 311 and Incubus coupled with a message of positivism.

The live show is the hook. Their stage presence is tight, the envy of every fledgling rock band. And in Western Mass., where there are more bands than trees, Brookfield has found their niche. Twin brothers, Adam and Matt Bilz, drummer and guitarist, have been playing together since the womb and Justin Steuer, bass, has been a permanent collaborator for the past 10 years. Though a relatively recent addition, singer Michael Jerdan has acclimated himself as the band's final piece. And to top it all off, the band is completely wireless.

Brookfield shares their on-stage enthusiasm with their devotion to their recording studio. Brookfield Records is the answer for all those bands that don't want some craggy old producer overcharging for studio time without caring whether or not you get your money's worth. Some local bands have already recorded or plan to record in the near future, including Dead Waves, Slightly Cheaper, and the Fifth Pocket.

Opening for Brookfield on Friday is Dead Waves. Dead Waves will thus unveil the culmination of a four-year project — a final thesis of sorts — written by Anthony Placet and performed with Geneva Smith. The show will double as a record release party for the forthcoming album, "I Scare Children: A Novel," from Stoic Records. Video and digital samples will accompany the live performance — a political and introspective take on retro-progressive rock.

Jenny Heifetz organized this promising show, which starts at 10 p.m. Tickets can be purchased for $8 at the Northampton Box Office, via e-mail at brookfieldrecords@yahoo.com or at the door for $10.

For more information: www.brookfieldrecords.com

'Van Helsing' a horror of a film

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

There are bare-midriffed babes who turn into yowling, blue-skinned harpies and back again, slimy egg sacs filled with bat-winged gremlins and werewolves that burst forth by literally ripping off their human skin. Dracula, wearing long black hair pulled into a chic Eurotrash ponytail, intermingles with Frankenstein's monster and the Wolfman.

Yes, "Van Helsing" is enough of a monster mash to please horror fans — scarcely a shot goes by without seeing a gleaming bared fang — but the movie itself is a loud, bombastic, and impersonal bit of CGI gimmickry. We get to see Dracula and Frankenstein and the Wolfman united in one single film, but there isn't any trace of cinema history here. These aren't classic characters — these are action figures.

'Van Helsing' — Directed by Stephen Sommers — Starring Hugh Jackman, Kate Beckinsale — Universal — Rated PG-13 — 136 mins. — Grade D

Watching "Van Helsing," a weirdly finicky big-budget horror extravaganza, you get the sense that you're seeing the first movie to be made from nothing but climax. The movie whooshes you from one "spectacular" stunt to the next, but it rarely stops to catch its own breath; it wants to keep you in the moment, every moment. "Van Helsing," with it's blurry brand of non-stop kineticism, wants to keep you excited, but the effect is in fact the opposite: it keeps you numb. It's like being poked with a cattle prod for 24 hours.

"Van Helsing" stars Hugh Jackman, wearing a long duster and what appears to be a proto-Indiana Jones fedora, as the titular monster hunter (he's been renamed Gabriel) who now works as a kind of tortured mercenary assassin for the Vatican. Van Helsing's haunted by his destiny, for when he kills a monster, the creature reverts back to human form. Van Helsing's not just a holy defender of good, but a murderer too, and Jackman, naturally a light-footed star, is once again made to act all glum and tormented (just as he did, to great effect, in the "X-Men" movies.) Jackman is glum alright — his performance is oddly dry and stolid, as if he's had all the life sucked out of him by a vampire. I was waiting

See HELSING on page 11

Sugarcult provides some sweet punk

By Johnny Donaldson
Collegian Staff

In an increasingly crowded market of poppy-punky sound-a-likes all clamoring to be the next Good Charlotte, how does a band like Sugarcult keep ahead of the pack?

By embracing the fact that they work better as a power-pop band than a punk band and going full throttle with the sweet-toothed melodies. This band isn't called Sugarcult for nothing.

The foursome of Tim Pagnotta (vocals and guitar), Marko 72 (guitar), Airin (bass and vocals) and Kenny Livingston (drums) earned a minor hit a couple of years ago with "Bouncing Off the Walls," a high energy bit of punk 'n' roll that earned some attention for their first album, "Start Static"...though the song actually gained play thanks to the soundtrack to the flop teen comedy "National Lampoon's Van Wilder."

Sugarcult — 'Palm Trees and Powerlines' — Fearless/Ultimatum

It was quite a good album, a bit derivative yes, but tightly crafted and melodically superior to some of its fellow wannabes; certainly it wasn't going in the bargain bin alongside limp noodle bands like Cauterize.

Yet Sugarcult could have been nothing more than footnote, an also-ran best known for contributing a fun song for a crappy movie. With their follow-up, "Palm Trees and Powerlines," the quartet has taken a page from fellow Alternative Press pinups Brand New and taken to tweaking their sound and growing up without alienating their fanbase.

The hooks here though, are a little more obvious than the ones found on "Deja Entendu." That album turned inward with self-recriminating lyrics and deeper, artier and more complex textures; this one embraces what makes it so enjoyable, wallowing in some gritty, rough-edged pop that's kind of like sucking on a Sweetart.

Highlights include the wistful anthem "Memory" and the slinky, new-wave guitar roll on "Destination Anywhere." "What You Say" suggests that someone have been listening to their Nirvana lately; the rest suggest just a dash of Elvis Costello. Meanwhile, catchy songs like "She's the Blade" and "Crying" will be stuck in your head like burrs. Let me put it this way: I've listened to the album at least once every day since I've gotten it. It's that good.

COURTESY SUGARCULT.COM

Punk band Sugarcult isn't afraid of playing the pop-punk sound on their new album "Palm Trees and Powerlines."

Weezer bassist Matt Sharp makes solo debut with folk rock sounds

By Nick Romanow
Collegian Staff

A stripped-down folky album, full of light airy ambience, is probably the last thing fans would expect from Matt Sharp, but that's exactly what he's offering up on his self-titled full-length solo debut. The Moog-loving indie-pop prince made his name first as bassist for Weezer and then as leader of his own project The Rentals, whose 1995 debut "Return Of The Rentals" yielded the popular single "Friends Of P." It took Sharp four years to follow up "Return Of The Rentals" with the epic "Seven More Minutes" which was met, like Weezer's sophomore effort, "Pinkerton", with underwhelming attention and mixed reactions. Years later as people have grown to appreciate the album it seems that Sharp has grown apart from it.

Matt Sharp — 'Matt Sharp' — In Music We Trust

In fact Sharp has gone in the complete opposite direction, both in life and in sound. He holed himself up in the small town of Liepers Fork, TN with two friends/musical partners (guitarist Greg Brown and ambience creator Josh Hager) and, over about two years, wrote an album's worth of completely stripped-down, simplified songs. On "Matt Sharp" the musician is trying the singer/songwriter skin on for size.

The album is almost entirely based around Sharp's softened, soothing voice and his acoustic guitar. The rare appearance of an electronic instrument is either mood-assisting ambient keys and sounds or the occasional slide guitar. When the album opens, with the track "All Those Dreams," the music is, fittingly, dreamy and spacey. The ambience is perhaps at its best on this song as the track fills with lightness and air until it practically floats. The song goes right into "Goodbye West Coast" which is easily the album's strongest song. The track is the poppiest Sharp is willing to get; the chorus has a strong melody and even the soft acoustic guitar has some weight to it.

The rest of the album just blurs together into a sleepy haze that just simply isn't very strong. Sharp has created a piece of mood music that unfortunately fits only a very humdrum mood. Still Sharp's ambition is to be admired, especially given how distant "Matt Sharp" is from any of his earlier work.

In a phone interview with the Collegian, Sharp discussed the making of the record; which found him isolated in the small country town with no television and no access to contemporary music. Sharp found himself wrapped up in an epic, sometimes difficult, process.

"[Most people make records in a traditional way] instead of the 'Lawrence Of Arabia' type way that we decided to make this record. It's like the Lo-Fi 'Lawrence Of Arabia,'" Sharp joked, "The record was done in at least three different sections; they were done over quite a long period of time where we would document one set of ideas and then take a long break and then return to them and see what [happened]... I had no idea of how to make a record [so stripped-down] so it just took some time to get inward a bit and start asking questions."

Sharp also said that while he is now very comfortable writing as a solo artist it took a lot of getting used to, especially after writing in a group for so long.

"Rivers [Cuomo, Weezer's frontman] and I had the luxury of sitting with each other [for] insane periods of talking about music ... every aspect of it ... We [could] talk at such long periods and find out and ask questions about how we could get to a place where we could make a type of music that was similar to the stuff we were most inspired by."

While Sharp seems very content the album itself feels anti-climactic. If The Rentals were Sharp's "Blue Album" like burst of pop-rock energy and hooks, then "Matt Sharp" is his "Pinkerton"; an intimate and desperate journey inside himself. The only problem is that the end result isn't as powerful or meaningful as it was for Sharp himself, it just feels, well, not that sharp.

NEW ON TUESDAY!
LAST SAMURAI
CALENDAR GIRLS
CHASING LIBERTY
ELEPHANT
GIRL WITH A PEARL EARRING
PETER PAN
TRIPLETS OF BELLEVILLE
Captain VIDEO
15 COWLES LANE
Behind Bruegger's
Downtown Amherst
19 MONTAGUE RD.
North Amherst

PONCHOS LILAC, BABY BLUE, LIGHT PINK, LIME, BLACK
ZANNA
downtown Amherst

Change your mind this summer:
• Get the Gen Ed courses you need
• Enjoy smaller class sizes
• Keep on track for graduation
• Choose from over 200 courses and degree programs
• AND take 6 credits or more and we'll waive the registration fee!
Watch for our money-saving coupon in your mailbox.
umass.edu/contined
413-545-2414
stay.
UMassAmherst Continuing Education
Where summer is a state of mind.

UMass Boston
Classroom with a View
UMASS BOSTON, SUMMER 2004
Ready to broaden your horizons this summer? Take a course at UMass Boston. Choose from over 500 course sections offered days, evenings, or online. Our campus overlooking Boston Harbor is easy to get to by subway or car. And if you really want a breath of fresh air, check out how affordable our fees are.
Register today!
Visit www.umb.edu
Call 617.287.6000
UMASS BOSTON

Seniors, think you're running out of job search time?
You can access our online job database from any computer at any time of the day
Just give us a call at 545-2224 to set up an account
We're open all summer to answer any questions you may have.
CareerServices
Check us out on the web at www.umass.edu/careers

'Eve' finds one guy who deserves positive recognition

Original Sin

Eve

Q: I was recently dating the classic Lady's Man. He is charming, sexy, and incredibly confident. However, I have been scarred in the past by guys and I am afraid to let him into my life as a serious relationship. He has not done anything wrong, but my fear of future rejection is keeping me from committing. I saw him two nights ago and he seemed less charming, so I broke it off with him. I have convinced myself that this was the right thing to do. But now I'm questioning my decision. Was this the right thing to do? –G.B

A: If you really feel as though he has changed in personality, and you are not as attracted to him, then yes. But I feel as though you stopped dating this guy because you started to have feelings for him. You say you are scared of rejection, so why can't you see that you might be running away from a potentially good outcome? How can you know if this guy will or will not hurt you if you don't give this an opportunity a fair chance? You are going to have to face another relationship sooner or later … why wait? And if you might be regretting your decision, doesn't that give you an idea of what you need to do? I say give the man another chance, but take it slow for yourself.

I remember the day I chose to be single. It was the day love seemed too overwhelming, too painful, and too difficult. I felt as though my heart needed to heal, and my mind assessed this need. It was the first time I had given myself a moment to reflect — to be alone, independent, even content.

I should have known these are important experiences to have before committing to another. I never had the chance to explore who I was, as opposed to who I am with another man. And when I chose this unknown territory, I discovered the inevitable — I had no idea who I was at all. And this was terrifying.

I had spent almost six years in relationships, learning about myself through others. And yet, I felt as though I had learned nothing. Yet only when I fell in love, and felt the devastating consequences of this vulnerability, did I stop for a moment. What is the point? Why invest my soul into another man if this is the outcome?

This unfortunate reality left me skeptical, angry, and emotionally detached. I could not imagine devoting my trust into another man. I thought my time as a lover had come to an end. But as I took this instance to regain my individuality, I realized that this choice was simply the beginning. I did not look to find who I was, I sought to create who I am. And I succeeded in doing so.

I believe it was a mistake to think this regrouping period would be relaxing. I found being single is far more exhausting then holding a relationship together. Most of the guys I came in contact with were inadequate. I would question their intent, wonder if they were true, and only hoped that maybe one day I could feel comfortable again.

But no one seemed to measure up. No one succeeded in keeping me interested. I have met various types of guys, but all seem to share one similarity: a forgettable experience. However, this was to be expected. I was not really looking for anyone substantial. But I did fear I had lost a piece of myself somewhere along the way. Not one guy I had met could make my heart flutter. Until recently.

This guy deserves the recognition, even though it is not entirely reciprocated. He has an incredible sex appeal underneath his college attire and distinct boyish charm. He remains confident, even though he too has been hurt.

I feel for him — how could any girl hurt someone so wonderful? Why can't he see there are better girls who would love to be a part of his life? Others might have passed him by, but I have taken him in. I do not know exactly what it is about this guy that makes me smile, but I know my heart still beats. I know now that I can also feel. All I need is that little bit of hope to keep me going.

Eve is pen name for a love guru attending UMass who knows the ins and outs of every relationship. You can ask Eve for advice by e-mailing her at eve_originalsin@yahoo.com. "Original Sin with Eve" runs every Thursday in The Massachusetts Daily Collegian.

CONGRATULATIONS SENIORS!

Kiss A Senior Goodbye

Let your Senior friends know you will miss them!

Give them a card and a champagne glass filled with Hershey® Kisses to say Goodbye!

Only $6.00 each or 2 for $10.00

Stop by the STARS table on the Campus Center Concourse or visit www.UMassAlumni.com/students for more information on how to order these great gifts!

STARS can be reached by phone at 577-1390 or by email at stars@stuaf.umass.edu. Hershey Kisses courtesy of hersheys.com

Rap veterans M.O.P. to play Pearl Street

M.O.P. from page 8

just come on 'round/ You're the next contestants on catch a beat down."

Audiences will enjoy the mixture of these abilities as they are often hard to equally master.

With the Roc A Fella stamp of approval now behind them, M.O.P. is keeping it gangsta like never before. The Mash out Posse's Lil' Fame and Billie Danzenie, childhood friends who grew up together in Brooklyn's Brownsville section, have been the epitome of gangsta rap since their 1994 debut "How About Some Hardcore?" from the House Party Three soundtrack.

The duo, which started off as a group of 11, lost the other nine members to gang wars and jail. Their career though has been outlined more for their constant label changes (being residents on more than five labels in the last nine years), has proven their O.G. formula is best for attaining the cult following that they can be noted for.

Although they are not on the 50 Cent level of success, their tales of street life, the drug game, and survival, arguably rival Mr. Cent's on every level. They are clearly a force as can be seen with the consistency of their album content. If you're looking for the album with the part song, the thug song, and the song for the ladies, please do not look to M.O.P. Their albums are for the streets, plain and simple, and the pattern hasn't changed in the history of their five albums.

Even their singles have edge, from their most popular "Ante Up" of which the remix features Busta Rhymes, and Remi Martin.

To "Cold as Ice" from their 2000 album "Warriors," which posses an old school feel with the sampled chorus of Foreigner's "Cold as Ice": "You're as cold as Ice/ you're willing to sacrifice."

Perhaps this is why their unexpected and almost natural ascension into the Roc A Fella family made so much sense. Their current single with Jay Z titled "Put It In The Air" is spreading through the mix tape circuit like wildfire. Although they haven't been heard from in a while, don't call it a comeback. The duo boasts of longevity, something that many artists cannot.

"I love the grind. I won't change nothing that we did," states Fame in the group's bio on the Roc A Fella website. "A lot of niggas came and went but we still here. You can throw on any one of our records and love it today like you loved it when you first heard it."

Rent One of Ours

No additional fee for 21–25 year old drivers

POTTERS Auto & Truck Rentals

• Cars
• Passenger Vans
• Trucks

• Direct Billing to Insurance Companies
• Free Local Pick Up
• Locally Owned and Operated

549-RENT (7368)

at North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair Center
79 Sunderland Road North Amherst, MA 01059
www.northamherstmotors.com
On Bus Route • One Mile North of UMass

May 12, 2004

DINING SERVICES

Dear customers,

It has been our pleasure to serve you this year; here's a look at what we have in store for the fall.

– Longer hours of operation
– More guest meals
– More flex meals
– More new concepts
– More theme specials
– More healthy choices

RESIDENT
THE BEST DINING ON CAMPUS
Meal Plan

YCMP
A WORLD OF CHOICES
Your Campus Meal Plan

Thank you and good luck in your finals.
Have a safe summer!

Sincerely,
Management and Staff of Dining Services

P.S. Don't forget the midnight buffet on Monday, May 17th!

'Van Helsing' packs in the horror but, maybe a little too much for some moment — any moment real — when I could see the actor play Van Helsing with more than a stony grimace. It never came.

VAN HELSING from page 8

After killing Mr. Hyde, Van Helsing is sent to Transylvania to stop a nefarious plot to raise thousand-demon spawn, with the help of Frankenstein's monster. (No, I don't get it either.) He's in the land to both kill Dracula and protect the Carpathian princess Anna Valerious (Kate Beckinsale, wearing what appears to be a corset, black leggings and a pirate shirt.) She's one of the last in a long line doomed to never rest in peace until her family helps to kill the Vampire King. Her brother (Will Kemp) has turned into a were-wolf, and now it's up to her to continue on the family tradition.

Stephen Sommers, who also did the two "Mummy" movies, wants to keep jolting you, so he keeps the flashing hell-bound images coming. There's a Masquerade Ball of the Undead, complete with gilded vampire dancers and eerie contortionists, and it's a truly resonant supernatural night. But Sommers can't let a scene drift by without pumping it up with blockbuster adrenaline (even that ball scene has to have Jackman swinging from a trapeze.) Sommers, I think, knows, deep down, how to direct a movie but he has to learn how to direct one without turning it into an "event." The first "Mummy" movie was a fun and funny roller coaster, but "Van Helsing" is hardly fun. It's a PG-13 horror smorgasbord that pushes the PG-13 rating to the limit, yet forgets to become engaging on an emotional level. It's the latest movie to feel like it was made to go straight to PlayStation.

If Sommers the director knows how to polish his scenes so that gleam (the movie really does look swell), Sommers the writer proves that he doesn't know how to write. Sommers races through scenes of exposition as if we was itching to get to the "good" stuff (he probably was) — but their isn't any good stuff here. The dialogue is laced with portentousness, as if everything the characters said where weighted with the significance of the universe (every line, though, falls with a sullen thud.) Sommers is striving at — and failing to get gothic "seriousness," but he can't even come up with a great camp hootenanny; the movie is too plodding and grim to be ludicrous.

You can hardly blame the actors for giving performances this bad. Besides Jackman, there's the talented and fine-boned Beckinsale, saddled with a Transylvanian accent of unconvincing ripeness, and Richard Roxburgh, who plays Dracula as if the vampire never had that sensual charisma. But the entire cast is saddled with witless dialogue and a story that barely exists except as a clothesline for Sommers' visions of monsters and explosions and 19th-Century fisticuffs. I'm not looking for art, exactly, in a movie like "Van Helsing." But it would help if I could find something entertaining in its place.

FRANK MASI/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Hugh Jackman plays the legendary monster hunter Van Helsing in the epic action-adventure "Van Helsing."

UMass professor writes script to 2005 release, 'Beautiful Country'

MURRAY from page 8

her half-Filipino background and time she spent living in Southeast Asia.

"I can write characters who speak in broken English without sounding stupid," Murray said.

Murray's work will be seen in the United States in September after its release under Sony Pictures Classics.

When asked what impact "Beautiful Country" might have in the United States, Murray emphasized the importance of the film as an immigrant tale.

"The US has to stop thinking of itself as a white nation," Murray said.

"We can't pretend there is a culture that stands for the whole." She contends that it is foolish to look at Americans in terms of a majority and minorities when the nation is built on such a wide base of cultures.

"We have minorities that have been here longer than the majority," said Murray. She explained that Americans of Chinese descent are still considered a minority, unlike people of Irish descent who no longer fall under that label. Murray described this as a very weird mindset.

A film made by a Norwegian crew with actors of various cultural backgrounds, Murray said "Beautiful Country" is, "what America means to people in other nations." Part of the film's strength is that it is told from this unconventional perspective.

Some of Murray's other success has come from being unconventional.

Her short story collection, "The Caprices," won the 2003 PEN/Faulkner Award for fiction. The collection, which dealt with the Pacific Campaign of World War II was put together after Murray had trouble getting magazines to publish her stories.

"People didn't want women writing about World War II," Murray said.

Murray said she considered the award a great honor and a great victory for work that did not receive strong support from the start.

Murray came to UMass in the fall. She attended graduate school and taught at the University of Texas in Austin. She also taught at Philips Academy in Andover, Mass.

Murray was a 'Bunting Fellow' at Harvard University through the Radcliffe Institute for Advanced study. Selected each year, fellows are granted access to Harvard's resources to pursue work across a wide range of academic disciplines, professions and creative arts. But Murray seems happy to return to the Pioneer Valley, where she was an undergraduate.

"You don't feel quite so ivory tower here," Murray said. Although she attended Mount Holyoke, Murray said she enjoys the atmosphere of a state university and likes the fact that people are working hard to succeed with the resources available to them. Despite her success, Murray is humble about her talents and enjoys teaching both graduate and undergraduate fiction classes.

Murray said she loves teaching and also enjoys the feel of having a steady job. She described her income from professional writing as chunks of money. Even with her recent success, Murray made it clear that having a successful book doesn't mean you can make a living out of it.

"I sold a book when I was 20 years old, but it took 10 years before I sold another," Murray said.

Murray shares story credit on "Beautiful Country" with Terrence Malick, who wrote and directed the World War II drama, "The Thin Red Line." She holds solo credit for the screenplay. Larry Gross, who adapted the screenplay for Clint Eastwood's "True Crime," contributed a script revision, but was removed from the credits after a lengthy arbitration, Murray said.

Recently in film, Murray was involved with an Australian project in which she did a re-write of a story called "City of Dreams." She also had a screenplay optioned that is based on her short story, "Order of Precedence."

Murray's latest novel, "A Carnivore's Inquiry," will be published in July.

The International Award Winning
Commencement Ball 2004
Friday, May 21, 2004
7:00 pm to 12:30 am, Student Union Complex
A Night to Remember!

GRADUATION VIDEOS ON SALE NOW

Capture the moment for life with a well edited and well shot UVC-TV19 production.

BEFORE 6/1/0 DVD $25 VHS $20

AFTER 6/1/04 DVD $30 VHS $25

PREORDERS ARE NOW BEING TAKEN AT UVC STUDIOS IN THE STUDENT UNION BASEMENT

ORDERS WILL ALSO BE TAKEN AT THE GRADUATION CEREMONY

questions? 545-1336

STA Travel's Best of Summer

> This ain't your parents' summer vacation.

»Europe

The total trip: 7 countries...11 days
• NY or to London From Los Angeles or New York From $1,355
• Classic European Magic on 11-day tour through Belgium, Netherlands, Germany, Austria, Italy, Switzerland and France
TRAVEL DATES from LA from NY
Apr 01 - Jun 15 $1,485 $1,355
Jun 16 - Aug 31 $1,725 $1,565

Special Student Airfare:
Apr - Jun / Jun - Oct
London $315 $527
Paris $315 $527
Amsterdam $315 $527
Cheap Sleeps:
London St. Christopher's Village $28/night
Paris Aisha House $34/night
Rail:
Eurail Flexipass (10 days in 2 months) $488
Eurailpass (15 days) $414

»Australia (and New Zealand)

Oz Explorer: Sydney to Cairns your way
• NY or to Sydney From Los Angeles or New York return From Cairns From $1,259
• OZ Experience Cobber Bus Pass, a flexible hop-on/hop-off pass from Sydney to Cairns. For travel up to 12 months.
TRAVEL DATES from LA from NY
Apr 01 - Jun 19 $1,259 $1,109
Jun 20 - Jul 20 $1,379 $1,229

Special Student Airfare:
Apr - Jun / Jun - Oct
Auckland $315 $527
Sydney $315 $527
Melbourne $315 $527
Cheap Sleeps:
Auckland Central Backpackers $16/night
Sydney Wake Up! Hostel $23/night
Melbourne Bakpak Hostel $29/night
Cairns Gilligan's Hotel & Resorts $20/night

»Adventure

"Best of Peru" 9 days of Inca & Machu Pichu
• NY or to Lima From Los Angeles or New York From $1,595
• Tucan Travel's Peruvian Trails a 9-day exploration of the Incan Empire and the famous Inca Trail
TRAVEL DATES from LA from NY
Apr 01 - Jun 30 $1,595 $1,595
Jul 01 - Aug 15 $1,725 $1,600

Special Student Airfare:
Apr - Jun / Jun - Oct
San Jose $315 $527
Bangkok $315 $527
Cape Town $315 $527
Cheap Sleeps:
San Jose Pangea Hostel $16/night
Bangkok Vangloi Hotel $10/night
Cape Town Ashanti Lodge $16/night
Santiago La Casa Roja $8/night

STUDENT

The airfare listed on the right side of this advertisement are for departure from Boston. The packages on the left of this advertisement are acceptable from your local metro area but the rates will be more or less than those advertised prices. Check with your local STA store for rates departing from your local metro area. All fares are subject to change and availability. Taxes and other applicable fees are not included. Restrictions and blackouts apply. Fares are valid for students and youth under 26. ISIC/IYTC card may be required.

Check out our "Best of Summer" and "Let's Go" brochures

BOOK YOUR TRIP NOW!
Room 224 Campus Center Way
1 Campus Center Way
University of Massachusetts
(413) 256.1261

STA TRAVEL
www.statravel.com

ONLINE • ON THE PHONE • ON CAMPUS • ON THE STREET

AT THE GATES OF SMITH COLLEGE

A hilarious, devastating Biblical spoof that's the perfect antidote to Mel Gibson's "Passion."

STARTS FRIDAY FOR 7 DAY'S ONLY!

THE PERFECT STUDY BREAK DAILY AT 7:15 & 9:15

Downtown Northampton's Academy of Music

MOVIELINE: 413-584-8435
academyofmusictheatre.com

Where are YOU living next semester?

CHECK OUT PUFFTON VILLAGE!

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1,2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis courts.

NEW PUFFTON VILLAGE

1040 N. Pleasant St. #410
Amherst, MA 01002
413-549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MAY 13, 2004

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Do you believe in miracles?

Misty Eyed Memories relive how sports made it through 2003-04

"I always turn to the sports page first. It records people's accomplishments; the front page, nothing but man's failure."
-Former Chief Justice Earl Warren

The greatest thing about sports-writing is that it allows the writer to focus all of his or her energies on telling people about a game. We don't build bridges, we don't end wars, and we don't save lives. But in an age when sports takes on such great influence and notoriety, the sportswriter is capable of entertaining many people. Still, it's all a game, and with that in mind, I proudly introduce the 2004 edition of the Misty Eyed Memories. Our theme this year is that of the greatest non-athletic sport in the history of time: Bubble hockey. Partly because it's an easy metaphor set, and partly because you've got a hockey addict running the show. You know the players, and you know what they do.

Here's our version. Game on.

ANDREW MERRITT, SPORTS EDITOR, U.S.A. HEAD COACH HERB BROOKS

Andrew Merritt

It's funny how a period of time feels in your memory. On one hand, it feels like it was about three seconds ago that Marzelli and I were dragging ourselves out to Amherst to put together the Back to School issue, scaring the crap out of management with our seat-of-the-pants flying. On the other hand, the receding hairline and general feeling of oldness reminds me that this year has been one of the longest, most punishing, and most rewarding of my life. I'd like to say that it's all because of what I did, but that's ridiculous. It's because of the staff, and the Signal. With that, on to my Misty Eyes.

One year ago, the sports department said goodbye to some of its best arms, from the starters to the relievers, and we were left with a gaping hole. I like to think that the new blood has come in and done the job admirably, and that while we had to say goodbye to so many last year, the people we've welcomed in this year will make us even better than before. How-ever, before we get to all that, it's time to say goodbye to the graduates.

Brades: The third person I ever met at the Collegian, and you turned into my first really good friend. Coming to a "basketball school" as a hockey fan can be a tough life, but having another puck-head around to talk to certainly made things a lot easier. I thought you were out of your mind when your suggested we go get coffee at some ungodly hour, and now I cherish those meetings more than anything. Friend, mentor, and fellow insomniac, it's been a blast having you around, and while I'm doing everything in my power to get Bob to lock you in the MedRel office until you take a job, I know you're on to better things. Gimme a call if you want to get coffee at two in the morning some time.

COURTESY U.S. HOCKEY HALL OF FAME

Herb Brooks

Straub: Even though you are a traitor, it's been great having you around this year. Arts was lucky to have you, and Sports still misses you today. Not the Knicks propaganda so much, but everything else, yeah. Good luck in all your future endeavors. There are some people who you wonder about, you worry they'll never land on their feet. Glen, you're decidedly not one of those people. Even if you are from New York.

Real quick, I have to add one more senior, who hasn't actually written a story, but who certainly is an honorary sports department staffer. Why? Because I said so. Eldreehay, you've been a good friend all year, someone I can trust, and someone who I can talk to without struggle. You've been a confidant, a mentor, and a sage. I thank you for your years of service to the Collegian, but even more, I thank you for being one of my best friends. I know I don't need to say it, but stay in touch.

Now, on to this year. To start with, some words for some of the rookies — I still get to call you that until September.

B-Hall, my prodigy, you're the only one on this staff who can really get my blood boiling. If you go back and research the last few Misty Eyes, you might find out just what that means. I know you've got the talent for great things, and the head, as long as you keep working. And stay the hell away from Illinitch.

Howza, I'm still waiting for you to tear off the UMass gear and reveal the trusty UNH jersey I know you're hiding, but it's all good. It's great to have you aboard, and while you haven't been around long, you definitely have good things ahead of you, and it feels like you've been a part of this thing from the beginning. Now don't screw it up.

Wyner, get your knee fixed as soon as you can, but in the meantime, start writing, huh? Pretty soon we'll have to bump you back down to correspondent. I kid, I kid. It's been a pleasure having you around, hopefully you stick with this thing and make something of your time at the paper.

Barstow, I'd say you've managed to be the quietest staff member in the history of the sports department. And in a group of absolute loudmouths, that isn't necessarily a bad thing. Great to have you aboard, we didn't use your talents enough this year. That will change, trust me.

Duggan and Ryan, you guys are still a mystery, but I suspect you've got some good stuff up your sleeve. Prove it next year. Paula and Becky, it's a shame we couldn't have you around more, but hey, it's all about the future. Swing down sometime, wouldn't surprise me if Marz has an intramural cricket match for you to cover. In all seriousness, it's been nice having the female presence around the office, and I hope you guys got something out of it too. Don't be strangers.

Now moving to the "not-so-much rookies" section, Frat Boy Foster, I know this year has been tough, and I know the future's unclear right now, but stick with it kid, you've got talent in that head of yours, you just gotta figure out how to tap it. Come back in the fall, there's always a seat waiting for you.

Bob: You've brought a very interesting mindset to the sports department. The fact that you think well enough to (nearly) outwit me is very valuable, even if I'll always know more than you. Seriously though, there are times when it seems like you have no idea what you're doing, and it's those times when I realize that you actually have it all put together. Next year is your year, go make a name for yourself.

Marz: Well, here are the keys, see where you can take this thing. When you came to the paper last year, I was jealous because everyone saw all this potential in you. Fortunately, they were all right. Some people have a hard time shaking the "freshman" moniker, but you seemed to lose it before I did, and that's just not fair. It's right, though, because you've displayed wisdom and wit beyond your years. You're the only member of this staff that I know not to argue sports with, because, well, I'll just plain lose. If there's a compliment that I can give you to sum up what I think, it's this: I'm quite convinced that you're doing to do a tremendously better job with this beast than I did. Spellman still sucks. Go Sox.

It's been an incredibly long, hard year, full of memories and missteps, great moments and hours of toil. But I do want to thank the sports staff of the Collegian, 2003-04 edition. Using one of the worst sports clichés in history, you guys have tremendous upside, and I can't wait to see what you do next. Slainte.

MIKE MARZELLI, ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR, U.S.A. GOALIE JIM CRAIG

Mike Marzelli

Over the past nine months, I've gone from wide-eyed college kid to a young man ready to take on the world. I've found someone I truly love, I've made friends I'll always have, I've been places I've never been before, I've seen my mom chase her dream and my dad receive the recognition he's always deserved. I've realized that winning Super Bowls NEVER gets old, and that waiting for a World Series has gotten really old. I've continued root for Minuteman athletics whether it's objective and ethical or not, and most importantly I've continued to strive for the only goal I've ever had in life: to make something of myself. As this, the fastest of my 20 years, winds down, I know the time to sit and watch has long since passed, and the time to Carpe Diem has arrived. So while I owe so much to the Collegian, its staff and its readers, I know the only way I can truly reciprocate is to keep going strong and continue the long, storied legacy of the Collegian sports editor.

Thus, in the words of my faithful partner in crime (seriously, he's a criminal), it truly is...GAME-TIME.

Football — Cue the entrance music: "So I'm outside of the chuuuuub and you think I'm a puuuuuuunk" ... ATLANTIC 10 CHAMPIONS ... a wire up my sleeve to listen to the Sox in the press box at McGuirk ... I'm just going to go to Kansas for the night, I'll be back tomorrow ... KANSAS STATE - more purple than you'll ever need ... I'm just going to take a quick nap ... yeah so this is where the bus was supposed to be, and that's where we go call for a cab ... hey Merritt ... holy sh*t! ... he's &^#@# wide open!!!! ... oh my GOD ... AHHHHHH TOUCHDOWN!!! ... stadium announcer: Krohn's pass complete to No. 11 Jason Peebler for 65 yards, touchdown UMass ... crowd: shhhhhhhhhh ... They're not boys Bill Snyder, they're just I-AA ... there is NO cheering in the Maine press box, NONE ... there are, however, obstructed views ... trapping three bees in one soda can at Sports Lunch ... Whipple has his cake and eats it too ... and cookies ... and ice cream ... UNH game - my first time on the radio ... "biiiiiiiig number 99 Valdamar Brower" ... VIRGINIA ... taking a bus to Bradley International, cops open van doors and out pop three people, explain that Whip ... hot tub at the hotel ... "welcome back to Williamsburg for Game 3 of the NLCS" ... "what y'all need matches for?" ... ok, problem, can't see the scoreboard, "we apologize folks as we step outside to check what quarter it is" ... Strates promised his dad he'd bring him back cheese steaks from Philly on the way to Villanova ... three of them ... drunk kids walking through our booth ... pasta and meatballs at halftime (retribution Strates) ... and the play of the year, Jon Junkins on the call: "AND THERE'S A FUMBLE, AND ITS ON THE GROUND AND IT'S PICKED UP BY SHANNON JAMES!!! HE'S GONNA GO ALL THE WAY!!! ... oh, you guys have the Jim Thorne bobble heads? ... DV wasn't worried about Richmond ... Bring on the Fightin' Blue Hens ... "do you want any KETCHUUUUP or SAAAAAALT?" ... we had a neutral cup ... Vince Lombardi rest stop ... The Big One ... pizza in the press box at 10 a.m. ... "If we don't give a damn, we don't give a" ... Owumi/Osumi/Oswumi, did he catch that?!?! ... the best football game I ever saw, and a place I can't wait to go back to ... clinching the title against URI ... Rafters to watch the UD/Nova game ... the selection show in the weight room – ROBBED ... Coldgate ... where'd this snow come from? ... no one has ANY idea where media will call is ... pass interference my ass ... you want to go to Montreal? ... sure ... Stop, Drop, KABOOM baby ... do you speak English or French? ... Neither sorry, we're out of money ... Um, you're at the truck entrance ... oh ... set the alarm on your phone ... I don't $^#$(%@# have one, look!! (pulls out debit card) ... and the first two back from Thanksgiving break.

COURTESY AMERICAN AMUSEMENTS

Hoops — Rest In Peace coach Jack Leaman, you are and forever will be the heart, mind and soul of UMass athletics, and a friend and inspiration to all. You are sorely, sorely missed ... Brilliant questions after the Globetrotters game: "Does this game make you overconfident coach?" ... the Playazzzzz ... stayed in to watch Texas Tech game, should have gone to hockey ... meeting K.C. Jones at the Hartford game ... beating up on Coppenrath and the rest of Junk's boys ... drivin through the Blizzard of 2003 to get to the Comm. Classic ... Bob Ryan in the press room at Conte ... Gabe Lee's prayer to tie the game ... 11,349,858,738 chances to win the damn thing in regulation and overtime ... missed free throws ... sweet visibility on the way home ... narrowly avoiding a 30-car pileup on the Turnpike ... back four and a half hours later to watch D. Sproles run all over Oklahoma ... Mohegan Sun ... A-10 fantasy draft at the BBQ joint (never make picks on instinct or they'll probably redshirt) ... getting smoked at Uconn ... damn, I've never seen a guy hit eight threes in one game Ben Gordon ... "would you like to see this series continue coach Lappas?" ... waiting two hours to listen to Calhoun bitch about the refs, which he's probably still doing ... Racing home from work on the last day of winter break to see Artie stick a three to beat Temple ... URI the day before the Super Bowl, best game of the year ... going the wrong way on the way there and back ... I'm going to let the Ryan Center cater my wedding ... Maxwell STICKS IT aaaaaaand Lapp rejoices ... listening to Jim Baron flip on his team from the hallway ... callin the Dayton game with gglove ... we HAD that one! ... Waleskowski ... Waleskeski ...Walesoki ... WYSOCKI! ... Al Skinner Night ... meeting Julius Erving and coach Skinner ... grabbing an interview with Ted Sarandis ... announcing the wrong starting lineup on the air w/Bertrand ... Fordham — the worst game we ever made an effort to attend ... best media room in the entire A-10 ... Guthro going nuts after the 'Cuse game ... dead battery in the parking lot :P in the Bronx ... our crack at St. Joe's ... becoming public enemy No.1 on UmassHoops.com ... meeting Nelson, West, Carroll and Martelli ... autographs all around ... Marques Green's shorts ... introducing myself to John Calipari ... and many hours hoping and praying for a return to the glory days.

Mert — (Accepting torch) We did it. It wasn't smooth, flawless or the slightest bit easy, but we started out with just the two of us and when the smoke cleared, we accomplished everything we ever thought we would. Sure, we've had our share of bumps along the road, but they were only inevitable since we were each other's lifeblood for a whole year. I know this year has been one of the more taxing and stressful years of your life, and I won't claim to know what it was like because I'll be the first to admit you outworked me times 25. However what I can say with certainty is that having witnessed the time, energy and effort you put into the section, I now have a perfect model for how to run this section to the utmost of my abilities. I like to think that the majority of what I've learned this year, I've learned from you, and that there will be a little Merritt in every decision I make next year and beyond.

McGovern - Wanna take a ride? Our chance to shine is here, so shake those concussions, leave the Marlins, Giants and Knicks behind and get ready for the longest year of your life. I know we can do it; it's just a question of what we'll get into in the process. Oh, and by the way, Koch's on the phone about your baseball preview.

Howza — The first time you bring anything UNH around this place will be the last time you bring anything UNH around this place. We've got a long year ahead of us next year, and I don't know about Bob but I know you'll be up to the challenge. Gear up over the summer, and try to learn something about the Sox, or I'll be spending all next fall teaching you.

COURTESY U.S. HOCKEY HALL OF FAME

Jim Craig

Oh, and yeah, meetings are definitely at your place.

Brades — I'm proud of you dude, there's no other way to say it. Since the day I got here you've been movin' on up, and I just can't foresee that pattern discontinuing. From assistant sports to WRNX to biz manager to the Quad City Lil Rubber Duckies, your talent and determination has worked wonders for you, and rightfully so. You've never been anything less than a consummate professional, a stand-up guy and the most caring of friends. Just keep doing what you're doing, and go get 'em. I know you'll make all of us proud.

Hall — My man for out-on-a-limb predictions. I'm still waiting for you to gaze into your magic crystal ball and pull out some amazing revelation, like, "it's going to be humid over the summer" or something incredible like that, but I digress. You've got a bright future ahead of you kid, and I think you know that. I know the fire exists in your belly and the knowledge is there in your head, all that's left is to keep going strong.

Barstow — The silent assassin. You are easily one of the most dependable writers and reporters we've had in my two years at this paper. I know, for a fact, that whatever assignment you're given, it'll get done, and that is the hallmark of a good reporter. I wish you had decided to write for us sooner than you did, but I know you're ready for big things next year and beyond.

Foster — You must be out covering the 2003 Leadoff Classic, so I'll just remind you that you're not forgotten around here. You've got a lot of potential and as strong a sports mind as I have seen at this school. I look forward to your return, and I know you'll be prepared to grasp the opportunity and run with it.

Leah — I'm sure you're probably out running in the rain somewhere, but nonetheless I've never met a more intense follower of track in my entire life. I hope you continue to make the most of your time down here.

To those left unmentioned and to the sports staff as a whole — There is no experience at this institution that will better prepare you for a career in sports media more than this very newspaper. You've all come and gone down here for one reason or another, but the common bond you all share is the God-given talent of writing, a pure and unrelenting passion for sports, or both. Any way you look at it, the Collegian has made an impression on you, as you have made an impression on the Collegian. Whether you've come and gone, or are just getting started, this is the place you want to be. As long as you know and believe in that, you will always be welcome.

Peace.

And go Sox.

See MISTY EYES on page 13

More Misty Eyes from the Collegian sports staff

MISTY EYES from page 12

BOB MCGOVERN, ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR, U.S.A. WINGER MIKE ENUZIONE

Bob McGovern

This time last year I was telling myself that I actually needed to do something with this whole college thing. It seemed to me that, being a journalism major, I should maybe spend a little time at the Collegian, just a little.

Now a year and countless hours later I have realized that this line of work what I love to do, not bad for a kid that a year ago was content on selling windows... door to door.

So needless to say I'm excited for next year, my final year at the old U of Mass. This year was as good as any, new friends and that vintage UMass randomness that keeps this place interesting.

Being a writer I tried to think of a good way to sum up this whole junior year business. You know what, it's finals week... I'm just going to do a damn list:

Merritt: You are a giant pain in my ass, luckily I respect what you do down here. It's been real working for you this year and I guess I have no deal, er... I mean, do it again next year. Also we need to go out and have a drink, I'm not sure that (outside the Collegian party) we've had a beer. Time to change that.

Marzelli: I guess we have the sports section next year, I think all meetings should be at Howe's place. At some point I'll bring the Rugby game over so I can whoop your ass in that and MVP, and your tool roommate too. However, if I'm not mistaken you live in the dorms so why don't you drag your lazy ass out to Pufftion and bring you're A-game. Oh by the way, it's going to be a long year.

Howe: Nice to see someone worthy of my position. It's a long road from here man, I hope you are prepared for next year. Take it easy.

Foster: Fordham, period.

Barstow, Hall (Rivera sucks), Leah, and seven still works for the sports department, you guys have a good summer and come back ready to write more than 600 words. You each owe one column on the Marlins due Sept. 2, if it's not in we have to fire Hall. So if you don't turn one in, it's ok.

Little Sato: Thanks for hangin' out.

Collegian people: You are a great group of people that do an admirable job, all things considered. The way you handled times of difficulty shows just how much working down here prepares us for the world outside the UMass bubble. I look forward to coming down next year for another array of stressful situations that are turning my sideburns gray.

Paige: Now I know it's been about five months, but I'm still curious: Who exactly did let the dogs out? I'm sure we'll figure it out...

Rugby team: Every year you guys never cease to amaze me, it just sucks that every year I lose some more of you.

Dennis- keep on doing the Lovett thing, good times in New Orleans

Junior- always a good time, too bad there is no shed to hide behind at drinkups.

Gary- it's been fun playing with you.

Stromsky- what's the English word for shocker?

Scotty- even without your beard you look like a crazyman. Thanks for teaching me how to play the game over these last three years, you are one of the reasons UMass Rugby is where it is. You will be missed, even if you did screw me out of three tries.

Barish- you were one of the first people I met on this team, and it's been real ever since. It's not going to be the same without you down there next year, especially if we go back to Colby to stay at Ward's. You better come down when you can and we'll go buy some Jaeger-meister, get Mario, and go behind the shed at Ladd's old house. Just don't puke in my Jeep.

COURTESY U.S. HOCKEY HALL OF FAME

Mike Eruzione

To the rest of you crazy kids: I can't wait until next year, it will be one for the record books. I will miss you guys during the summer, but when we go back I'm sure we'll be re-acquainted at Ben's farm.

To the residents of 314 Pufftion-Now where should I start with this one? Last year we all knew it was going to be crazy, but I don't think we were ready for this year. I learn something new everyday from you idiots and that's the way it's been the past three years. My only regret is that the four of us cannot live together next year, but then again what housing development would want all of us? Coming into that nasty apartment every night, I'm never quite sure what I am going to walk into. Needless to say it is always some form of comic relief.

Mills- "Makes sense to me," "You're fired!" "Fantasy!" All of these phrases will forever ring through the hallowed halls of 314. It's been a good time living with your craziness, from watching COPS, to hours of fantasy, to wasting countless hours on Playstation 2. I'll see you next year after all, that's why I come up here, NATURE! Goulet!

Slimbo- As I'm writing this I would gather that you are either taking a three-hour shower or eating (it's 5:10, so I'll ask you tomorrow). Been real fun man, real fun. Chomper during the summer, Roanoke during the fall, you killing my poor Jeep in the winter, and getting crazy in the spring... sounds about right. I guess we already did Michigan and Virginia, why don't we just do Vegas next year, kidding. Or am I?

Geico- Well there goes another interesting one. Seems like the season's change but we just do the same stuff. For some odd reason I feel like we are on the same wavelength and watching us interact would make for quite the sitcom. So seniors next year, that's cool I guess. I feel like we both know what's going to happen, I mean we are moving into a place called the "Crack Shack." I would list the stuff we did, but in all honesty it's a big blur of Art History, journalism, and, well... the usual.

UMass- I'm transferring to Boston College in the fall. Just kidding... or am I?

MATT BRADY, FORMER ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR, U.S.A. CENTER NEAL BROTEN

Every year in this column, I start out by sending a shout out to some of the graduating seniors who made a difference in my life to that point. And now, it's me. I'm moving on to the real world, ready to take on life as it comes. Life is truly short, and my life at the Massachusetts Daily Collegian was a great one – lasting five years – that I will never forget.

First off, some advice for all of you. Enjoy your time here. At times it sucks, and you think it's not worth it. It is. Trust me. I've spent more hours in that basement than any of you (with maybe one exception) and it is something that I do miss. The other piece of advice is to love. Love hard, and love long. It hurts when you lose the things you love or when you have to say goodbye, but it's worth it. The pain is just a reminder of the good times, and the good times are something you will have forever.

And so, with limited fanfare, here are Old Man Brady's final farewells to a sports staff that has limitless potential.

It's been an interesting year for some of the newcomers. Many have come and gone, some remain in limbo, and some are a more entrenched part of the newspaper than when they arrived months ago. If I miss anyone, please forgive me, it certainly isn't on purpose.

B-Hall, you came in a timid newcomer with a ton of passion and are leaving as a passionate, solid writer who probably has a little more confidence than he should at this point. That will drive your editors nuts, but if you use that energy you have you can do this for the rest of your life. In your freshman year, you earned more as a stringer than I did in my four years combined. I will never forget that, you jerk. Keep reading and keep writing and listen to your elders, and you will one day be giving these same shout outs to a new class in three years.

Leah, I admire you for breaking through the boys club that has been the sports department for years. There have been few female sports-writers in the past coming by the Collegian, and I know that you have the guts and the will to put up with the immaturity for the long haul. It's a rewarding experience, and I see only great things for you. You're wise beyond your years, but don't get too high on yourself because of it ... I doubt you will. I look forward to coming by in three years and seeing where you are at the paper.

Barstow, I remember you from one of Simurda's classes — damned if I can remember which one. When you first came in, I thought, wow, I hope that guy can keep his confidence because I know he's a smart one. You've exceeded expectations, and impressed me, which isn't easy. Keep forging ahead and you will come out of this on top.

COURTESY U.S. HOCKEY HALL OF FAME

Neal Broten

Howe, you came about the same time I was packing up for the Midwest, but from what I've heard, you are the next superstar. No pressure. Don't screw up or I'll hunt you down. Good luck keeping Marz sane next year.

Bob, I didn't know what to think when you were hired as assistant editor last year, but my doubts proved unfounded. You did great things in your first year on staff, and I expect more of the same from you in the years to come. Your writing is much more, well, English, than it used to be. Keep up the good work and for God's sake, stop getting concussions, you moron. There are a few good brain cells left in that melon of yours, don't let the drinking and the rugby kill what's left.

The one semi-sports staffer in this column is the one long-time friend and graduating senior who is left here. Plus, you played street hockey back in the day, so you qualify. Eldridge, you will always be a hero to me. We've spent many mornings at People's, many evenings in the basement

See MISTY EYES on page 16

Four Seasons Wine & Liquors

Beer:	Wine:	Liquor:
Miller Lite & M.G.D. 30 pk cans...$18.49*	Moet & Chandon 750 ml...$29.99	Seagram's V.O. 1.75 liter...$24.99
Molson Golden, Ice, Canadian 2/12 pk btl...$16.99*	Casa Lapostolle Cuvee Alexandre Chardonnay 750 ml...$12.99	Smirnoff & Smirnoff Twist 1.75 liter...$20.99
Keystone 30 pk cans...$13.49*	Beaulieu Vineyards Napa Valley Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 750 ml...$8.99	Crown Royal 750 ml...$19.99
Coors Light 20 pk btl...$12.99*	Chandon Fresco Brut & Extra Dry 750 ml...$8.99	Romana Sambuca 750 ml...$18.99
Millwaukee's Best 30 pk cans...$10.99*	Peachy Canyon Zinfandel 750 ml...$9.99	Jose Cuervo Tequilla 750 ml...$16.99
Busch & Busch Light 24 pk btl...$10.99*	Papio Chardonnay, Cabernet, Merlot 1.5 liter...$7.99	Seagram's 7 1.75 ltr...$15.99
Molson XXX 12 pk btl...$10.99*	Buckeley's Cabernet, Shiraz 750 ml...$7.99	UV Vodka 1.75 ltr...$15.99
Corona 12 pk btl...$10.99	Goats do Roam Red and White 750 ml...$6.99	Rubinoff Vodka all flavors 750 ml...$9.99
Dogfish Head 6 pk btl...$6.99*

*all beer prices plus deposit

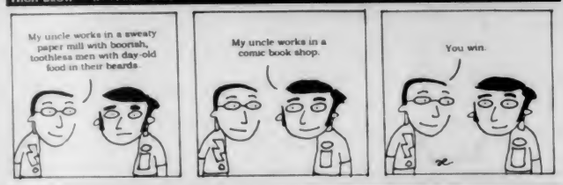
Four Seasons Wine & Liquors
333 Russell St., Rte 9, Hadley, MA 01035
584-8174 • Mon.- Sat. 9am- 11pm
SALE 5/13 THROUGH 5/19
Now Open Sundays Noon to 11pm

ABSOLUTE NUTRITION
Weight Loss and Body Building Specialists
Bodybuilding
Weight Loss
Student Discounts
Full Lines of Sci-Fit - EAS - Lebrada - Muscletech
20%-40% below GNC prices
65 University Drive
Next to Beach Club Tanning
687-6083

The Hampshire Hospitality Group
Juniors...Pre-book your graduation 2005 hotel rooms on June 1st, 2004 at 10:00am
Call 413-587-9778
Holiday Inn Express Stay Smart
Econo Lodge By Choice Hotels
University Lodge
Howard Johnson Express Inn
Amherst and Hadley
For Rate Information: www.hampshirehospitality.com/grad05

DIGITAL THEORY
tenth annual CPD senior show
FRIDAY MAY 14th
SCREENING: HERTER AUDITORUM
5 PM - 7 PM
AFTER PARTY: BLUE WALL PUB
7 PM - ?
MADE POSSIBLE BY GRANTS FROM UMASS ART COUNCIL & AUXILLARY SERVICES

Elsie Hooper • By Rebecca Hunt

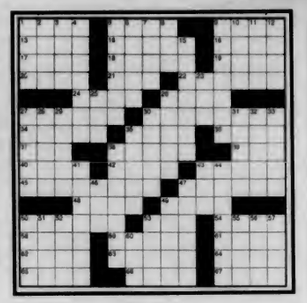


Get Fuzzy • By Darby Conley

JayHoo and JawHoo • By Mark Vetare

High Brow • By Aaron Epel

Buttercup Festival • By Elliott G. Garbinski



Today's Crossword Puzzle

Across
1 Discount
5 Sailor
9 Arrived
13 Similar
14 Dwight's rival
15 Backlogs
17 Sign of the future's
18 Yogurt chaice
19 Lyric
20 Foundation
21 Swamp
22 Banged up
24 Wildebeests
26 Writer Morrison
27 Difficult time
30 Chancellor game
32 Sunflower
36 Tresses
38 Sigs.
37 JFK info
38 Pours
39 Auto
40 Singer Turner
42 Boolean maybe
45 Tiny bubbles
47 Command
48 Snow boots
49 Paper toy
50 Rice alternative
53 Deism goddess
55 Sea
56 Dante or Ferrara
57 "Voxel" start
61 Leaves out
62 Fish organ
63 More rational
64 Dainty jewelry
65 Electric fish
66 Mr. Hussein
67 Idiots' home

Down
1 Sci-fi classic, with "The"
2 Type of bean
3 Hawaiian
4 Strings
5 Brenna's
6 Largish amount
9 Is between jobs
7 Custard
8 — -chi martial art
9 Fault
10 Family member
11 Small amount
12 Writer Reginold
13 Not atheistic
23 Terminate
25 Opposing vote
28 Adds water
27 "Golden Boy" playwright
28 Bar mitzvah
29 Prince William's mom
30 Postpones action
31 More pleasant
32 Tread off
33 Concise
35 Rounds of applause
38 Confidently and noisy
41 Dismays
43 Furry companion
44 Leopard relative
46 Weapon
48 Verdict in a jury
47 Depots of weapons
49 Asian country
50 Magazine part
51 NYC theater award
52 Confide in
53 Long-solve
54 Cabbalistic
58 Nanny
58 Poop out
57 Blues singer James
60 Flies hastily

10-19-01 © 2001 United Feature Syndicate

Dining Commons Menu

D.C. contact: 413-545-2626

LUNCH
- Oriental Beef & Vegetables
- Chicken Cutlet Sandwich
- Spicy Black Bean Burger (vegan)

DINNER
- Roast Turkey
- Stuffed Shells (vegetarian)
- Rain Forest Black Bean Stew (vegan)

Daily Weather Forecast

For Amherst

THURSDAY
- High: 70
- Low: 49

FRIDAY
- High: 79
- Low: 59

SATURDAY
- High: 86
- Low: 57

Production Crew

On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Dan Lamothe/Andrew Merritt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Matthew Reid
COPY EDITOR
Erika Lovley
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Shannon Farrington
PRODUCTION STAFF
Samantha Neilsen

Horoscopes

aquarius • Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Open the wallet and buy food for your friends.

pisces • Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Drink lots of water. Your body is going to need it.

aries • Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Take the memories of this semester with you wherever you go.

taurus • Apr. 20-May 20
Don't look up; the sky is going to fall on your face.

gemini • May 21-Jun. 21
Let the materialistic crap go.

cancer • Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Don't get fired in a frenzy today.

leo • Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Be thankful for your friends.

virgo • Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Get out and let yourself go.

libra • Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Eat an apple today. Tomorrow it will keep the doctor away.

scorpio • Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Chill out you cool banana.

sagittarius • Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Go out and get laid!

capricorn • Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Take a shower and wash the smell of failure off.

Quote for the Day

"Our progress as a nation can be no swifter than our progress in education. The human mind is our fundamental resource."

-John F. Kennedy

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Apartment for Rent

Apt 2bdrm For Rent 253-2149 AmherstCenter Awesomelocation

Mill Valley Estates now Renting 2 bedrm $1050/1100, 4 bedrm $2100 available 6/1/04 No last months rent, Free Heat & Hot Water, 2 full baths, A/C On busline Mon-Fri 10-5pm 253-7377

Brandywine Apts. Now leasing, 1& 2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June, July, Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last www.brandywine-apts.com Stop by or Call 549-0600.

Auto for Sale

94 Honda Accord Sport $3500 or best offer 133K miles good condition 413-585-4094

1994 Geo Prism 113,000 miles great condition New Timing Belt 4 New Tires $1200.00 O.B.O. 577-5129 665-7731

Ford Probe SE 1996 $1075 Call 413-687-7510. Mottez@cns.umass.edu

Honda Civic EX 99 4DR. Manual 69K mi. A/C Alarm Great condition $9200 545-1291

Auto for Sale

1992 Honda Accord LX 4 door sedan 138K miles good condition $2200 253-6784

Employment

Painters Summer Job opportunity in or near West Springfield, no experience necessary. Call Joe 413-364-4649

Babysitter position available in Amherst starting 9/11/04 Afternoons and possibly some full days for a 6 and 10 year old. Help with homework, play dates, activities. French speaking preferred. Free room possibly negotiable. Please send letter and CV to Betsy Chasson 103 Converse Hall Amherst College PO Box 5000 Amherst, MA 01002

Activism
Summer Jobs
For the Environment
1000-5000/Summer Join the state's largest public interest grassroots organization to protect our environment, public health, human rights and democracy. Career opportunities and benefits available. Call Bobby 1-413-256-6434

Employment

Painters wanted for Reading area. Call Francine at 781-548-9255 for more information.

Students wanted for a summer painting job. $400 - $600/week. Experience not needed but a plus. All hired will go through a paid training program. Call 888-277-9785 or go to COLLEGE-PRO.COM Work with friends

BICYCLE TOUR LEADERS NEEDED: Summer teenage bicycling trips. USA, Canada, Europe. Salary plus expense paid. Student Hostelling Program, P.O. Box 419, Conway, MA 01341 (800) 343-6132, www.bicycletrips.com.

Resort Real Estate Sales Assistant: World renowned multi-million dollar real estate development company seeks motivated and confident individual to market high-end real estate at The Greenbrier Resort in White Sulphur Spring, West Virginia. Ideal candidate is very comfortable speaking on the phone & interested in pursuing a career in luxury real estate. Immediate openings available. Please send resumes to Mitch Johnson-mjohnson@gbtpc.com

Employment

Greenfield Secure Self Storage seeks student P/T to rent out self storage units on campus 413-775-0074

Painters Wanted in Amherst Area. No Experience Necessary Call Alison@413-627-9043

LIFEGUARD Brandywine Apts. needs a certified lifeguard. Call or stop by. 549-0600

Lowell Area Driven Leader needed to be crew chief for one of the state's largest exterior house painting companies. Must be hardworking, Independent & have own car. Exp. preferred, but not necessary. Call Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Painters Wanted in Danvers area want a challenging job outdoors w/good $$$? Seeking driven, Hardworking Individual w/own car to be a painting crew member. No exp. necessary Call: Sung-Yoon @ 978-387-6337

Hardworking individuals living around 93/95 belt South of I-90 for fulltime painter positions. Challenging job requires independence, own car. $10-$12 base rate. Call Will @ 617-699-8970

Employment

Buono Y Sano is hiring for positions for fall semester please apply in person Call for directions 253-4000

Moving: Local moving company looking for self motivated individuals, part time positions available immediately. Weekday availability a plus. Raises commensurate with performance. Potential for tips. Good attitudes are a must. Call (413)584-4746

Summer on Cape Cod: Hang out with 2 low maintenance boys 8 and 11. Several days a week. No nights, no weekends. Free room and board plus $50.00 per week Call Jack at 508-888-5230.

Marketing Agency Seeks Outgoing High Energy Individuals for promotions $15/hour 888-477-6668 www.hauspromotions.com

"Bartending" $ 300/Day Potential, No Experience Nesc. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 Ext.162

For Sale

Microfridge for sale Terrific Condition for $60.00 Asking $ 300.00 or best offer Call 546-1377.

Furniture for Sale

Furniture and Two Cars for Sale Call for details (413) 536-7933

Graduating in May everything must go Call 549-0069

House for Rent

3 Bedrooms 2 baths on busline Amherst 413-323-6453

5 Bedroom house. 2 1/2 miles. On bus line. Washer/dryer Home 253-3670 leave a message, or cell 413-530-6996.

Hadley 5 Bedroom Plus home, 2 baths w/ laundry hookup. Large yard, minutes from UMass. 549-4270

Hadley Newer Five Bedroom Home 549-4270

Personals

CONGRATULATIONS for making it through the last 4 years! Faye Marchant, Jen Chabot, Emma Butcher, + Meredith Charlisle you guys are the BEST. MISS you so much next year. Good luck w/all you do. Love, Tasha

Roommate Wanted

Female roommate wanted to share 2-bd apt in Sunderland. $418/mo. Includes heat, hot water, and cable. Available 6/1 or earlier. Call Lauren @ 860-604-6068.

Room Wanted

Summer Residence Needed! Last minute summer internship in Hyannis, Looking to rent room on Cape Cod. Contact Maria at 413-546-5248 or mfanelli@student.umass.edu

Services

Pregnant? Need help? Call Birthright of Amherst area for free testing and assistance 549-1906

PREGNANCY TESTING, HIV Testing, Birth Control, and Emergency Contraception. Affordable and confidential. Tapestry Health, 27 Pray Street, Amherst. 548-9992

Summer Sublet

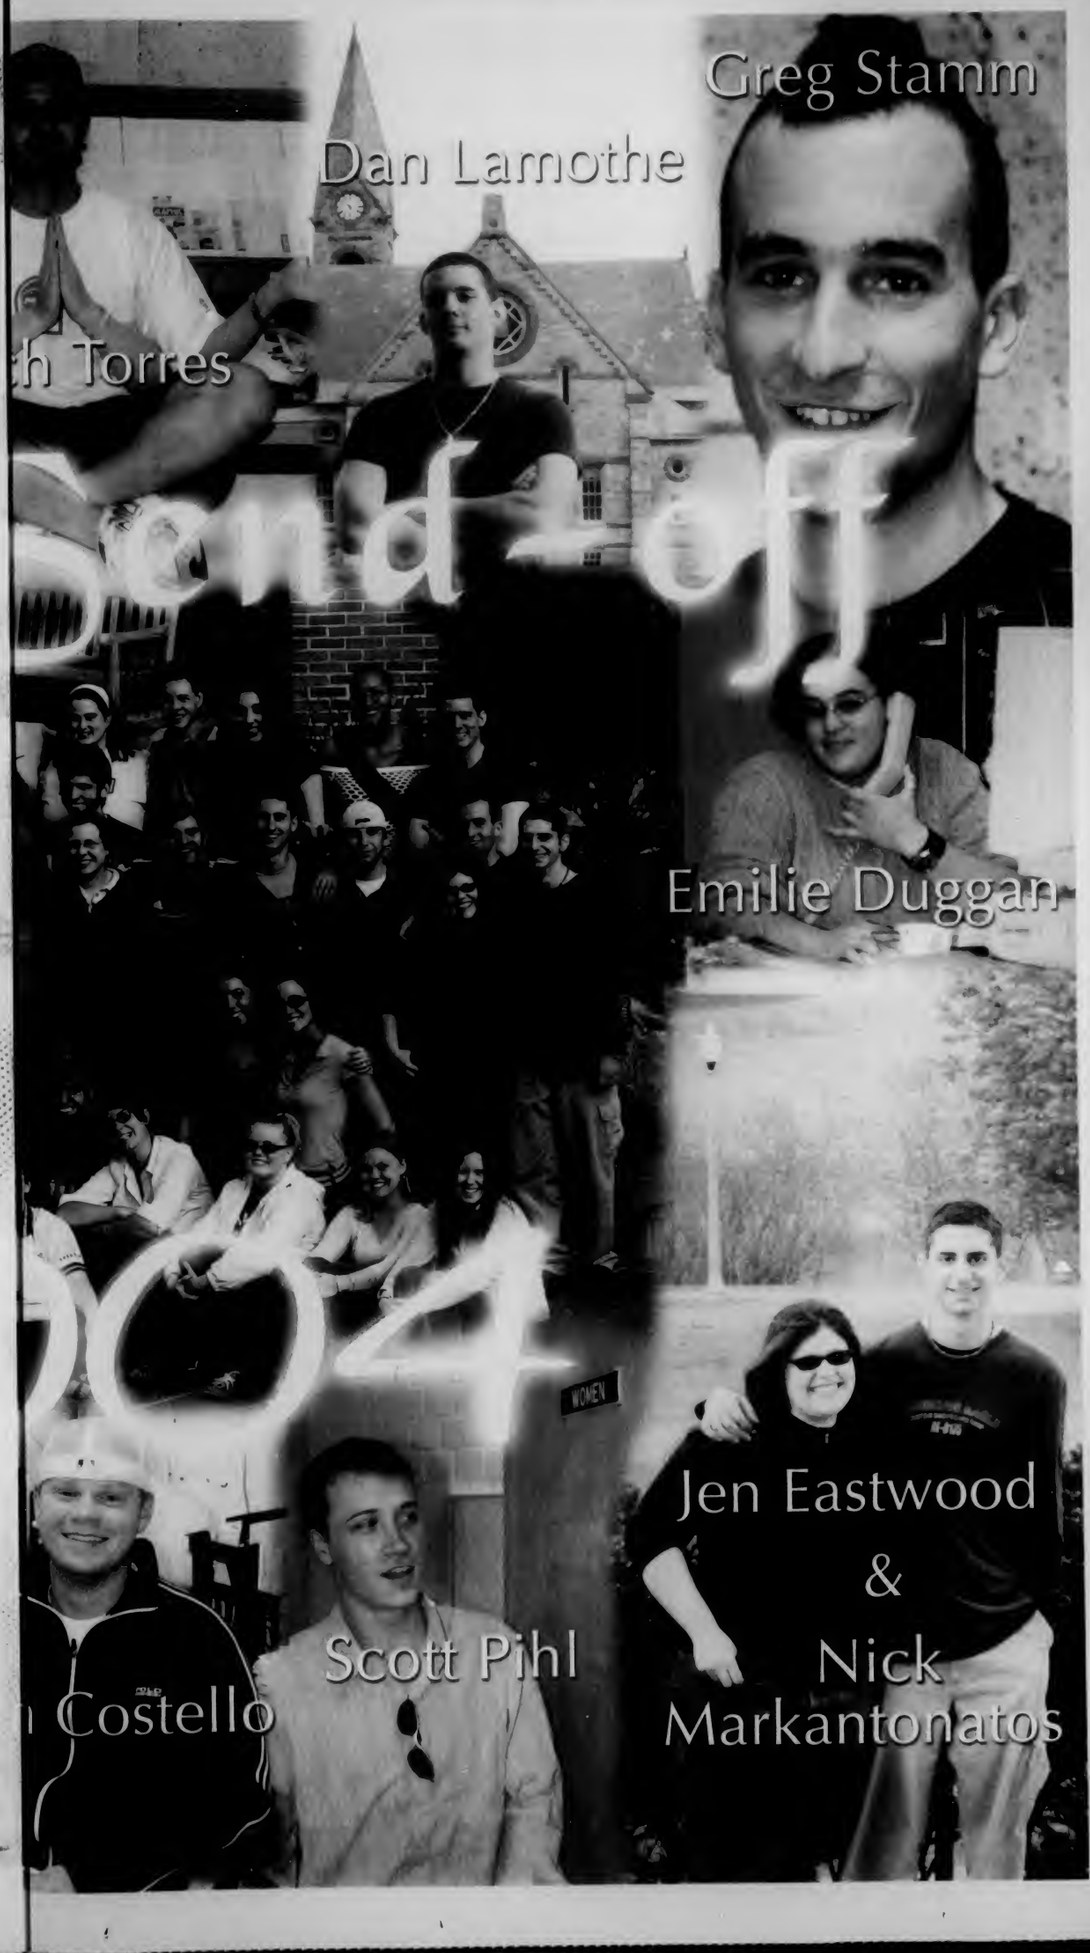
2 Lg Bdrm apt Main St on bus route Minutes from UMass Summer with Fall option. 256-1146

1 bedroom in Puffton for Sublet starting June 1st Call Stacey at 695-2944 $750 negotiable possible Fall option.

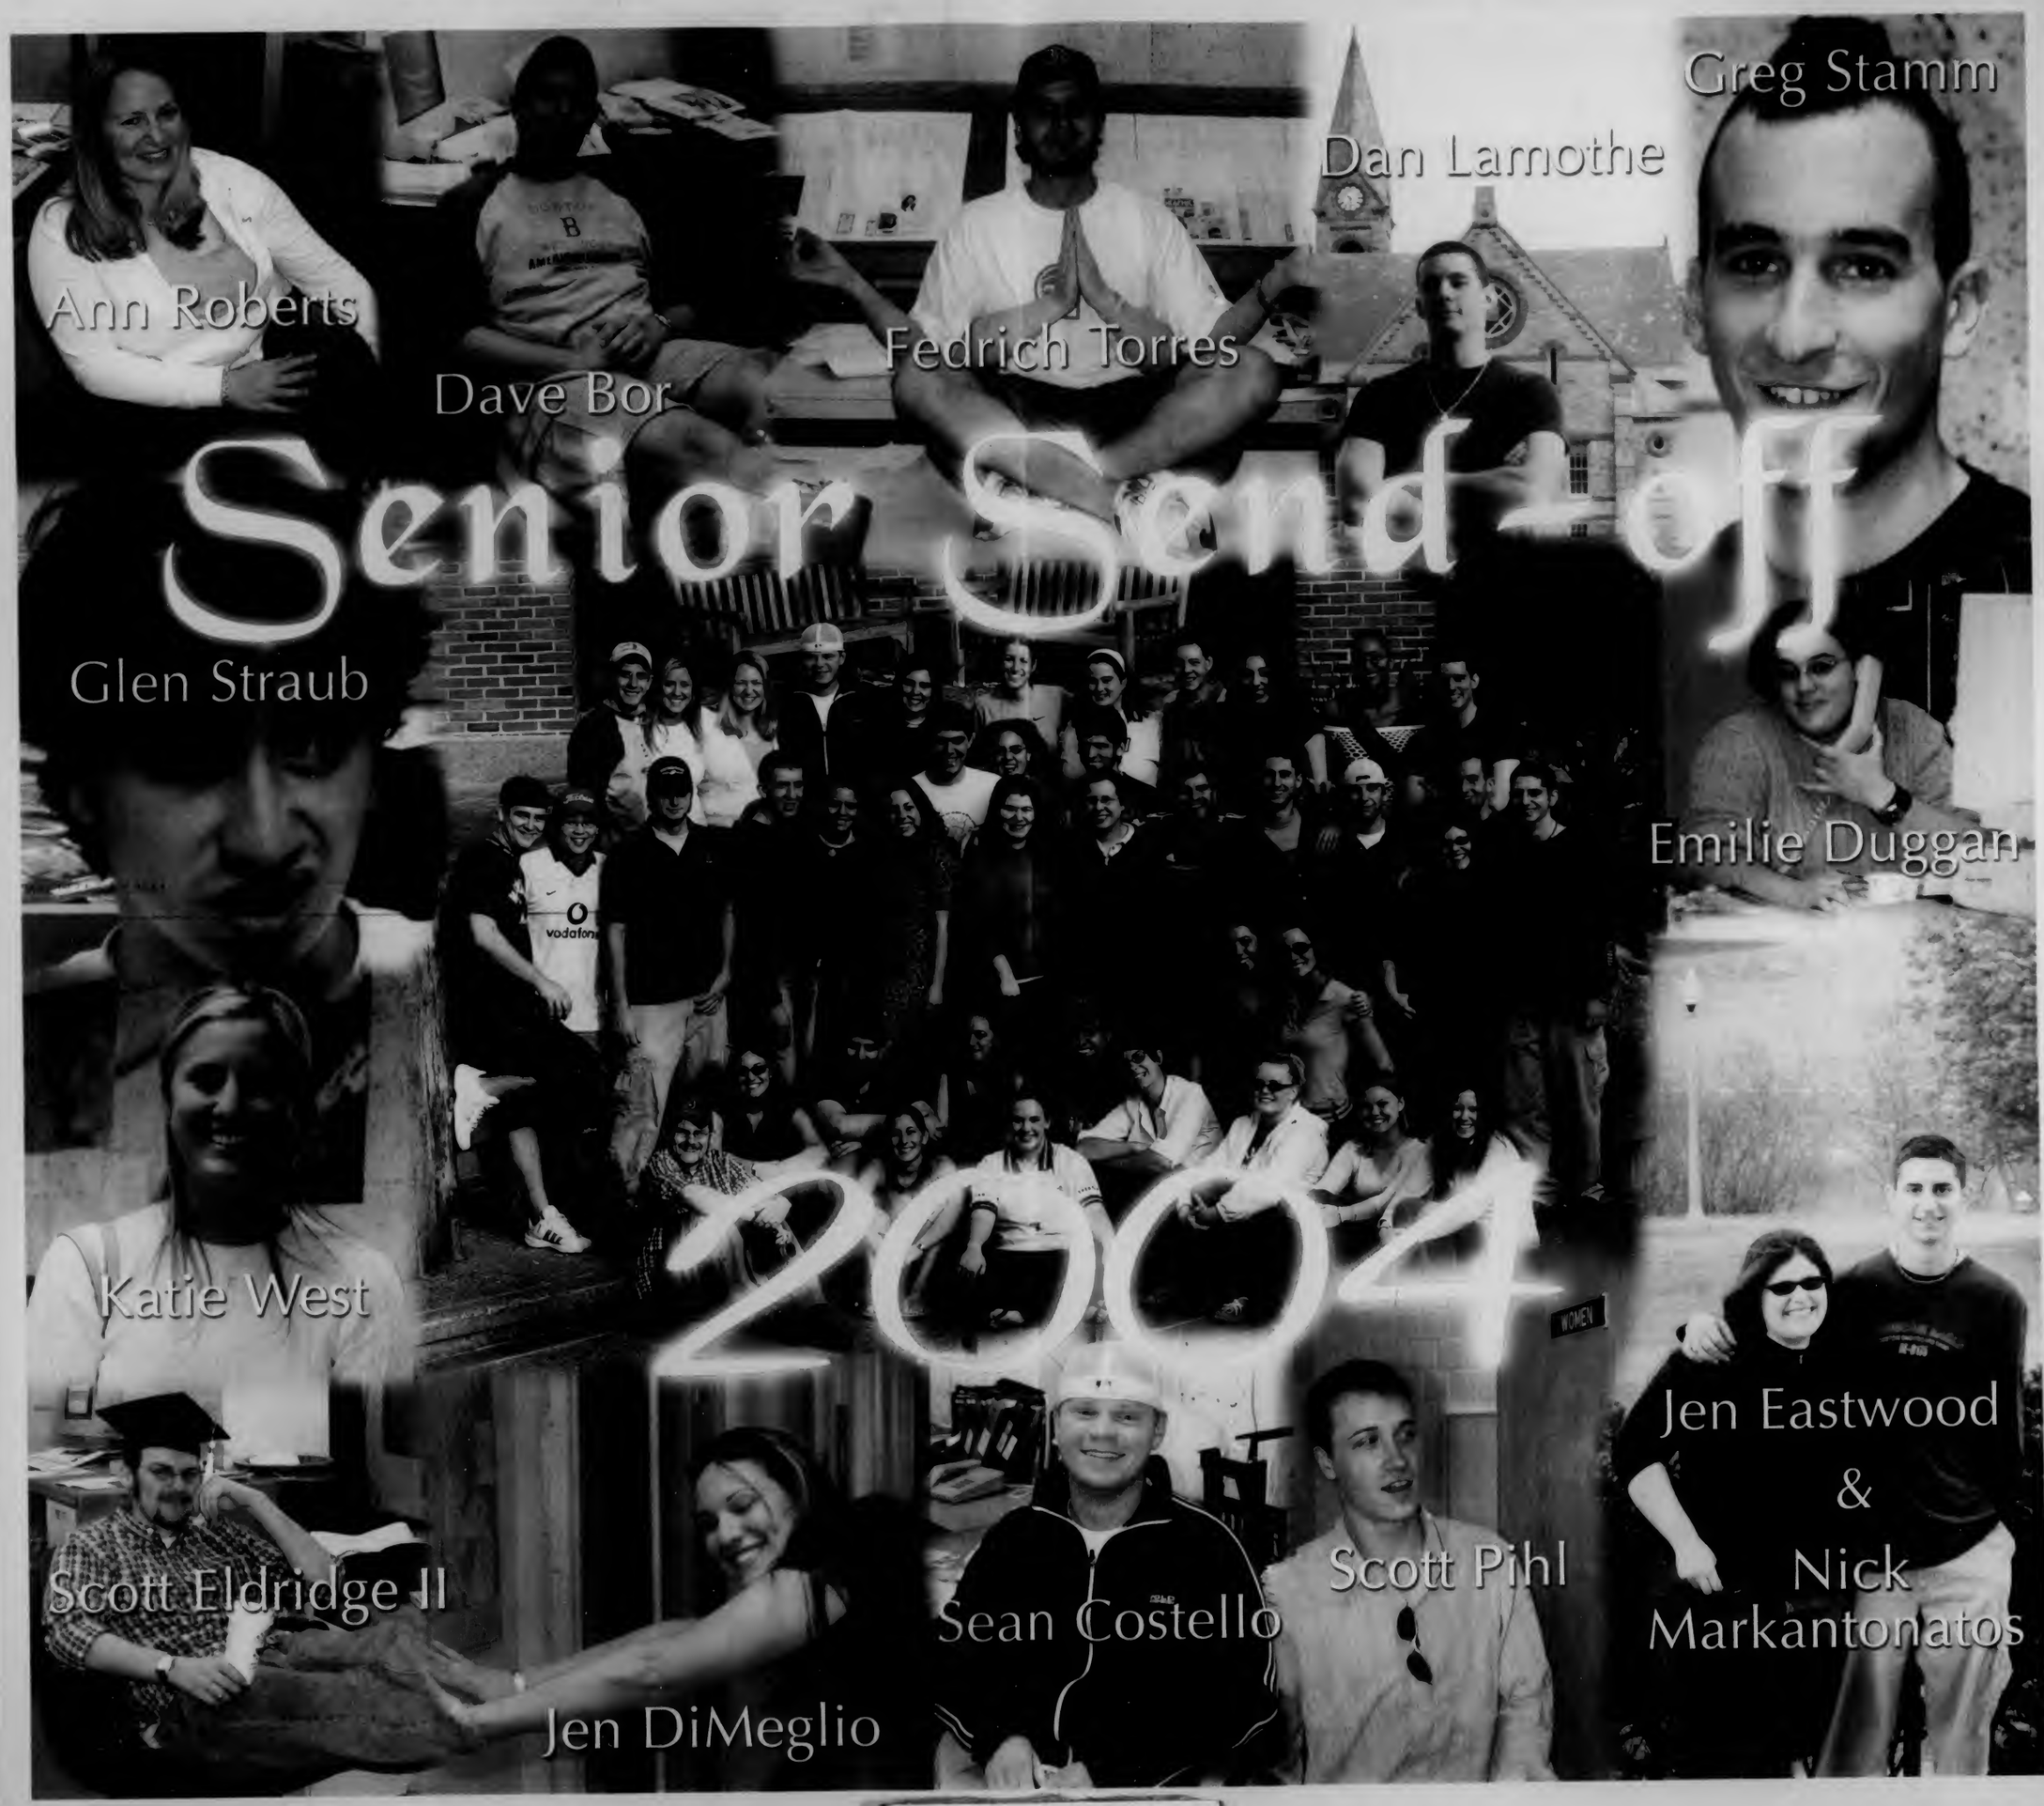
Summer Sublet

Avoid Puffton waiting list 3bed 2bath Puffton upgraded $1,375/mo June1-August31 '04 or take our lease to '05 549-5909

1-3 bedroom available in Amherst. Large living room and kitchen on bus route. Fall lease option available. 978-290-0449 Aaron.



1 Bdrm Apt. in Cliffside Call 665-1218



Live downtown this summer! Large 4BR 2-floor apt next to Amherst HS. Washer & dryer included. 5 min. to bus stop & town. ONLY $362.50 per room + utilities. Available 6/1 thru 8/15. Contact Rob: agrut@student.umass.edu/978-808-7322

2 bedrooms, fully furnished apartment, 1 full bath. Available June 1st. September 1st. Call Rachel Seyman @ 781-264-1512

Wanted

EGG DONORS NEEDED: Extremely generous compensation paid. Non-smokers ages 21-32. For more information please contact Christine or Liz at 781-769-6900 or visit www.robertmichaelsnj.com

INTENTIONAL DUPE

Collegian sports presents Misty Eyed Memories from 2003-04

MISTY EYES from page 13

and many anytimes at Bueno. You and Dapes are the only people I've found who drink nearly as much coffee as I do, and that is a brotherhood that few can crack. I love you, man, and I will be in touch.

Which brings us to the final two knuckleheads: the current and future sports editors.

Marz, you fell short of what I expected for you this year, but that's only because I put you on a huge pedestal that nobody could have lived up to. I had never seen a freshman with a combination of determination and smarts like you had, so I expected you to be above and beyond some of the greats that came before you. For that, I'm sorry, but I must say that the distance you made up over second semester has put you back on that same pedestal. You have no bounds to your potential, and I know the section will be in good hands with you.

COURTESY U.S. HOCKEY HALL OF FAME

Rob McClanahan

Mert, well, what can I say, kid. You've gone through a ton of nicknames, a ton of lessons learned and a ton of lessons not learned. But we've been through a lot together, there's no doubt about that. I was sad to see the burnout get to you as much as it did, but I was glad to see that you didn't let that burnout get in the way of that passion that was the central force of what was Andrew S. Merritt. You were a standout as a freshman, a solid number two as a sophomore, and a leader of a young ship as a junior. Next year, the newsroom is yours, and you better take care of that responsibility. Enjoy your last year in this fake bubble known as college – even if you can't wait for it to pop, you will miss some of it. I love you, man, and take care of yourself and my car next year. I'll be checking up on you from whatever random city I'm working in.

My life at the newspaper spanned generations. I'm the link between Jedd Crumb and Kevin Jarman, between Ray Geever and Obi Aduba. And next year, for the first time, Toot Cahoon will coach a game that I wasn't covering. Experiencing the greatest hockey moment of my life in the Hockey East final against Maine meant so much to me, to see my team going head-to-head with the runner-up for the National Championship was a thrill that I will never forget. My name is Matt Brady, and my life was UMass Hockey.

Thanks to everyone who ever read one of my articles. There were plenty of them for you to read. And this, this is the end. So, I'll close with the best closing line I ever wrote. "It was hockey at the Mullins Center. And it was beautiful."

JEFF HOWE, U.S.A. WINGER ROB MCCLANAHAN

Wow. Another year gone and a few credits closer to graduating. Oh, who am I kidding? I'm as close to graduating as Roger Clemens is to retiring.

Wait, you mean Clemens did retire? Oh, he didn't? Can someone check this out for me?

OK, so he retired, but then fell in love with Andy Pettitte, and now he pitches in Houston? That sounds something like A l e x Rodriguez and Derek Jeter in New York.

Speaking of New York, I heard the Knicks brought Isiah Thomas in to clean up that organization.

Great move, guys. They got the right man for the job. Rumor has it that they weren't checking the quality of his resume but the quantity.

He has folded an entire league and destroyed two franchises, but the Knicks decided to let him run their organization into the ground, too. Apparently, he and Danny Ainge are having an old fashioned cold war to see who can bring down their team first.

While I'm on the subject of running things into the ground, has anyone other than the Miami Police Department seen Ty Law lately? I certainly know Peyton Manning hasn't.

Someone should look for him in the hole that Joe Thornton disappears into when the Bruins reach the playoffs.

Getting off the subject for a minute…when did Busta Rhymes get the audacity to tell the UMass girls to start hitting the gym?

Why was Mr. Rhymes even here? Was LL Cool J unavailable? His performance was more pathetic than Major League Baseball's drug testing policy. Sorry, Barry*.

Sorry, steroids aren't anything to joke about. If you want comedy, try watching Byung-Hyun Kim pitch to a left-handed hitter in September.

Actually, forget September. Does Pawtucket's season even last that long?

So, Curt Schilling has his own Dunkin Donuts breakfast sandwich now. Does it go bad if it's left out too long? Don't look to Terry Francona for that answer.

Well, my time is up. Have a great summer. At least a better one than the Yankees do.

Go Sox.

BRENDAN HALL, U.S.A. DEFENSEMAN KEN MORROW

The amount of space I've been given this year doesn't nearly reflect the good times and exceptional experience I've gained just by being down here in the office, watching what everyone else does, trying to write to my potential. I can proudly say I've learned more down here from watching all of you guys than I have in all of my classes over my first two semesters – combined.

COURTESY U.S. HOCKEY HALL OF FAME

Ken Morrow

Merritt – Sometimes I like to think of you as a mentor, because you've taught me more than any of my professors have, and I can talk to you about anything. Thanks for everything, man. Thanks for giving me a crack at that first beat, field hockey, because I don't know what the hell I would have done if I wasn't an active member down here. You, along with everyone else down here, gave me a lot of confidence in my writing, even if you did yell at me a lot. Classical conditioning pays off. I should probably not try to diss you as much, because I owe you a lot. Oh, and I am no longer "the freshman" as of Sept. 5, 2004.

Marzelli – Rambling Wreck and Vince Wilfork, give me credit where credit is due! I can always count on you to give some snappy wisecrack. You're a great guy, have fun putting up with me again next year. Hopefully I'll be less of a goon, as long as I don't pick Rivera.

Bob – What can I say, you are a funny kid. You laid my stories out so well, I don't know what else to say. Marlins suck.

Foster – Come back soon, you crazy frat brother! Thanks for the heads up on win No. 900! Seriously though, I learned a lot from you in the short time that we covered softball together. Hope all is well at home, hopefully it won't be too long before we meet up again.

Leah – Hooker boots?!? You are so easy to get along with, it's good to have you around here. Good times covering track, even if it was a short season. Glad to see that knee's healing okay, track star. Just make sure not to forget me after you set a world record. We'll have a lot of fun in class next year. Barstow – My partner in crime, you are the man. Have fun with those internships, you're a good writer. Again, too bad we didn't spend more time on the same beat, it would have been great time. Let's go to the Blue Wall.

Howza – Have fun as assistant next year. Don't worry if you get annoyed with me at some point, that's just my s t u p i d i t y kicking in.

The beats – too many memories, not enough space.

Until next year, everyone…

MATT BARSTOW, U.S.A. DEFENSEMAN JACK O'CALLAHAN

Hey y'all, thanks for a great year. I would have like to be more objective in my writing but there weren't many bad things to say — couldn't you have lost one meet Russ?

See ya back in Lex Vegas Wyner…Big Red, you might want to try lowering your alcohol-blood content by the fall. Thanks for your endless support and advice. Merritt, hopefully you won't have to edit this gibberish too! … Paula, stop by with a tray of chocolate chip cookies sometime …

COURTESY U.S. HOCKEY HALL OF FAME

Jack O'Callahan

Brady, if I see you in one of my classes in the fall, I'm not going be happy. Seriously though, best of luck in whatever you do…

Bob, we need you next year so chill with the concussions will you? Mike, lets try not to burn this f#%*r down next fall when the Sox win the World Series.

I still don't know who sits where, who does what or how to spell coxswain, but thanks for trying Heath and Faith.

K, Yankees SUCK, I've said it and now I've written it — hopefully I'll see this on your door! Keep beasting the Henny bro.

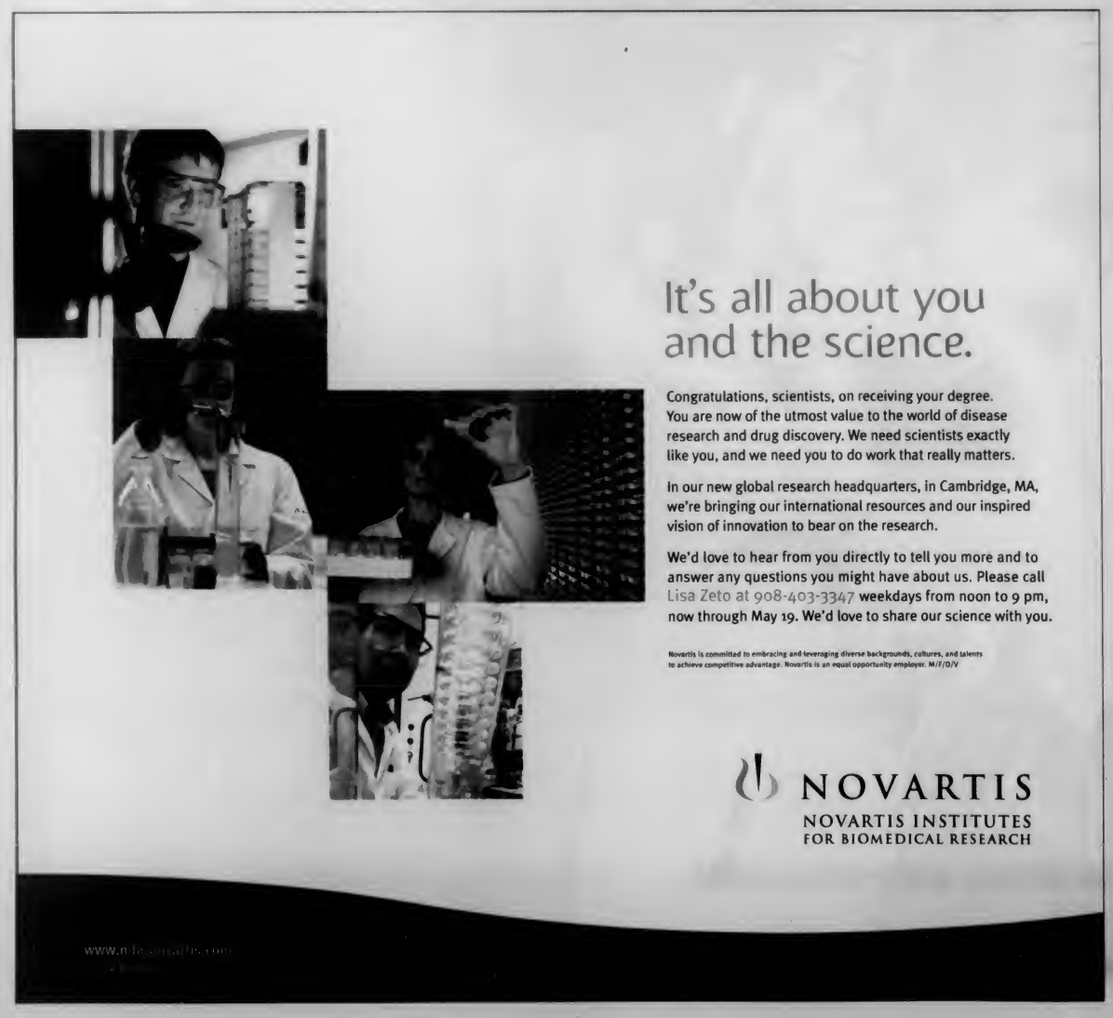
Yeah Jane, I know the last line didn't make any sense, but Frozen sure felt my pain…TJ, watch where you're throwing that thing, you almost took my head off. Tay you're the best shoes partner around…when you're not off skiing. Potzie you crazy man, keep rolling along Disco style and don't ever loose the fro. Vaz—admit it, we all know you're the messy one.

This year was a blast-hopefully I'll be off academic probation in time to write again in the fall

GLEN STRAUB, FORMER ASSISTANT SPORTS EDITOR, U.S.S.R. HEAD COACH VIKTOR TIKHONOV

I tend to abide by the weary cliché that says you can't forget your roots and in the case of working at The Collegian, the sports section — or spizzy as some of us call it — is my roots. While this year, I blindly jumped over to the opposite side of the newsroom to fulfill another one of my aspirations, music writing, sports writing and the Collegian sports department was and continues be an integral part of my journalism life. I was unable to contribute to the section as much as I wanted to this year but it was OK because there was an amazing team running the ship. So to give respect to my roots, here is my misty eyes…

Merritt: One of the craziest things that I observed on my way back to the paper after South Africa was your transformation. I remember when you slept through your interview with Marnie. Now you are a bona fide leader of the newsroom. It would have been fun working together on the section, but it was better working on the paper with you as a whole.



Marz: Keeping it real on the sports front, never getting stressed is the way to be. Your raw knowledge of the games we cover is beyond respectable. And your mentality of understanding that it's all of this work is for a good time is what sports always needs. Sorry I left you all to yourself with that horrendous things they call the UMass men's basketball team.

Bob: It's tough being the guy who doesn't like hockey, doesn't like New England Sports and the new guy on the block in the section. I know how it is. Hang in there, Eli and the Giants in 2008 at a Super Bowl in Giants Stadium.

Brades: It is great see one of the originals, somebody who taught me so much, go on to bigger and better things. I hope to hear you along side Al Michaels soon.

ADDITIONAL MEMBERS OR FORMER MEMBERS OF THE COLLEGIAN SPORTS DEPARTMENT:

-TODD FOSTER, U.S.S.R. GOALTENDER VLADISLAV TRETIAK
-LEAH WYNER, U.S.S.R. WINGER VALERI KHARLAMOV
-DAN DUGGAN, U.S.S.R. CENTER VLADIMIR PETROV
-PAULA ADEN, U.S.S.R. WINGER BORIS MIKHAILOV
-TIM RYAN, U.S.S.R. DEFENSEMAN VIACHESLAV FETISOV
-BECKY HOROWITZ, U.S.S.R. DEFENSEMAN VLADIMIR LUTCHENKO

Excellent Starting Pay

Apply On Line Nationwide:

SummerWorkNow.com/nei

VECTOR

If phone number is busy, call back!

Connecticut		New York Cont.
Brookfield / Waterbury	203-775-0158	Buffalo N.	716-835-9008
Eastern CT	860-859-3425	Buffalo Southtowns	716-668-4786
Fairfield / Norwalk	203-847-3157	Oneonta	607-432-2737
Hartford / Tolland	860-243-5623	Plattsburgh	518-735-4440
Franklin County	413-772-2666	Rochester Area	585-321-9865
Martha's Vineyard	508-696-8633	Saratoga	518-587-7020
Middlesex County	860-704-0732	Syracuse Area	315-437-4297
New Haven County	203-288-0552	Utica/Rome	315-792-4042
		Lower Westchester	914-472-1922
Maine		Upper Westchester/Putnam Co	914-741-1090
Portland/Biddeford/Brunswick	207-883-6653	New York City Area
York/Berwick/Sanford	603-740-0397	Nassau County	516-221-3790
Augusta/Lewiston/Bangor	207-622-5128	Flushing	718-961-5813
		Manhattan	212-563-4467
Massachusetts		Brooklyn	718-331-8720
Berkshire County	413-442-9599	North Shore Suffolk	631-382-4716
Cape Cod	508-771-1580	South Shore Suffolk	631-218-8882
Lawrence	603-893-7272	Staten Island	718-980-6988
Worcester/Shrewsbury/Milford	508-791-5888
Springfield/Amherst	413-532-0846	Pennsylvania
Boston Area:		Altoona/State College	814-943-8820
Andover/Reading/North Shore	978-762-4442	Berks County	610-372-8851
Attleboro/Dartmouth/Taunton	508-993-8885	Bucks County	215-675-3235
Cambridge/Somerville	617-621-1119	Chester County	610-719-0105
Chelmsford/Fitchburg/Tewksbury	978-692-8541	Delaware County	610-543-7052
Jamaica Plain/Back Bay/Fenway	617-323-3456	Erie	814-835-6600
Malden/Charlestown/Revere	781-333-3266	Harrisburg East Shore	717-986-0201
Newburyport/Beverly/Topsfield	978-739-9304	Harrisburg West Shore	717-731-8911
Norwood/Walpole/Franklin	781-255-7171	Jenkintown/Abington	215-884-6364
Quincy/Canton/Weymouth	781-344-3495	Lancaster County	717-560-9152
South Shore/Plymouth County	781-837-6789	Lebanon County	717-272-3367
Waltham/Newton/Metrowest	781-890-7667	Lehigh Valley	610-432-5834
		Lewisburg	570-522-0179
New Hampshire		Monroeville	412-373-3461
Lebanon /Claremont	603-443-5588	Monroe/Pike County	570-422-1181
Manchester/Nashua/Concord	603-625-9500	Montgomery County	610-630-3811
Seacoast, Portsmouth, Dover	603-740-0397	Moon	412-424-0093
Salem/Derry	603-893-7272	Northeast Philadelphia	215-464-8440
		Pittsburgh N Hills	724-933-3354
New Jersey		Pittsburgh S Hills	412-440-0234
Brick/Toms River/Point Pleasant	732-451-9797	Roxborough/Manayunk	215-482-2890
Bridgewater/Scotch Plains/Clinton	908-203-9966	Schuykill/Carbon County	570-450-7922
Camden/Burlington County	856-810-8072	Scranton	570-961-5464
Clifton/Montclair/Wayne	973-472-1171	Westmoreland County	724-838-8192
Eatontown/Englishtown/Belmar	732-544-1505	Wilkes-Barre	570-331-2707
Edison/Woodbridge/E. Brunswick/Clark	732-321-1055	York County	717-718-1470
Gloucester/Salem County	856-228-9996
Newton/Hackettstown/West Milford	973-729-8330	Rhode Island
Paramus/Secaucus/Westwood	201-291-9090	Newport	401-683-6688
Parsippany/Short Hills/Fairfield	973-541-0122	Providence / South County	401-575-2238
Princeton/Cranbury/West Windsor	609-671-1400
		Vermont
New York		Burlington/Montpelier/Middlebury	802-985-9850
Albany/Capitol Region	518-383-6544	White River Jct./Rutland/Brattleboro	802-295-1122
Binghamton/Broome Co.	607-748-4858

Apply Online at www.SummerWorkNow.com/nei

Taking a semester abroad: What's your adventure?
ARTS & LIVING, PAGE 6

A welcome message from The Collegian
EDITORIAL/OPINION, PAGE 5

A look back at UMass sports in 2003-04
SPORTS, PAGE 12

The Daily Collegian

SUMMER ORIENTATION 2004 — NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY • EST. 1890 — VOLUME CXIV ISSUE 140

Bustamante, Murphy sworn in

SGA budget passed

By MELISSA BLANKSTEEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Eduardo Bustamante won as Student Government Association President in last week's special elections with a 72 percent majority. His running mate Matt Murphy won the Student Trustee position with 70.9 percent.

"To sum it up, I'm really optimistic. I'm hopeful, and I'm really excited," Bustamante said.

Steve Hoeschele, chancellor of elections, said that 3,053 or one-sixth of the students voted last week. This is an increase from the 2,756 who voted in last month's election, in which Bustamante then received a 38.2 percent majority.

See SGA on page 3

Student Trustee Matt Murphy (left) and SGA President Eduardo Bustamante addresses a small crowd in March.

UMass marchers defend right to choose in D.C.

Women rally in Washington, D.C. at the March for Women's Lives on April 25, 2004. Over one million people, according to estimates, attended the rally.

By FERRON SALNIKER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

WASHINGTON — They came in packed buses from across the nation. Some wore pink from head to toe, while others wore T-shirts with self-designed slogans. Most carried purple and yellow signs, and recited cheers until their voices grew hoarse. All, almost one million, marched through the nation's capital yesterday for the March for Women's Lives.

Thousands of students, organizers, politicians, actors and others from the United States and nearly 60 other countries marched through Washington in an effort to send a message to President Bush and conservative politicians: The choice of an abortion and equal access to birth control and health care is a basic human right.

Before the march began, the rally on the National Mall stretched back about one mile. The group walked, chanting and singing, passing the Washington Monument and later heading down Pennsylvania Avenue in the direction of the White House.

Young people, in particular college students, made up what organizers said was one third of the crowd. Almost 300 colleges sent buses to the march. Among those college students were hundreds of Five College students.

"I'm here for all my friends who couldn't be here," said Anna Graseck, a Smith College student. "I'm marching so there are no back-alley abortions in my lifetime."

Graseck was joined by almost 200 Smith College students.

"Two hundred from Smith College?" said an elderly woman, as the group marched forward, displaying their banner and cheering. "That's amazing!"

Lauren Robertson and Brittany Fosbrook, sophomores at Mount Holyoke College, drove to the District of Columbia separately from the rest of the 150 Mount Holyoke students.

"I'm here in particular for all people to unite," said Fosbrook. "To get in the capital's face."

"This point of view is a majority," said Robertson.

About 50 students from the University of Massachusetts took the trip to show their solidarity.

"I think abortion rights are really under fire," Christine Ruthoski, co-moderator of UMass VOX, Students for Choice, told The Massachusetts' Daily Collegian before the march. "And with this administration, they are close to being lost."

Marchers like Ruthoski believe abor-

See MARCH on page 4

Rally celebrates gay marriage law

Gina Smith and Heidi Norton of Northampton, left, and Gloria Bailey and Linda Davies of Orleans, stand together during a news conference on Nov. 17, 2003.

JULIE O'DONNELL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students rallied November 18, 2003, in celebration of the ruling that allows same-sex marriages in Massachusetts at Northampton's City Hall, singing "Everything Possible" by Fred Small, emphasizing the lyrics, "some women love women, some men love men, today we're reaching the end of everything for you."

The Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court ruled that day that banning gay marriage is unconstitutional. Chief Justice Margaret Marshall declared that an individual's civil rights should not be taken away simply because he or she wants to marry someone of the same sex.

Massachusetts, which is the first state to pass same-sex marriages, ruled the ban unconstitutional on a 4-3 vote. Although there were cheers from gay couples, President Bush and Gov. Romney denounced the ruling, stating that marriage is an institution between a man and a woman.

Hundreds gathered in Northampton in a joyful celebration of the ruling and shouted, "Happy gay marriage day!"

Several people spoke at the rally, including Heidi Norton and her partner Gena Smith, who are panelists and served as a plaintiff couple for the case in Boston today. Norton and Smith were also present for the ruling.

"Celebrate tonight, but to not give up the fight because there is still a lot of work to be done. Let's keep this on the front burner and don't move back one inch!"

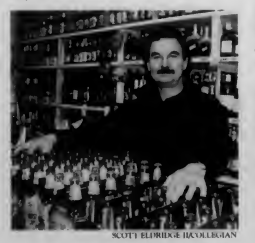
The two thanked supporters and shouted, "We're going to win!" Avery, Smith and Norton's young child said, "This is a very special day and I am very proud of my Mommy and Mom for helping."

Claire Higgens, Northampton town mayor, told supporters that the Pioneer Valley is a community of acceptance, concerning people who are gay, straight, rich or poor.

"We are the city of pioneers," she said.

See RALLY on page 4

Amherst reacts to legal liquor sales on Sundays



By ANDREA DICKEY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

As students moved back to the Pioneer Valley on January 25, they may have noticed that area liquor stores were open for business. The blue law that prohibited liquor sales on Sundays has been overturned by the state legislature, allowing stores to open for Sunday business.

Students will no longer have to make the trip to Montague or other towns within the 10-mile radius of the Vermont border to by liquor on Sundays. Liquor stores in Amherst, Hadley and Northampton are now at liberty to open from noon until 11 p.m.

The blue law was abandoned after business owners argued that it was unfair to restrict liquor stores when other retailers were allowed to operate on Sundays. In Mass. cities and towns within 10 miles of New Hampshire and Vermont, Sunday sales were already allowed between Thanksgiving and New Year's Day. The two states permit Sunday sales, and can legally reduce alcohol to a sale price, which targets Massachusetts' consumers. Many owners of liquor stores that will stay open on Sundays have mixed feelings about the new law.

"I think it's positive, as a business owner," said Andrew Morrison, the owner of the Liquors 44 chain. "On a personal note, I don't like it. It was my only day off."

SCOTT ELDRIDGE II/COLLEGIAN

Jerry Russell is the co-owner of Russell Package Store, now open on Sundays.

Morrison thinks it will be good to be open on Sundays, especially around holidays and graduation. One extra benefit Morrison has being open on Sundays is having one of his stores located next to the Stop and Shop Supermarket in Hadley, where Sundays are the second busiest shopping day of the week. But in the short-term, Morrison said the increased liquor sales have benefitted all of his stores.

"We had a very good Sunday, " Morrison said. "Our Northampton store did double the business [compared to last Sunday]." He also said that he didn't lose any business on the previous Saturday or the following Monday this past week.

Not all liquor store owners have shared Morrison's increased amount of customers on Sundays.

"This past Sunday was the first one we were open. It would have been just as well to stay closed," said Bill Russell, owner of Russell's Package Store in Amherst. He said that Patrons came in "dribbles and drabs."

He also mentioned that there will be pressure to remain open on Sundays to compete with other liquor stores, even if sales aren't high.

"It's going to have to be conditioned over time. Sunday business is going to take a little business away from Friday and Saturday," said Russell. "Everybody's only got so much money."

Russell right now is concerned with minimizing his loss of money. He said Stores have to pay time and half to their Sunday employees, as well as consider the overhead expenses of being open for business.

"It's like starting a business all over," he said.

Russell doesn't anticipate much extra business because in his experience, most people don't buy alcohol on Sundays.

"Sunday isn't really a party day," he said. " Students have to get their studying done some time."

Alcohol and underage drinking continue to be controversial issues on the UMass campus with the recent Southwest riots, " Hobart Hoedown" and "Spring Week." This past year, per recommenda-

See LIQUORS on page 4

UMass hosts Democratic convention

Delegates to the Massachusetts Democratic state convention cheer a speaker at the Mullins Center in Amherst.

By MELISSA BLANKSTEEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts hosted the Massachusetts Democratic Convention the night of May 7 and during the day on May 8.

Speakers included UMass Chancellor John V. Lombardi, Amherst Representative Stan Rosenberg, Robert Haynes, the president of the Massachusetts chapter of the AFL-CIO Union, and Cameron Kerry, Sen. John Kerry's brother.

According to Jane Lane, the communications director of the Massachusetts Democratic Party, many members of the legislature and many people who the Party invited to speak on stage were UMass alumni.

"We are so proud to be here. It's like family to be back," Lane said.

The convention was held on Friday in the Campus Center and then on Saturday at the Mullins Center. According to Lane, 2,500 delegates from towns

See DEMOCRATS on page 4

Student survives 32-foot fall

By DAN LAMOTHE AND ERIKA LOVLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

He's endured two broken elbows, two broken wrists, a broken kneecap, a jaw wired shut, a liquid diet, and multiple surgeries to repair his injuries.

He's weathered more than two weeks at UMass Medical Center in Worcester, dozens of miles away from his friends at the University of Massachusetts and hundreds of miles from his home in Fairfax, Va.

His mother says he sleeps until 3 or 4 p.m. some days, and his brother says he is lucky to be alive.

Kunal Malhotra, an 18-year-old UMass freshman, survived a 32-foot drop from a window ledge at MacKimmie Hall shortly after midnight on Dec. 6. He's been healing from his injuries ever since.

As the recovery process continues, however, Malhotra says he has never lost site of the upbeat outlook he has always had on life.

"I'm a little more relaxed," he said via telephone interview with The Massachusetts Daily Collegian from his home in Fairfax. "I try to take things more day by day and be a little more careful."

COURTESY EMILY TRAYERS

Kunal Malhotra, left, and Mike Forcobar, a friend from Virginia, pose for a photo during Thanksgiving break in 2003.

Witnesses say Malhotra stood on a radiator in the third floor men's bathroom before stepping out onto the ledge, according to Patrick Archbald, deputy chief of UMass Police. With the encouragement of friends, he stepped back in briefly, but chose to go back out onto the ledge.

Archbald said it appears Malhotra then inched along the ledge in an attempt to communicate through a

See MALHOTRA on page 3

EVERYTHING YOU NEED FOR SCHOOL.
EXCEPT A BIGGER BRAIN.

Books, apparel, supplies and more. We've got it all.

University of Massachusetts
UMASS AMHERST
UNIVERSITY STORE
Amherst Campus Center
Phone: (413)545-2619
Fax: (413)545-4396

efollett.com
ONLINE. ON CAMPUS.

2004-05 Student Government Association leaders sworn in

Patrick Higgins is Speaker of the Senate.

Eduardo Bustamante is president.

Matthew Murphey is Student Trustee.

SGA from page 1

Hoeschele also said that 82 graduate students voted for trustee; 78 of their votes went to Murphy. In March, only 26 voted in total.

Bustamante said he attributed the increase of student voters to a concern about the last elections, which encouraged students to talk.

"A big thank you to everyone who put in a lot of hard work. I have a real genuine hope to do things for the student body," Bustamante said. "...We are all working together."

All of the referendum questions passed except for number two, which asked students if they supported the elimination of the Commonwealth College honors program. Seventeen percent voted to eliminate it.

Question one passed with the largest majority of 78 percent voting in favor of the Collegiate Readership Program that brings the New York Times, USA Today and Boston Globe to campus.

> "I have a real genuine hope to do things for the student body. We are all working together."
> -Eduardo Bustamante

There were some changes in the results of the Area Governor race. In this turn, Ahmed Nasef won Northeast, Aimee Falardeau won Southwest, Sanam Hakim won Orchard Hill, Stacy Bernadeau won Central, and Jane Nwasar won Sylvan. Dan McCool and Bill Surran tied for Commuter Governor.

Hoeschele said that this election process itself went smoother.

"The actual logistical end of it was a lot easier," Hoeschele said, despite it taking three days to count the results. He contributed the time to having five referendum questions on the ballot that were not there before.

He said he also had some "professional" help from the Dean of Students Office, Student Legal Services and the Campus Activities Center to help guarantee that there were two people at each polling station. He also said they did not help in counting the ballots.

Student rehabs severe injuries at Virginia home window with people in a nearby room.

MALHOTRA from page 1

Then he fell.

Many of the details from that evening remain unclear - even, Malhotra says, for himself.

"As far as the particulars of the accident, I really don't remember," he said. "I don't remember anything."

Archbald said police found him on the ground with labored breathing, obvious injuries to his head and limbs, and apparent broken bones. Malhotra was taken by Amherst Fire Department ambulance to Baystate Medical Center in Springfield, then shortly thereafter to UMass Medical Center.

Inside MacKimmie, friends gathered in the room that Malhotra was trying to communicate with took things hard.

"With his absence in such a sudden manner, kids were really quiet," said Chris Erickson, a UMass student who lived down the hall from Malhotra on the 22nd floor of John Adams Tower.

Erickson says he received a call from Malhotra sometime before the accident inviting him to come over, but that he had to decline because he had a paper to write.

"I got a call about 25 minutes later saying he got taken away in an ambulance," he said.

Over the next few days, word traveled, and many of Malhotra's friends found out what happened through word of mouth.

Seamus Brennan, another friend from John Adams Tower, says he too received an invite from Malhotra before the incident, but he fell asleep and they didn't meet up. In the morning, he says he heard someone fell at breakfast, but didn't know who it was and made fun of it. After breakfast, as he was making his way up the four floors to visit Malhotra, he ran into Erickson, who gave him the news.

"Those were rough days," Brennan said. "I didn't really eat or sleep too well. I didn't feel like doing anything. I thought maybe I could have stopped it from happening [if I had been there]."

Malhotra, meanwhile, spent 18 days at UMass Medical Center - a stay that included 10 days unconscious and at least three or four roommates, he says.

"I was never really emotionally down," he said. "I still had my same upbeat look on life, so I tried to joke around and stay pretty joyful.

It remains uncertain, but Malhotra hopes to return to UMass next year.

"There are still a lot of things to be worked out, but I can walk pretty easily now," Malhotra said. "Sports are going to be a number of months with rehab, that's going to take some time. So in the meantime I'm just biding my time - reading, watching TV, movies, stuff like that."

Malhotra hopes to return to his intramural football team, as well as his friends and work as a political science major.

NEWS WRITERS WANTED
FOR FALL 2004
SEMESTER
CONTACT ERIKA
BY EMAIL
news@dailycollegian.com

The Mercantile Clothing
Books Gifts Cards Toys
Earrings INCENSE
SALE 25-50% OFF Selected Clothing
Rings Bracelets Chains
Tapestries
Hours 10 am-6pm Th-Fri 9pm Sun 12-6
Amherst-11 E.Pleasant-Carriage Shops
Northampton-108Main St.

Panda East
熊猫
Fine Chinese & Japanese Cuisine
103 North Pleasant St. Amherst, MA
Voted best Chinese food by UMass students!
Open Hours:
Mon - Thur: 11:30am - 10:00pm
Fri & Sat: 11:30am - 11:00pm
Sunday: 12pm-10pm
Delivery: 413.549.0077
Telephone: 413.256.8923
413.256.8924
Chinese Luncheon Specials
Served Mon thru Sun : 11:30 am to 3.00 pm
L1. Chicken w. Broccoli....$5.25
L2. Chicken w. Cashew Nuts....$5.25
L3. Chicken w. Mixed Vegs....$5.25
L4. Sweet & Sour Chicken....$5.25
L5. Curry Chicken....$5.25
L6. Chicken w. Garlic Sauce....$5.25
L7. Ginger Chicken w. String Beans....$5.25
L8. Express Chicken....$5.50
L9. Ma-La Chicken....$5.50
L10. House Special Chicken....$6.50
Sushi Maki Rolls
Veggie Maki (Vegetable) $3.95
Kappa Maki (Cucumber) $2.95
Oshinko Maki (Japanese Pickle) $2.95
Avocado Maki $2.95
Asparagus Maki $2.95
Nato Maki (Fermented Soy Beans) $3.50
Tekka Maki (Tuna) $3.95
California Maki (Crab Meat, Avocado & Cucumber) $3.95
Alaska (Salmon, Avocado & Cucumber) $4.25
Spicy Tuna (Tuna & Cucumber in Spicy Sauce) $4.50
Spider Roll (Fried Softshell Crab & Onion in Cream Sauce) $6.95

THE OFFICIAL COLLEGE LAUNDRY SERVICE
Laundry delivery to your dorm
Important Dates
August 1st
Sign-up Deadline
(4000 STUDENT MAX)
September 1st
Laundry Plans Begin
THOUSANDS OF SATISFIED STUDENTS!
DIRTY BUSINESS LAUNDRY DELIVERY SERVICE
THAT'S THE DIRTY BUSINESS WAY!
Schools we service:
UMASS AMHERST AMHERST COLLEGE SMITH COLLEGE MT HOLYOKE COLLEGE STUDENT LAUNDRY PLANS
Our plans cover you for the ENTIRE Semester. This means always having clean clothes and never worrying if you have enough money each week.
PLAN 1 $10.99 a week
10 lbs a week, for 16 weeks
PLAN 2 $15.81 a week
15 lbs a week, for 16 weeks
PLAN 3 $19.94 a week
20 lbs a week, for 16 weeks
PLAN 4 $23.37 a week
25 lbs a week, for 16 weeks
What do PARENTS & STUDENTS say about Dirty Business?
"My experience with Dirty Business has been fantastic. They are extremely reliable, exceptionally accommodating, and always provide friendly service week after week. I wish I would have heard about them freshman year.
-George Sotiropoulos, -2 year Customer
"My parents really appreciated me not bringing my clothes home to NJ, plus you ironed all of my shirts. Thanks again for everything"
-Lindsey, Umass Freshman
"My daughter's biggest worry coming to college was allocating enough time to complete all of her work and chores. Dirty Business has really helped her out."
-Dr. Gray, Father of Umass Junior
"For the price of a pizza, our son has more study time & clean clothes week after week, thanks."
-Mrs. Adams, Parent of Umass Sophmore
1-866-WASH-ME-1
1-866-927-4631
www.dirtydelivery.com
Sign-up over the phone or online!

Stores adjust to sales on Sunday

LIQUORS from page 1

tion of the Chancellor's Task Force on the Prevention of Alcohol Abuse, Greek residences are no longer campus-approved housing for freshmen.

Diane Fedorchak, a health educator at University Health Services is concerned that alcohol related incidents might now increase on Sundays.

"When you increase access, you're going to increase the use," she said.

Although it's too early to know, Fedorchak said it will be intriguing to see how Sunday alcohol sales play out.

"It will also be interesting to see if there is a lack of productivity on Mondays," she said.

March for women's rights draws one million supporters

RALLY from page 1

tion rights are being weakened through federal and state restrictions and will be at risk if Bush is elected for a second term.

According to the Associated Press, while police estimated that the march joined together between 500,000 and 800,000 people, actress Janeane Garofalo had a different number.

"We've made history with 1,001,500 marchers," she told the crowd after the march. Many organizers said the march was the largest in the nation's history.

Garofalo, a leading comedian, was only one among several celebrities at the march. Ana Gasteyer, a Saturday Night Live comedienne, brought her toddler daughter on stage.

"Francis has recently learned the power of 'no,' " she said referring to her daughter, and turned to ask Francis several questions. "Do you think we should re-elect Bush?"

The crowd, and her daughter yelled an enthusiastic no.

"We are here to ask our government do the right thing," she said. "We have a very serious cause. We are marching for our lives and our daughters' lives."

Familiar faces to the pro-choice movement and actresses Whoopi Goldberg, Susan Sarandon and Cybill Shepherd were also participants.

Hundreds of politicians, including former Democratic presidential candidate Howard Dean and Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton (D-NY), hit the pavement and enthused the crowd. Several congressional representatives from New York, California, Arizona, Illinois, Texas and Wisconsin spoke to the crowd.

"We are women, we are strong, and we shall not be moved," shouted Shiela Jackson, a representative from Texas.

The representatives stood in front of 57 international flags. Several international groups were in attendance asserting that damage from Bush's policies is spreading beyond U.S. shores, through measures such as the ban on federal money for family-planning groups that promote or perform abortions abroad.

Over 3,000 delegates attend convention in Mullins Center across the state had prepaid to come, and another 1,000 registered that day.

DEMOCRATS from page 1

After the speeches were over, Phil Johnston, chairman of the Massachusetts Democratic Party, said that he loves UMass.

"We come often, as often as we can," he said.

He is an alumnus of UMass and met his wife in a Spanish class. His son is also a graduate.

Johnston said his aides told him that the people at UMass ran the convention as smoothly as anywhere they have been. He hopes to bring it back to UMass every year.

"As long as I'm chairman of the party, we're coming to UMass," he said.

Johnston said he believes this kind of publicity helps UMass. Lombardi agreed in an email.

"It is always good for our legislators to see what their support makes possible, so when they gather on our campus it provides a graphic demonstration of the breadth and depth of the work accomplished here by students, faculty, and staff," Lombardi wrote.

UMass students were also involved in this year's convention. Chelsea C. Halpine, president of the University Democrats, said her group recruited 30 volunteers to help out at the convention. They stood around campus helping to direct all the visitors.

Patrick MacLeod, vice president of the University Democrats, was excited for it to be held outside of Boston.

"It's the most important political event in the state and for it to happen in Western Massachusetts is great," he said. "It's a great opportunity for the school."

Locals rally for gay rights

RALLY from page 1

"Let's not take the easy way out."

A sign held by J. Mary Sorrell and her wife Elizabeth Anema read, "Married July 1, 2003 in Canada, legally recognized Nov. 18, 2003."

According to Ellen Story, state representative for the Pioneer Valley, if a couple was married legally somewhere outside the U.S., Massachusetts now has the legal obligation to recognize the couple as married.

Jennifer Levi, the co-council of the case, said, "We will no longer be excluded. All are protected, we all go forward in the civil rights movement, or not at all."

The University of Massachusetts Pride Alliance group also attended the rally. Dan Pomeray, the treasurer of Pride, said he was "wicked excited" but also, "very apprehensive about what's going to happen." He was concerned about the comments by Gov. Mitt Romney and felt that anything could happen.

"This is a step in the right direction and we need to continue with that momentum now and certainly not go backwards."

Vice president Lyndsy Bellliveau-Byam was also concerned about Gov. Romney vetoing the ruling, but was overall excited. Julie Callan, a Pride member, was surprised at the ruling because of the recent political backlash by Gov. Romney and President Bush.

"I am expecting something bad to happen. It's too good to be true."

Pride president Emily Rimmer agreed that this is the first time that any member of Pride has seen a positive rally about the rights of gays and lesbians.

Many at the rally rejoiced at the moment but knew that there was a strenuous battle ahead to actually win the larger conflict. Applause broke out in UMass classrooms yesterday, but there are 180 days left for the legislature to enforce this ruling.

Postal Connections™
375 COLLEGE ST (RT 9 & SOUTHEAST ST)
M-F 9-6, SAT 9-3
413-253-2311
WWW.POSTALCONNECTIONS.COM/165/
STUDENTS, GET 10% OFF UPS/FEDEX SHIPPING W/VALID STUDENT ID
WHY RENT A MAILBOX?
-SECURE ADDRESS-
-FREE FAX RECEIVING-
-PACKAGE ACCEPTANCE FROM ALL CARRIERS-SAME ADDRESS THROUGH 4 YEARS OF COLLEGE-•LAMINATING
•PHONE CARDS
•CYBER STATION
•WESTERN UNION
•NOTARY SERVICE
•CUSTOM PACKING
•PASSPORT PHOTOS
COLOR & B/W COPIES

UMASS AMHERST STUDENT LEGAL SERVICES OFFICE
Helping students protect their rights for over 30 years
Legal Advice, Referrals, Representation and Counseling for Amherst Students
Student & Worker Rights, Family & Criminal Law, Landlord/Tenant & Consumer Disputes
Call 545-1995 or stop in at 922 Campus Center

Choose your deal!
Wednesdays Are Wild — Medium 1-Topping Pizza $3.99 — Carry Out Only. Extra Toppings $1.00. Deep Dish Extra. Coupon Expires
Pizza & Bread — 1 1-Topping Pizza & Your Choice of Breadsticks $9.99 Medium $12.99 Large — Add Buffalo Wings or Chicken Kickers For $5.99. Deep Dish Extra. Coupon Expires
Family Meal — 1 X-Large 2-Topping Pizza, 1 Order of Buffalo Wings or Kickers, 1 Order of Breadsticks & a 2-Liter of Coke® $19.99 — Extra Toppings $1.50. Deep Dish Extra. Coupon Expires
Pizza & Coke® — 1 1-Topping Pizza & Coke® $9.99 Medium 2 12-Oz. Cokes® $12.99 Large 2-Liter Coke® — Extra Toppings $1.25. Add Buffalo Wings or Chicken Kickers For $5.99. Deep Dish Extra. Coupon Expires
Carry Out Special — Buy a Pizza at Regular Price & Get a 2nd Pizza For $2.99 or FREE 2-Liter of Coke® — 2nd Pizza Must Be of Equal or Lesser Value. Deep Dish Extra. Coupon Expires
Lunch Special — 1 1-Topping Pizza & Your Choice of Breadsticks or Coke® $7.99 Medium $9.99 Large — Extra Toppings Medium $1.00, Large $1.25. Deep Dish Extra. Coupon Expires
Pizza & Chicken — 1 1-Topping Pizza, Buffalo Wings or Domino's Pizza Buffalo Chicken Kickers® $11.99 Medium $14.99 Large — Add Any Breadsticks For $2.99. Extra Toppings Medium $1.00, Large $1.25. Deep Dish Extra. Coupon Expires
Mon., Tues. & Wed — Buy Any Pizza & Choose 1 FREE Wings, Domino's Pizza Buffalo Chicken Kickers®, Any Breadstick or 2-Liter of Soda. Deep Dish Extra. Coupon Expires

Welcome to University Health Services
Services Include:
✓ Allergy Clinic
✓ Laboratory
✓ Eye Services
✓ Contraceptive Services
✓ Radiology
✓ Physical Therapy
✓ Mental Health
✓ General Medical Care
✓ OB/GYN, Orthopedic, Acupuncture, and Surgical Consults
Clinic Hours: 8:30 to 5:00 by appointment
24-hour urgent care
Appointments:
Medical 577-5101
Eye 577-5244
Mental Health 545-2337
NEW! Acupuncture services available at UHS. Great rates!
Please bring your insurance card with you so we can update your records.
Students taking less than 5 credits are not billed on their tuition bill and need to make payment/enrollment arrangements directly at UHS Enrollment Area for coverage. This includes graduate students who have the health eligibility benefit.
Refer to the Basic Health Plan brochure or call Patient Services at 577-5192 for more information.
UMASS HEALTH SERVICES PHARMACY
150 Infirmary Way
PHONE: 413.577.5030 • REFILL LINE: 413.577.5066
HOURS OF OPERATION: Monday–Friday 8:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Saturday 9:00 a.m. to 1:00 p.m. during academic year
✓ Full service pharmacy
✓ We accept most major insurances (Blue Cross/Blue Shield, Aetna, Tufts, Harvard Pilgrim, Health New England, GIC, Cigna, etc.). Please present card at Pharmacy.
✓ Full line of over-the-counter products at reduced price to save you money.
✓ We stock a full line of diabetic and surgical supplies, cold care kits and condoms.
University of Massachusetts Amherst

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

EDITORIAL OPINION

SUMMER ORIENTATION 2004 EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Welcome to UMass

Despite the surreal nature of your vacant surroundings, you are embarking upon a very important time in your life. Of course, you've heard that from plenty of people. But now is the time to start a specific part of your new journey. It is time for you to make UMass yours.

It begins right now, as you read these words. You've been granted a unique opportunity. You'll spend the next four years (and for some of you, more than that) in a metropolis of education, culture, and commerce. You will be exposed to artistic excellence, academic dedication, and an overall desire to make the world a better place. It is not enough, however, to sit idly by and watch it happen.

Many people knock the University for being too big; there are too many people, not enough classes, and a general feeling of anonymity among everyone involved. However, this opinion only comes from those who haven't been able to enjoy the many fruits of an education at UMass. This is a big school, and there are lots of people, but that doesn't mean it's too big to handle. The beauty of a career at UMass is that there is so much to do, you'll never exhaust your opportunities.

You say you're a theater buff? There is a multitude of productions to take in this fall, whether it's the Theatre Guild's productions of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" and "The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas," or the touring companies that come to the Fine Arts Center and other venues. The performing arts are alive and well at UMass, and you'll have plenty of opportunities to enjoy them.

Big-time sports fan? There are 21 varsity teams on this campus, and this fall, you'd be hard-pressed to find a weekend that doesn't feature at least a few home games. Led by the Atlantic 10 Co-Champion football team, there will be plenty of action and excitement on the turf this autumn, with even more on the way from the Mullins Center come October and November, when hockey and basketball start their seasons.

Of course, you don't have to like the arts or sports to find something to do at UMass. There are frequent guest lectures, book readings, and various other cultural events that stimulate the mind and the senses. It can even be something as simple as a walk through the foliage along the campus pond, or a road trip to one of the many spectacular destinations in the Pioneer Valley.

The point is, UMass isn't too big, if you can find your own niche. We at The Daily Collegian hope that we can provide you with all the campus news you can get, and hopefully we can help you see the wondrous prospects of this fine institution.

In this issue, which is distributed to every Orientation group this summer, we have highlighted some of our best and brightest. These stories represent some of the biggest events to happen in and around the campus. 2003-04 was a busy year at the University of Massachusetts, and as the independent voice of UMass students, we were constantly pushing our own limits to cover those events. It is our sincere hope that in the coming year, you can turn to The Collegian to gain insight into this fine institution, and be entertained in the process.

Welcome to UMass, make yourself at home.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian Editorial Board.

The study struggle

S.J. Port

It's Saturday night at 11:30 p.m. The DuBois library closed an hour and a half ago; the Amherst College library closed half an hour ago; and Rao's has finally, kindly, ushered me out in order to close shop. I have two political science exams and three papers due in the upcoming week, and I live in the dorms.

Most of the weekend has been sacrificed to studying, re-reading, and writing. I say 'sacrificed' only because it would have been fun to see the final hockey game of the season, taken time out for a movie, or had a beer with a friend. But, alas, the work to hour ratio is disturbingly disjointed this week, and the lessons I truly enjoy are now anxiety-producing.

Since I live in the dorms, most of this work has taken place outside of my dorm room a single in Van Meter Hall. Lugging books and a laptop, I've nestled into coves in every library, coffee house and bookshop this side of the Connecticut River just to get some peace and quiet.

"Stop," you say. "Did you just admit to having a single?"

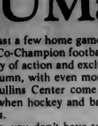
Why, yes, I did, however a single with sophomores blasting music to the tune of beirut on either side of me and across the hallway does little even with ear plugs to promote focus.

Furthermore, a single dorm room is fantastic in the interest of privacy, personal pursuits, and one's sanity, but there is nothing more compelling than a room full of other scholars undertaking studious pursuits to motivate oneself. This is not to say the single is not a beautiful thing, cause it is. My single has allowed me on most weeknights to study uninterrupted whenever I like, for however long I like, in comfort. Long gone are the nights spent yawning under fluorescent lighting in the hallway so as not to wake my sleeping roommate.

However, come weekends, or times like the wee hours of the morning, when focus seems futile and only the collective resilience of a group hard at work can keep me going on my own path, a single doesn't cut it.

Van Meter, like many other dorms, has no available quiet space for residents to study in. The singular "lounge" is in fact the entryway lobby where the communal television and vending machines are also found. The basement area is used as a stage for concerts, shows, meetings, yoga ... you name it, four of seven days a week. There is no space designated as a study zone, and no computer lab (an amenity several dormitories boast). There is a single classroom, located in the southern wing, accessed by a key signed out with the cluster office. The classroom has old, decrepit couches, and few if any tables; it looks more like a basement storage area than a welcoming study space. If the cluster office is not open, this room is not available for students to study in; the hours that the classroom is available coincide with library hours and thus does not extend a students possible study timetable.

On either side of Van Meter sits Commonwealth College honors living areas: Butterfield and Orchard Hill. Butterfield, once a rogue abode for anarchist heathens, has been renovated and redesigned as Commonwealth College's freshman living program. Non-freshman honors students, however, reside in the hall in singles as academic peer advisors or as resident assistants. Butterfield is quieter than Van Meter, has no influx of loud performances, and is equipped with several study lounges.



The two sibling buildings share a cluster office. Due to this fact, Butterfield students can access Van Meter with their UCards during most of the day and late into the night whenever the cluster office is open. Van Meter residents do not have access to Butterfield. Even those of us who are honors students residing in Van Meter cannot access the tranquility of Butterfield's lounges. Nor do Van Meter residents have access to study areas in Orchard Hill or in any other dormitory on campus. Students who live in dormitory halls without designated academic lounges or labs should be encouraged academically with the opportunity to use facilities in other residence halls.

All students should be encouraged to pursue their education to the fullest possible extent. We are an educational institution, and that means putting stock in study areas, books, classrooms, language labs, computer labs, and quiet motivating spaces to create a campus atmosphere that makes studying attractive. Anybody who says a dingy cubicle in the basement is as motivating as an invitingly clean wood table and comfortable chair under warm lighting is either lying, the person who will be asked to pay for this wood table, or more driven and less shallow than me.

The atmosphere at the University of Massachusetts is not conducive to academic rigor. Undergraduate students on campus struggle to find quiet, comfortable areas in which to study, write and conference. Residence halls without study areas lack what makes a university academically potent: promotion of a mission of erudition in academia. The establishment of respectable academic lounges by the University, both in the dorms and on campus, as well as extended library hours would promote self-edification to students.

S.J. Port is a Collegian columnist. This column originally appeared in the March 13 edition of The Collegian.

More than just a teacher

Leah Wyner

Mr. Barstow's H-Block Marketing class was full, and I wasn't on the list. My guidance counselor informed me that there was no way I'd make it into the class, so I didn't really know what to expect when I arrived unannounced on that fateful Monday afternoon. I walked over to the man leaning against the desk in front of the room and said, "Hi, I'm Leah Wyner. I'm not exactly on the list, but ..." I trailed off.

"Don't worry about it at all! It's very nice to meet you Ms. W., I'm Mr. Barstow," he said with a smile. "Have a seat, it's great to have you in the class."

Barely five hours into my junior year, I was already confused. It's common for teachers to welcome students to the first day of class, but Mr. B. seemed to mean it more than most. I had known him for five minutes, but I could already tell. It was strange, even foreign amidst all the unexcited, bored, uninterested teachers I was used to. But I realized right away that Mr. B. truly cared.

I was on the brink of the most difficult year of my scholastic career, absolutely terrified about the prospect of graduation, college, and the challenges that lie ahead. Then there was Mr. Barstow.

He had all the qualities you look for in a teacher, and in a friend. He was fun, interesting, intelligent, enthusiastic, trustworthy, wise and kind. But what touched me on that first day of class was how real he was, and how much he meant what he said. Mr. B. assigned homework every day without fail, but it wasn't like any homework I'd ever seen.

"Ladies and gentlemen, your homework today is to take care of yourself in all ways. Do your homework," he'd say. Mr. B. was different from all other teachers because not only did he mean that, he made sure to assign it every day, because he really wanted us to do it. I was captivated by him. Here was a man who truly wanted make a difference.

One of our assignments was to go through magazines to find and present examples of 10 advertising principles. I had been completely swamped with homework, and I'd only found five. I felt absolutely horrible, but I asked Mr. B. if I could present another day, and I'll never forget his response.

"It's okay, I understand that this isn't the only class you have. Hang in there, and remember, we're all in this together."

And we were all in it together, because with respect, understanding, compassion, and kindness, Mr. B. turned a group of students more diverse than the characters of "The Breakfast Club" into a community.

A large aspect of education is about making the grades, but there's so much more to it than that. It's about the relationships you make, the ways you grow, the skills you learn

Over the course of the semester, Mr. B. accomplished the impossible. He captured the interests and the hearts of every single one of his students. I learned more about marketing than I thought possible in a high school elective class, but what's more important is what I learned along the way.

He taught me that going to school doesn't have to be a miserable experience. It's not a disagreeable chore that has to be endured. Rather, it's an opportunity to be taken advantage of. School is not about surviving until graduation, it's about what happens along the way. Teachers aren't the enemy, they're there to be a part of something special.

Students are at a place in their lives where not everything is decided for them. We've all felt it, and it's scary. Suddenly every decision you make is yours alone, and your future is in your own hands. It's an incredibly important time for students, and teaching them as they prepare for life's tasks ahead is a very difficult, but rewarding job. Mr. B. knew better than anyone that as a teacher, he was a part of something truly extraordinary, and that he had the opportunity to contribute to an exciting and significant time in our lives.

Mr. B. forever changed my outlook on teachers, learning, school, and life, and in the process, helped me figure out the kind of person I wanted to be. I've never met anyone who cared as wholeheartedly as Mr. B. did about his students. He was passionate, considerate, and more. He wanted more than anything to make our experiences in his class enriching and worthwhile. He had so much to give, but at the same time knew that he could learn a lot from us. It was so refreshing and invigorating to find someone so genuine.

It's far too easy to forget, and become lost in the stressful world of term papers, exams, and grade point averages. Every so often you need to step back and remember that that's not what it's all about. A large aspect of education is about making the grades, but there's so much more to it than that. It's about the relationships you make, the ways you grow, the skills you learn. It's about the contradictions, mistakes, and successes. It's about finding out who you are, and who you want to be. But more importantly, it's about the people that touch your heart.

So think about that when you're writing papers, studying for finals, and taking tests. It may not always seem like it, but you're part of something incredible. Remember, we are all in this together. And ladies and gentlemen, make sure to do your homework.

Leah Wyner is a Collegian columnist. This column originally appeared in the May 13 edition of The Collegian.

A Constitutional obligation

Becky Martins

Turning 18 in the United States not only enables one to purchase cigarettes, pornography and scratch tickets legally — it also brings the right to vote.

A little more than three years ago, Americans felt the consequences of not putting their constitutional rights to use. In 2000, the presidential race came down to two candidates: Republican George W. Bush and Democrat Al Gore. We obviously know how this story ends, but who knows if our economy would have plunged from a surplus to a deficit if more US citizens had cast votes. American troops in the Middle East might still be safe at home if more individuals had realized their influence in US politics. In this instance, we will never know what could have been, but we can prevent the situation from occurring again.

Today, Americans are facing a new presidential decision — in which numerous candidates seek our votes. Their campaign trails stretch nationwide: each contender preaching his views, values and hopes with every new city he arrives in.

It is rare for someone today that has not heard the names John Kerry and Howard Dean. Each nightly newscast is never without the candidates' current standings. Even MTV has put out a special on the upcoming presidential election. The actual decision day is months away, yet our attention is already focused on who will become America's next leader. And honestly, it is about time people started listening.

There are no negative effects to voting. The opportunity gives us a voice: one in which government and politics are taken into the hands of citizens. We have the chance to decide who our leaders will be, what actions we, as a country, may potentially take, and what type of nation we are to become.

The public should not make these decisions lightly at whim, or worse, not at all. Many people have taken for granted the liberty we experience as Americans. Not all living in the world are so lucky.

But the voting right of every registered, US citizen, over the age of 18, has not always existed. Instead, it has been a hard-earned victory. According to www.lwvavc.org, white, property-owning men were at one time the only Americans allowed to vote. Yet, after much struggle, the 15th Amendment was added to the constitution in 1870.

Many people have taken for granted the liberty we experience as Americans. Not all living in the world are so lucky.

This addition stated voting would not be denied to anyone on account of "race, color, or previous condition of servitude." Then 50 years later, women were granted the right of suffrage when the 19th amendment was ratified, stating any US citizen's right to vote would not be denied on "account of sex." Finally, in 1970, the 26th amendment lowered the voting age to 18, allowing more Americans to change to participate in elections. Suddenly, after realizing what our ancestors went through just to cast a ballot, it seems disrespectful not to show up on Election Day and vote.

If registering is presenting a problem, the process is quite easy. Voter registration can be done in person, like in an individual's town or city hall. It can be accomplished online, on numerous sites that offer forms to download and print out.

Also, students at the University of Massachusetts Amherst may actually be approached in person to register, such as in Worcester Dining Hall. Basically, the process is simple, foolproof and ridiculous not to complete.

So stop making excuses. Whether the ballot is for our next president, or mayor of our hometown, make sure to cast a vote. It is our responsibility as US citizens to care which leaders come into power and what roles they play in our lives. But definitely do not let this presidential election become a nightmare like our last.

History will not repeat itself if people make a conscious effort to do things differently than before. We always doubt our importance in the larger picture, but our choice could make a difference. We certainly know what can happen if we leave our vote for others to decide.

Becky Martins is a Collegian columnist. This column originally appeared in the Feb. 13 edition of The Collegian.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

editorial@dailycollegian.com
413-545-3699
Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

STUDYING ABROAD

EXPLORE THIS GROWING TREND

By Glen Straub
Collegian Staff

There is something very exploratory about going away to college for the average young American. For many, it's the chance to leave their quintessential American town with their quintessential American family, their quintessential American friends and quintessential American high school.

It's an opportunity to meet new people, become intellectually enlightened, build an amazing metabolism for alcohol and realize there is greater world out there than just (fill in the blank).

But for others, universities and colleges in the Unites States are just not enough. The journey must continue. There is an even greater world out there, but what is the best way to experience it?

Enter the growing trend: studying abroad.

Recently, attending universities overseas is so common in the ultimate college experience it can be compared to beers and wings.

Opportunities are increasing each year to attend schools or participate in programs on every continent. American schools are linking themselves

See ABROAD page 7

WHERE'S YOUR ADVENTURE?

Ireland

I wish I'd never gone to Galway. I wish I'd never walked down Quay Street at 8 o'clock in the morning, enrapt by the sounds of the city's sunrise, a soundtrack layered with the gravelly, bottomless-brogue shouts of deliverymen, heard above an instrumental of empty kegs rattling in the backs of passing trucks, and a single violin, played by an always cheery-looking fellow, certainly not for the coins I'd toss in his case as I walked by.

COURTESY GEARÓID Ó TUATHAIGH

Wish I'd never set my alarm for half-seven (7:30 a.m.) most mornings, just to take that stroll. I wish I hadn't walked to class along the River Corrib — which runs in through the city from Galway Bay, past the Salmon Weir Bridge and under the shadow of Galway Cathedral — and seen that lone seal bounding its way upstream, callous to the current. Wish that woman hadn't approached me to mention the Irish legend that says seals shed their skin at night and become human, searching the city for love.

I wish I'd never gone to my European history class, always hoping to get a front row seat for professor Gearóid Ó Tuathaigh, who nearly made learning about World War II as entertaining as sitting in Monroe's Pub, cheering for Ireland's best footballers in its 2004 Euro Cup Qualifying match against Switzerland.

Wish I still called it "soccer." I wish I didn't know that when I saw a Guinness Quality Team vehicle outside of a pub, they were inside checking for consistent dispense temperatures, clean beer lines and correctly cleaned glasses, so that no matter where I ordered my favorite stout in Ireland, it'd be just as perfect as the pint served in the Gravity Bar, which sits atop the Guinness Factory in Dublin.

Wish the first day I got back from Galway, I told the man at the package store "thank you" after he gave me my change, instead of "cheers, lad." I wish I'd never left.

— Eric Soderstrom

South Africa

The goal for most tourists when they travel to South Africa or any sub-Saharan African nation for that matter is to see the Big Five i.e. the leopard, elephant, lion, buffalo and rhino but, myself, I had my own Big Five while studying in Cape Town, South Africa.

1. THE TOWNSHIPS

At the University of Cape Town, a program called SHAWCO allowed me to work one-on-one with students from the Kensington township. As any thriving journalist would (or should) do, I assisted high school students in creating a newsletter for their impoverished community.

2. THE SOCIAL ATMOSPHERE

South Africa is known for the 50 years of the apartheid regime. Being a young American living in a once institutionalized racist country, it is interesting to observe another nation still with open wounds from a racist system that only ended 10 years ago.

3. TABLE MOUNTAIN

One of the most unique land structures I have ever seen in my life. It's name speaks for itself as the top is completely flat and the mountain spans the entire city of Cape Town. And when you get to the top (as I finally did my last week there) it is surreal seeing both sides of the city — the white-dominated affluent beach area and the shantytowns of the Cape Flats.

GLEN STRAUB/COLLEGIAN

4. THE MUSIC

Paul Simon's "Graceland" won a Grammy for a reason — he went to South Africa to learn the music before he recorded the album.

5. THE GREENS

Where else can you get 2.2 pounds of 'grass' for 40 American dollars?

The animals are cool, but go to South Africa and check out the real scene.

— Glen Straub

A GUIDE TO BACKPACKING

By S.J. Port
Collegian Staff

"All that is gold does not glitter, not all those who wander are lost." —J.R.R. Tolkien

A great appreciation of the world may be found on printed pages, but a great education also requires understanding, and this may only be found through experience. Travel to imbibe alien places, and return home with a diversified perspective. What follows is a brief, series of advice for how to travel safely and cheaply. Enjoy.

• • •

Before you get any further, let me say, this is an article about traveling, not about tourism. The traveler is active, in search of people, adventure, newness. The tourist is passive, expecting things to happen to her. That said, read on.

Embrace the detours. You cannot plan every moment of a trip. If you are not willing to go with the flow or prepared to deal with inevitable delays and tribulations along the way: don't bother to leave home. When planning, the Internet is your best friend. Do not bother with travel agents, but do ask friends and family for any travel advice they hold. (Send a massive e-mail and see who replies with what advice.)

Jeannie & Brooks Goddard, high school English teachers and world travelers extraordinaire, say it best when enchanting students with their fables of adventures in India: "Time saves you money; money saves you time," and "Agonies per minute' a crucial unit of measure in budget travels." The longer you stay in a place the cheaper that place becomes, and the deeper your relationship with this place grows. Forget about "seven-countries in seven days." You can (and will) return.

Create an itinerary before you go of where you will be. Include who you are traveling with and their contacts. Give this to your closest responsible relation. In addition, copy all of your cards (credit, ATM, Student ID, license etc.) and your passport and leave them with the itinerary, in case an item is lost and you must prove something.

Take Robert Louis Stevenson's advice, "The best we can find in our travels is an honest friend." Make sure you know what your companions' goals for the trip are before you begin. While traveling, open your mouth and speak; talk to everyone you can. You will meet incredible people along the way, you will also meet incredible con-artists — keep your wits about you and trust your gut.

The farther in advance you can buy tickets, the cheaper they will be.

THE GROWING TREND

ABROAD from page 6

up with foreign schools every semester to make sure that their respective student bodies take advantage of the once in a lifetime opportunity.

And students at the University of Massachusetts are getting involved in the act as well.

"There are over 700 students that are currently studying or who have studied in a foreign country this academic year," said Carol Lebold, a program director at the International Programs Office. "Some stay for a year or short-term but most stay for a semester."

"A lot of our students go directly through UMass; some do external programs and there are faculty-led programs as well."

According to Lebold, there is at least one UMass student on every continent this semester.

But what's most popular?

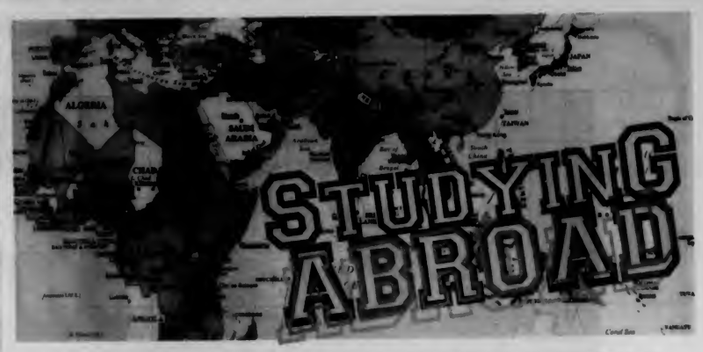
It has been the countries in the Western world that have dominated the destinations for American students. And it's the English-speaking nations taking in the most students from the States.

"All countries in the United Kingdom really attract our students," Lebold said. "Not too many people have taken a second language, so it is a safe way to go to school in a foreign country."

Another English-speaking nation though has sparked the interest of a large number of American students and that is 'the land down under,' Australia.

"It has grown to become a national trend to go to Australia and here we have people always coming in and asking about the options for Australia," Lebold said.

However, Lebold encourages students to step out of a comfortable element and try studying in a country in a place uncommon to American tourists.



There are fantastic places with fantastic educational experiences [that only a few students are traveling to] like, amongst others, Ghana, Tanzania and Senegal," Lebold said.

"THERE ARE OVER 700 STUDENTS THAT ARE CURRENTLY STUDYING OR WHO HAVE STUDIED IN A FOREIGN COUNTRY THIS ACADEMIC YEAR."

-CAROL LEBOLD, PROGRAM DIRECTOR AT INTERNATIONAL PROGRAMS OFFICE

The biggest issue plaguing the study abroad trend though is the price tag on the experience. According to Lebold, study abroad fees and rising tuition has stifled more students from capturing this glorious opportunity. But through financial aid and attempts to build scholarships more programs are trying to lower their prices.

"It is really tough with all the fees but it's possible to have the experience of a lifetime on any budget," Lebold said. "It all depends on the place you choose for your journey."

A GUIDE TO BACKPACKING

BACKPACK from page 6

Internet to do this. Check Web sites from the countries you are traveling to, they often have different deals for hotels and airfares than American based Web sites.

Make every trip a circle so that you leave from the same airport which you arrived at. This will save you from expensive open-jaw plane fairs. Travel trade routs that are commonly flown. Flying into the busiest or largest airport is also usually cheapest. Sometimes taking a "puddle jumper" or smaller plane (esp. in western Europe) to Venice once landed at Frankfurt from across the bigger [Atlantic] pond, is cheaper than flying directly to Venice. Consider "bucket shops" for plane fares. Use student discounts, and rack up air miles.

Keep in mind that currently, the dollar is not strong. Exchange rates will raise or drop the cost of your travels dramatically depending on where you head. The South African rand is worth less than the dollar; however, getting to South Africa is much more expensive than getting to London. When planning, write it all down, make a chart and look at the numbers. Travel is incredible no matter the destination. Go where you can afford to make the most of it.

"Stay in cheap hotels, then abandon them immediately to lurk about at exotic, luxurious hotels ... hotels are for sleeping only," the Goddards recommend, and, "Remember that a well-timed splurge can revive the spirit."

Travel light; vanity is inefficient. Consider carefully what you are taking but don't obsess, you can buy clothing everywhere. Your best bet is to take (depending on climate and your itinerary) one trendy/club/bar outfit, one church/dress-up/preppy outfit, two casual, comfortable every day outfits. In some countries you will need a conservative (upper arms, and knees covered) to visit religious sites. Do not bring jeans. Jeans (unless a lycra brand) stretch out easily, are heavy and bulky, and do not dry easily. There is a reason you image great travelers in khakis — they go everywhere. They are light and dry quickly.

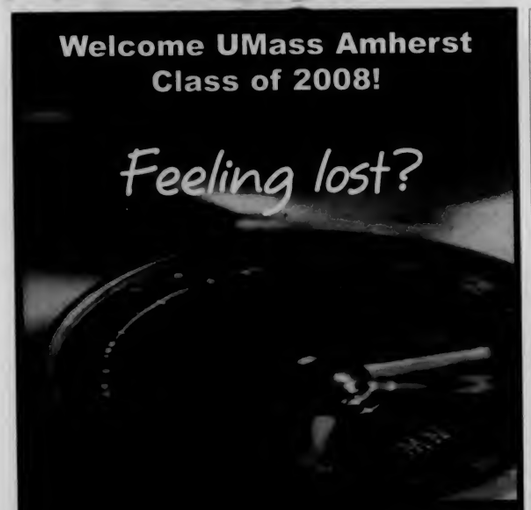
"Be bold, adventurous, and resolute when approaching bathrooms," the Goddards advise. Always carry toilet paper! Other potential lifesavers are baggies, gum, wet n' dries or hygienic gel in a bottle. Sunscreen and moisturizer should not be undervalued and can be extremely expensive in other countries.

Always carry $100 U.S. secretly stashed away somewhere on you. As weak as Bush's dollar is, it has symbolic power.

Keep a journal or ledger while you travel! Save paper memorabilia and construct a scrapbook when you get home, take pictures and buy postcards.

Develop the following skills: ability to sleep in any position, ability to enter a bathroom without breathing, patience and humor in the face of bureaucracy and incompetence.

In closing: "All journeys have secret destinations of which the traveler is unaware," (Martin Buber).



All journeys have secret costs of which the traveler will soon become aware. Travel is an investment."

HEY!!
LET'S GO
BOWLING!

THURSDAY - College Night
Ga[illegible] lights and today's top music
9 p.m. to 12:00 a.m.
Unlimited Bowling
$[illegible]/person (includes shoes)
FRIDAY
[illegible]co 10 p.m. to 1 a.m.
[illegible]URDAY - Pop Rock'n Bowl
11 p.m. to 1:30 a.m.
NORTHAMPTON BOWL
525 Pleasant St.
Northampton • 584-4830

Welcome UMass Amherst Class of 2008!

Career Services can help give you direction!

Career Counseling...
Assessment Tests...
Alumni Mentoring...
Internship & Co-op Opportunities...

you can find it all at

CareerServices

http://www.umass.edu/careers
413-545-2224

The Daily Collegian
WANTS YOU

Over 100 people, three full-time professional staff members produce The Daily Collegian. Our offices are organized into the three departments of Business, Newsroom and Graphics. All departments work together under the direction of the Executive Board to produce a newspaper that reaches 20,000 people daily. In addition, we print an annual sports magazine, The Score and an edition of The Scene, the Arts & Living magazine. The Collegian is a non-profit undergraduate student organization. It operates on advertising revenues and receives no funding from the University or student fees.

HIRING FOR FALL 2004

PHOTOGRAPHERS

SPORTS, ARTS & LIVING AND NEWS WRITERS

COPY EDITORS

NEWSPAPER LAYOUT DESIGNERS

Call 545-3500

WE'RE HERE!

HUNDREDS OF GAMES

PlayStation 2 XBOX GAMECUBE

TONS OF DVD

NEW AMHERST LOCATION NOW OPEN!

IN DOWNTOWN AMHERST

FREE RENTAL! With New Membership
ID & credit/debit card required.

N. Pleasant St.
Bruegger's
Free Parking!
Captain VIDEO
Cowles Ln.
Church

Downtown Amherst, 15 Cowles Lane
Behind Bruegger's Bagels
Just Off North Pleasant Street

Captain VIDEO

15 Cowles Lane, Amherst
Open Everyday 10am to 9pm - 253-0222

Boston marathon decides HEA title

March 22, 2004
UMass loses a 2-1, triple-overtime heartbreaker to Maine in the Hockey East Championship Game
By Andrew Merritt

Four hours, 36 minutes. A combined 122 saves by two sophomore goalies. 109:27 of play, with two and a half overtimes. Three goals, including a winning tip-in by a fourth-line center.

In the longest Hockey East game in history, and the fourth-longest ever in Division I, the Maine Black Bears beat the Massachusetts hockey team in the third overtime of the conference title game, on a goal from junior Ben Murphy at 9:27 at the FleetCenter. It is the Black Bears fifth Hockey East title, tying them with Boston College and Boston University for the most titles in the conference's history.

Murphy slid into the slot in front of UMass goaltender Gabe Winer. Maine's Cameron Lyall sent the puck from the right wing corner behind the goal line out to Mathew Deschamps just inside the right wing faceoff circle.

Deschamps one-timed the feed toward the net, and Murphy redirected it through three UMass defenders, sliding it along the ice between Winer's legs. With an exhausted, defeated Minuteman squad slowly trudging back to its bench, the Bears all jumped to the ice, joining Murphy at the opposite end in a celebration among piles of discarded equipment.

"Definitely this is the biggest goal [of my career]," Murphy said. "And the sweetest. We have about 15 minutes to enjoy it, then we've got to get ready for next weekend."

The Black Bears (30-7-3) move on to the NCAA tournament as the No. 1 seed in the Albany bracket, where they will play Harvard on Friday at 5 p.m. The Minutemen's season officially ended, as they were not selected to be in the 16-team tournament field.

UMass coach Don Cahoon, his voice broken and raspy after over four hours of hockey, asked the media at the post game press conference, "do you think I have words to describe that"

"It was an incredible exhibition of intestinal fortitude by both sides. Both teams rope-a-doped each other all night long. That game had a little bit of everything in it. The goaltending was immense at both ends, the game could have been over 10 times."

Maine's Jimmy Howard came just three saves short of breaking the all-time Hockey East tournament record of 65 stops, set by Chris Terreri in 1985. Howard made 63 saves, including 19 in the first overtime, and 27 in the three extra sessions combined, earning tournament MVP, as well as a spot on the all-tournament team.

Howard said his hardest save of the night was "all of them in OT. I'm just glad it's over, I'm so tired."

That echoed the sentiments of just about everyone involved in the epic final, from the 38 players and three officials on the ice, to the 16,743 in attendance, to even the New England Sports Network camera crew that spent over 12 hours in the FleetCenter.

For UMass, despite the ending of an up-and-down season, simply reaching the final was a landmark moment in the program's history. It was the first-ever Hockey East final appearance for the Minutemen, who clobbered New Hampshire 5-2 Friday night to earn the bid.

For the second time in the playoffs, junior Greg Mauldin played the hero for the Minutemen, scoring with just 6:13 to go in the third period to tie the game at one. With Deschamps in the penalty box for an interference call stemming from a play where he sent Mauldin into Howard, the Minutemen worked the puck around the perimeter on the power play.

Mauldin had the puck briefly on the left wing point, and considered a shot before sending it over to sophomore Marvin Degon, who exchanged it with Pock before sliding it back across to Mauldin. He then stepped in, pumped once, and fired a blistering slap shot that exploded in the top corner over Howard's glove.

The Black Bears took a 1-0 lead in the second period, after being thoroughly outshot by the Minutemen throughout. Dustin Penner sent a feed from the goal line extended to Michel Leveille on the point. Leveille's stick snapped on the shot, and the puck trickled precariously towards the net. Penner then finished off the play, getting enough of his body loose from a UMass defender to whip the loose puck underneath Winer.

Legendary coach Leaman passes away at 71

Leaman from page 11

the team to Bradley International Airport in Hartford, Conn., assistant coaches Andrew Theokas and Patrick Sellers remained in the Washington D.C. area, where Leaman was taken to a local hospital and pronounced dead.

A Boston native and a longtime resident of Amherst, Leaman is survived by a wife, Rita and a daughter, Laura, as well as large contingent of friends, confidants and admirers both locally and nationwide.

Associate athletic director Bill Strickland said the family will hold private funeral services. The university is planning a memorial service as well for a later date.

"Coach Leaman was and is one of the single most influential people in my life, and I know I'm not alone in making that claim," Boston College head coach Al Skinner said of his mentor and coach before a Feb. 18 ceremony to retire the former UMass great's number. "I learned a lot of what I know now from Jack, and that goes far beyond basketball.

"He cares about you as a person above and beyond anything else, and because of that, he's had a profound effect on a lot of lives."

The unofficial father of UMass athletics who was referred to by those who knew him simply as "Jack" or "Coach," Leaman began his tenure in Amherst in 1961 as an assistant under men's basketball coaches Matt Zunic and Johnny Orr. His legacy, however, was born prior to the 1966-67 season, when he was named UMass' head coach - a position he held for 13 seasons.

A two-time New England Coach of the Year, Leaman compiled a career record of 217-126 and won eight Yankee Conference titles in a nine-year span, while guiding what were then known as the Redmen to six National Invitation Tournament (NIT) appearances.

Inducted into the UMass Athletic Hall of Fame in 1998 and the New England Basketball Hall of Fame in 2003, Leaman coached 22 All-Yankee Conference selections while behind the bench at Curry Hicks Cage, including Skinner, Basketball Hall of Famer Julius Erving, Louisville coach Rick Pitino and UMass Athletic Hall of Famers Bill Tindall and Joe DiSarcina.

"Jack Leaman did a remarkable job with this basketball program," Lappas said after an early season practice. "If it wasn't for Jack, this program wouldn't have ever been put in a position to succeed like it has."

"Coach Leaman is someone I always know I can confide in," Skinner said. "I always felt like I could go to him for anything, whether it be about life or basketball.

"He had a tremendous impact on how I coach, and even more so on who I was as a person."

Following his stint as men's basketball coach, Leaman remained readily involved with the UMass athletic department in a variety of capacities.

He served as head women's basketball coach during the 1986-87 season, guiding the Minutewomen to a 14-12 record - the team's only winning season between 1980 and 1995. Additionally, he also spent three seasons as an assistant for the Minutewomen, starting in 1991.

Beginning in 1994 and lasting until the day of his passing, Leaman served as a radio color commentator for UMass Sports Radio covering all men's basketball games. Known for his unparalleled capacity for basketball knowledge and brutally honest approach to analysis, Leaman teamed with partners Mark Vandermeer and Bob Behler to earn Best Play-By-Play honors from the Associated Press three times.

HermanMiller Authorized Dealer
LEXINGTON GROUP
Buyers & Sellers of Quality New & Used Office Furniture
MHEC Vendor
♦ Design & Space Planning ♦ Installations
♦ Furniture Rental & Leasing ♦ Panel Systems New & Remanufactured
Eric Bascom 413.746.3064
eric@lexingtongroupinc.com
380 Union St., West Springfield,MA 01089

ABSOLUTE NUTRITION
Weight Loss and Body Building Specialists
Weight Loss
Student Discounts
20%-40% below GNC prices
65 University Drive
Next to Beach Club Tanning
687-6083

Westfield • Pittsfield • Greenfield • Athol
Holyoke • Great Barrington • Amherst
North Adams • Northampton • Springfield
Emergency Contraception • Pregnancy Testing
STI Screening & Treatment • Birth Control
20 Minute Rapid HIV Test • GYN & Breast Exams
HIV/AIDS Counseling & Testing
27 Pray St. Amherst 548-9992
www.tapestryhealth.org 1-800-696-7752
TAPESTRY Health

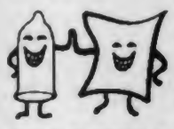
The Hampshire Hospitality Group "We Define Hospitality"
Howard Johnson Express Inn
* 100 Guest Rooms & Suites * Outdoor Swimming Pool * Fitness Center * Complimentary Continental Breakfast * Meeting Rooms for up to 35 * Central to the Five College Area * Kids under 18 stay free with parents
401 Russell St./Rt. 9, Amherst/Hadley, MA 01035 413-586-0114
* 100 Guest Rooms & Suites * Indoor Pool, Whirlpool Spa, Fitness Area * Complimentary Continental Breakfast * Meeting Room for up to 100 * Executive Boardrooms * All rooms have coffeemaker, iron & board, and hairdryer * Central to the Five College Area
EXPRESS Stay Smart
400 Russell St./Rt. 9, Amherst/Hadley, MA 01035 413-582-0002
Clarion Hotel & Conference Center
Clarion Hotel by Choice Hotels
* 122 Guest Rooms & Suites * Indoor/Outdoor Swimming Pools * Poolside Bar & Grill * Conference & Meeting facilities for 2-300 * Grand Ballroom * All rooms have coffeemaker, iron & board, and hairdryer * Complimentary Continental Breakfast (M-F) * Home of Montana's Steakhouse & Bar
One Atwood Drive, Northampton, MA 01060 413-586-1211
* 29 Guest Rooms, 2 Suites * Colonial in style & furnishing * Outdoor Pool and Barbeque Area * Complimentary Continental Breakfast * Walk to Downtown Northampton
Autumn Inn
259 Elm St., Northampton, MA 01060 413-584-7660
University Lodge
* 20 Quiet Rooms * Quaint New England Charm * In-room coffeemakers * Walk to downtown Amherst
345 North Pleasant St., Amherst, MA 01002 413-256-8111
* 63 Rooms * Indoor Pool * Newest Hotel in Area * Complimentary Continental Breakfast
Econo Lodge by Choice Hotels
329 Russell St./Rt. 9, Amherst/Hadley, MA 01035 413-582-0002
Visit us at: www.hampshirehospitality.com
Enjoy Indoor & Outdoor Pools, Health Club, Day Spas, Dining, Shopping, Movies, UMASS Sports & Fine Arts by choosing from one of the many packages available through Valley Vacations.
ValleyVacations.net
Enjoy a Night or a Weekend... Just for Two, or for the Whole Family...
For details, please visit our website at www.valleyvacations.net or call 413-586-2250. Reservations must be made 48 hours in advance. All packages are subject to availability.

Want a subscription?
Daily Collegian
You can have the paper delivered to your house everyday. Take advantage of this now.
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
New England's Largest College Daily
Fill out and send to 113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, MA, 01003.
Name:_____
Address:_____
Phone:_____
Email:_____
or call 545-3500 to order yours today!

HEALTH EDUCATION WANTS YOU!

GET INVOLVED! MAKE A DIFFERENCE!

CALL 577-5181 FOR MORE INFORMATION ON ANY OF THESE PROGRAMS.



SEEKING VOLUNTEERS:

1. Not Ready for Bedtime Players

You've seen us perform, you've laughed with us, you've taken condoms from us...now become one of us! There will be two audition dates for the sexiest health education theater troupe you have ever seen. Come audition on Wednesday, September 15th at 7:00 or Thursday, September 16th at 7:00 in the Campus Center Basement (room to be announced). Students perform on campus on Wednesday evenings throughout the academic year with opportunities for special performances. Our lively and entertaining skits address sex, masturbation, coming out, relationship violence and much more. Call 577-5181 for details. Theater experience not required.

2. PeeR Health eDucatoRS

Community Health Studies 213, Tuesdays. You've seen Sex Pictionary, Drug Jeopardy, Getting More than Lucky and Life is Not a Stress Rehearsal — now learn how to be a peer health educator! Earn 6 credits in this year long course while learning a ton about yourself and educating others at the same time. Call to set up an interview for a class that will change your life! Call Amanda (577-5185) for details.

3. The student health advisory board (SHAB)

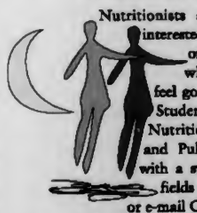
SHAB is the officially recognized voice of the student body in matters pertaining to UHS, and participates in the planning, financing, implementation and evaluation of student health programs. SHAB provides input into the recruiting of health professionals, reviews and makes recommendations regarding the Student Health Trust Fund and the Supplemental Health Benefits Program, and serves as a liaison to other student organizations. Call Tom (577-5133) for details.

4. ALANA Health Education and Outreach

The purpose of the ALANA Health Outreach and Education program is to support students of color to access health care at University Health Services, raise awareness about health issues and concerns that impact ALANA communities, promote healthy lifestyles, and provide advocacy, education and referral. This is done through customized workshops, educational forums, consultation, and leadership development. Call Rani or Tom (577-5068 or 577-5133) for details.

5. The Women's Health Project

Come and be a part of a group that educates students at UMass and the surrounding communities on issues that affect women! The Women's Health Project conducts weekly workshops on contraception in the residence halls, sponsors the clothesline project, breast health workshops and UMass Orgasm Week, all while having a great time! Independent study credits available. Call Amanda (577-5185) for details.



6. Queer Peer Education

Educate yourself and others about issues that have an effect on GLBT people! We are looking for committed, fun and excited people to address GLBT health and work towards creating a healthier UMass community. QPE volunteers sponsor tables, teach Sexaware workshops and sponsor other events. Call 577-5181 for more information.

7. Health Reach International (HRI)

HRI helps international students, scholars and their families to stay healthy while facilitating easier access to the health services offered at UMass by providing information, organizing and presenting workshops on health related topics, and networking and collaborating with other organizations to address the concerns of international students. For more information, call Yeshi or Tom at 577-5168 or 577-5133.

8. HEALTHY EATING/ HEALTHY BODIES

Nutritionists are seeking students interested in supporting others on ways to eat healthy while on campus and feel good about their bodies. Students majoring in Nutrition, Exercise Science and Public Health, or those with a strong interest in these fields are encouraged to call or e-mail Caren Weiner 577-5174 (cweiner@uhs.umass.edu) or Arleen Thomson 577-5171 (athomson@uhs.umass.edu).

OTHER SERVICES:

Health Education will be happy to meet with individuals or groups to discuss any health related topic. Come to our offices on the 3rd floor of UHS to obtain information on contraception, safer sex, alcohol, drugs, stress or any health topic.

Call 577-5181 for more information about these topics or any of the services listed below:

AHEP (THE ATHLETIC HEALTH ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM)

Provides information and education to student athletes.

ANONYMOUS HIV ANTIBODY TESTING

Call 577-5126 to make an appointment for anonymous testing.

CONTRACEPTION EDUCATION

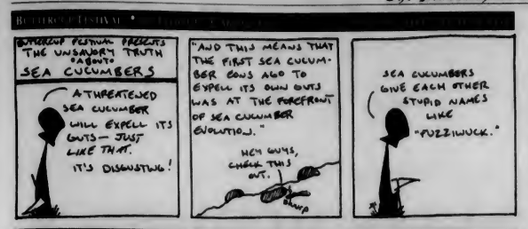
Classes are offered Wednesday evenings in room 302 of UHS and Monday evenings in the residence halls. Contact Health Ed. for additional dates and times.

MEN'S HEALTH PROGRAMS

Workshops on topics such as Sexual Health, Body Image, Masculinity, and more. Please call 577-5133.

VOICES AGAINST VIOLENCE

The Voices Against Violence program is seeking peer educators. Voices Against Violence is committed to working with the UMass community to address violence in all its forms, with a particular focus on men's violence against women. Utilizing a bystander approach to violence prevention, the Voices Against Violence program regards student participants not as potential perpetrators or victims, but as empowered bystanders who can confront abusive / violent peers. Academic credit available. Call Tom at 577-5133.

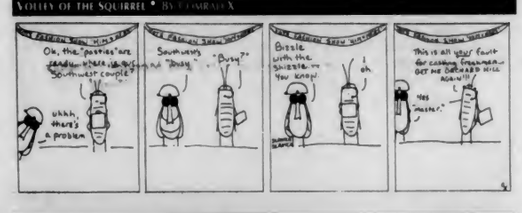


NUTRITION SERVICES

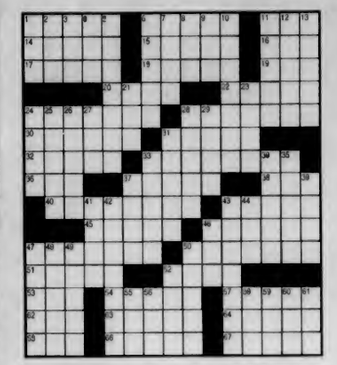
Nutritionists are on staff to meet with students individually to discuss concerns about eating, proper diet and weight loss. Please call 577-5314 to schedule an appointment at UHS.

TOBACCO TREATMENT SERVICES

Assistance to quit smoking. Individual and Group Sessions. Presentations. Please call 577-5133.



University of Massachusetts Amherst
University Health Services • Health Education Division
150 Infirmary Way (third floor) • 577-5181 • www.umass.edu/uhs



ACROSS
1 Funny stories
6 Peggy Lee tune
11 Small shots
14 Head off
15 Banded stone
16 Sign before Virgo
17 Exotic fruit
18 Jackson and Capshaw
19 Pound sound
20 Roman poet
22 Huge blossom
24 Mechanic's device
28 Chubbier
30 Gertrude's son
31 Contributed
32 Sheer clear of 33 Allow
36 Part of mpg
37 Carpentry joint
38 Subzero comment
40 Rapport
43 Fasts Parker played ham
45 Eurasian range
46 Acted servile
47 Typical example
50 Horse's gear
51 Lone Ranger's sidekick
52 Wild pig
53 Tropical
54 Semester ender
57 Get the same answer
62 Top-notch pilot
63 Wash out
64 Formation fliers
65 Edmonton Oilers org.
66 Knights' wives
67 Glowing coal

DOWN
1 Wedge in
2 Eggs, in biology
3 Novelist — Keesey
4 Unit of energy
5 Blent
6 Dervish
7 "Yikes!"
8 Wine cask
9 Riviera summer
10 Knight, to damsel
11 Mild
12 European capital
13 — — so good!
21 Zoo staffer
23 Tolstoy heroine
24 Bloke
25 Gunzels
26 Atlanta campus
27 Gin investor Whitney
28 The life of —
29 Finished
31 Stalkers of Rome
33 Championship
34 Cut of beef (hyph.)
35 Osprey relatives
37 Lady's honorific
39 Cincinnati ball club
41 Mungert
42 Checked for typos
43 Volley
44 Pay for
46 Pilot licensing org.
47 Fictional Frome
48 Bowser
49 Pentium producer
50 Tarsal centers
52 Ordered
55 Nest-egg letters
56 — de guerre
58 Garnet or ruby
59 CSA defender
60 WNW opposite
61 Poet's eternity

PREVIOUS PUZZLE SOLVED

10-29-03 © 2003 United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

HOROSCOPES

aquarius • JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Good things happen to those who wait. Be patient.

pisces • FEB. 19-MAR. 20
An apple a day keeps Health Services very far away.

aries • MAR. 21-APR. 19
Don't be afraid of going away to school. Embrace the opportunity.

taurus • APR. 20-MAY 20
Procrastination is like masturbation...just think about it.

gemini • MAY 21-JUN. 21
Orientation might be a drag, but you will make up for it this semester.

cancer • JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Take a shower to rinse off. Now you have a new beginning.

leo • JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Give a good friend a second chance. Keep an open mind.

virgo • AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
An attitude change is needed. Consider doing it fast.

libra • SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Take time off from your relationship before you leave for school.

scorpio • OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Don't eat too much DC food. The freshman 15 will turn to 35.

sagittarius • NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Be careful, love might pass you by if your eyes aren't open.

capricorn • DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Do your research before you make your decision. It'll pay off.

We are looking for talented, aspiring cartoonists to create funny, witty cartoons for this page. E-mail us at: COLLEGIANCOMICS @DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SUMMER FUN WEATHER for Amherst, Ma.

TODAY
- High: 65
- Low: 72

YESTERDAY
- High: 0
- Low: -50

TOMORROW
- High: 225
- Low: 150

DINING COMMONS MENU
D.C. contact: (413) 545-2626

LUNCH
- Check here
- each day
- to see
- the menu.

DINNER
- Look here
- to see
- what is
- for dinner.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Andrew Merritt
PHOTO TECHNICIAN
Matt Reed
COPY EDITOR
Cameron Woods
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Cory Rosenberg
PRODUCTION STAFF
Samantha Nielsen, Matt Reed

QUOTE OF THE DAY

Freshman: Lines up for an hour to buy his [or her] textbooks in the first week.
Senior: Starts to think about buying textbooks in October ... maybe.

- A bit of humor from Lifeisajoke.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

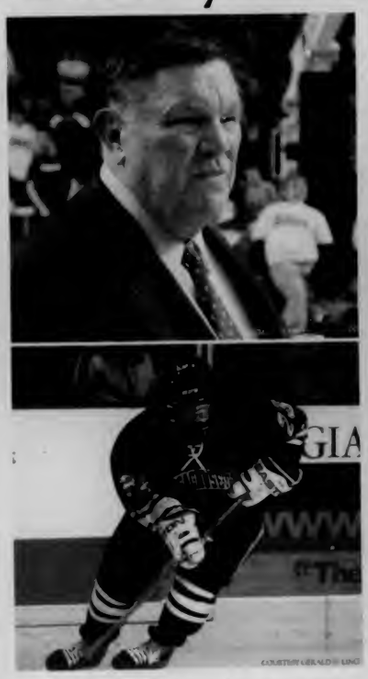
ANNOUNCEMENTS | APARTMENT FOR RENT | EMPLOYMENT | EMPLOYMENT | EMPLOYMENT | SERVICES | TRAVEL | TRAVEL

RUN YOUR CLASSIFIED AD HERE!

EMPLOYME

APARTMENT FOR RENT

WANTED



The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

SPORTSSUMMER

SUMMER ORIENTATION 2004

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The year in UMass athletics

COURTESY GERALD M. UNO

2003-04 was another memorable year in the world of UMass athletics. From a changing of the guard at the head of the athletic department, to the continued emergence of Mass Attack hockey to the passing of a legend that transcends what it means to bleed maroon and white, the Massachusetts Daily Collegian's sports staff was there to cover it all.

Now, straight from the sports pages that our dedicated staff has worked hard to put together each and every day UMass is in session, we bring you the top five stories of the past academic year, presented in chronological order. Let it serve as a taste of what's to come in just a few short months.

Enjoy.

Mike Marzelli, sports editor

SEPTEMBER 9, 2003

ATHLETIC DIRECTOR IAN MCCAW ABRUPTLY DEPARTS UMASS TO TAKE THE SAME POSITION AT BAYLOR UNIVERSITY

BY ANDREW MERRITT

University of Massachusetts Athletic Director Ian McCaw was hired away to the same position at Baylor University yesterday, in an abrupt decision.

"We are very pleased that Ian McCaw is Baylor's new director of athletics," Baylor President Robert B. Sloan Jr. said. "This is the culmination of a very thorough national search that yielded outstanding candidates. Ian is a proven leader with experience in athletics administration."

With McCaw's departure, UMass will begin a search for its third athletic director in two years. McCaw replaced former UMass AD Bob Marcum, who took an early retirement in June 2002.

The University of Mass-achusetts Amherst congratulates Baylor University for its selection of Ian McCaw as its new athletic director," UMass Chancellor John Lombardi said in a press release.

"Ian McCaw has served this campus exceedingly well for the past year. He clearly demonstrated the high integrity and professional excellence that would attract the attention of any major athletic program in the country. While we are very sorry to lose Ian's talents from this campus, we can only celebrate his move and wish him and his family all the success and happiness in the world."

The move comes one month after the former Baylor AD, Tom Stanton, resigned in the wake of scandal following basketball player Patrick Dennehy's apparent murder.

"My family and I are incredibly excited about the opportunity to serve Baylor University," McCaw said in a Baylor press release. "Baylor represents a pinnacle personal and professional position for me."

The Burlington, Ontario native is Baylor's ninth athletic director.

McCaw's new job will not be without its challenges. The Baylor athletic program is still suffering from the effects of Dennehy's death, as well as the subsequent investigation that turned up corruption throughout the basketball program. Former basketball coach Dave Bliss also resigned in the wake of the investigation, and it was found that he attempted to arrange for another Baylor player to paint Dennehy as a drug dealer and abuser.

Former basketball player Carlton Dotson was also arrested and charged with Dennehy's murder.

The scandal turned national media focus on Baylor as allegations of mishandled drug tests and other wrongdoing surfaced.

McCaw, 40, leaves the UMass program in the middle of an investigation of the feasibility of bringing the football team to the I-A level. The department also recently completed an overhaul of its identity system, with new word marks and logos. McCaw was further involved in the UMass hockey team's increased visibility on campus.

Football will remain I-AA after report

DECEMBER 11, 2003

MEMBERS OF A SPECIALIZED ATHLETICS COMMITTEE ANNOUNCE THAT UMASS FOOTBALL SHOULD REMAIN AT THE DIVISION I-AA LEVEL FOR THE FORESEEABLE FUTURE

BY MIKE MARZELLI

Basing their decision on the results of a feasibility study conducted by Chicago-based Grenzenbach Glier and Associates, members of a special ad hoc athletics committee announced today that the Massachusetts football program should remain at the Division I-AA level, but continue to lay the groundwork for an eventual move to Division I-A.

"As with any major initiative requiring a significant capital investment, we need to make preparations and to be ready to strike when we see an opportunity that will bring us a high degree of success," said James J. Karam, co-chairman of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees Ad Hoc Committee on Athletics.

"There is a strong and eager constituency for Division I-A football, but we should not take this step until we have all the ingredients needed to make the move an unqualified and enduring success," committee co-chair Robert Meers added.

Meeting in Boston at the office of the president of the University of Massachusetts, members of the athletics study committee reviewed the findings of the study that examined the feasibility of developing a privately funded Division I-A football program at the University?s flagship campus.

Citing significant uncertainty in two critical areas - the present economy and the lack of prospects for affiliation with a major conference - the authors of the study recommended that the University continue to further the development of its athletics and football programs and revisit the possibility of a jump to Division I-A in three to five years.

The study also notes that, "The question of Division I-A football at UMass Amherst is generally regarded as a decades-long campus conversation."

Over that period, UMass had fielded a highly successful I-AA football team which won the National Championship in 1998 and Atlantic 10 titles in 1999 as well as this past season.

"UMass is one of the premier I-AA football programs in the country," Massachusetts head coach Mark Whipple said in an interview a week prior to the announcement of the committee's decision. "No matter what division we're in, all we're aiming to do is win football games and graduate student-athletes.

The study also noted various factors that make a move to Division I-A desirable for a football program. Included among them were potential boosts in student and faculty recruitment that the move could support, along with the possibility of generating additional private financial funding among alumni and other various contributors.

Factors included in the report that indicate the need for a more deliberate approach when considering the move are the national and regional economic slump, which increases in difficulty the ability to generate funds necessary to make a Division I-A football program self-sufficient, as well as the recent shifting among the major Division I athletic conferences that makes it difficult to acquire appropriate conference affiliation.

Karam, a current member of the University's Board of Trustees, declared that the study "is already paying significant dividends," and adds that, "as a result of this undertaking, we have developed a roadmap for success. We have been able to make powerful new friends for UMass Amherst football, and we see that UMass football is generating new levels of excitement and energy.

"This augurs well for the future under Chancellor John Lombardi's leadership, an athletics program that already enjoys considerable success is going to reach new heights."

Interim athletic director Thorr Bjorn agrees.

"The work of the committee and the findings of this report will only serve to better the University's football program and athletic department as a whole.

"We're excited about the success our football team has enjoyed and the excitement it has generated among supporters of the program, and we will continue to work at finding the best possible ways to accentuate what is a very positive aspect of the University as a whole."

In an effort to position the Massachusetts football program and athletics department for furthered success, the ad hoc committee recommended the following actions:

The Chancellor of the Amherst campus will develop a five-year plan for intercollegiate athletics that includes the continued development of the current football program at the Division I-AA level, without reducing or eliminating scholarships.

School names new athletic director in February

FEBRUARY 5, 2004

JOHN MCCUTCHEON IS NAMED THE UNIVERSITY'S SIXTH PERMANENT ATHLETIC DIRECTOR

BY MIKE MARZELLI

Following an extensive search that spanned nearly five months, University of Massachusetts Amherst Chancellor John V. Lombardi announced Tuesday that John F. McCutcheon has been named the school's sixth permanent director of athletics.

McCutcheon, who was formally introduced at a 3:30 pm news conference in the Mullins Center Green Room, comes to Amherst from California Polytechnic State University in San Luis Obispo, where he was director of athletics since 1992.

He will take over a UMass program that has been without a permanent AD since Ian McCaw abruptly departed to take the same position at Baylor University in September.

Associate athletic director for external affairs Thorr Bjorn had held the position on an interim basis during the search.

"UMass Amherst is delighted to welcome John McCutcheon as permanent director of athletics," Lombardi said. "He brings a solid record of accomplishment, strong managerial and fund-raising skills, and proven ability to steer our program toward greater success.

"John is also familiar with the New England sports environment and has all the talents necessary to meet the high expectations of our athletes and staff, students, faculty, fans, and alumni supporters."

Prior to his tenure at Cal Poly, McCutcheon spent 12 years at Boston College, beginning in 1980 when he was named athletic business manager, and culminating in 1991 when he was named associate athletic director for business and operations before departing the post for his new position in San Luis Obispo in August of 1992.

Prior to his time at the Heights, McCutcheon was assistant athletic manager at the University of Maine, Orono for three years, beginning in 1977.

He succeeds Curry Starr Hicks (1911-1948), Warren P. McGuirk (1948-1971), Frank McInerney (1972-1992), Robert Marcum (1993-2002), and McCaw (2002-2003) in taking over the athletic department of the state's flagship university.

"I am extremely honored to have been given the opportunity to be the next athletic director at the University of Massachusetts," McCutcheon said. "It is my goal to provide the direction, enthusiasm and leadership to make UMass athletics a program in which our students, alumni and supporters can take great pride.

"I look forward to addressing whatever challenges we may face as we build on the tradition of the University of Massachusetts athletic program."

McCutcheon earned his Bachelor of Science degree in health, physical education and recreation from Indiana University of Pennsylvania in 1975. He then earned his master of education degree from Ohio University in 1978. He has been a member of the National Association of College Directors of Athletics since 1992, and was a 14-year member of the Collegiate Athletic Business Managers Association until 1992.

While at Cal Poly, McCutcheon oversaw the University's athletic department's ascension from Division II to Division I-AA, and also secured membership in the Big West Conference in order to make the move possible.

In addition, he coordinated an athletic facility master plan and began a $20 million capital campaign for improvements of such facilities, which has collected $18 million from private, corporate, state and student sources to date.

COURTESY EMILIE DOOGIAN

UMass athletic director John McCutcheon speaks during a Feb. 18 ceremony retiring former Minuteman great Al Skinner's No. 30.

"We are delighted that Chancellor Lombardi has appointed John McCutcheon, who won enthusiastic support from the search committee, our coaches, and members of the athletic department staff," said Susan Pearson, associate provost for faculty relations and the budget and co-chair of the search committee. "John's experience as AD at an academically distinguished Division I-AA university, his extensive Division I intercollegiate athletic experience, his familiarity with intercollegiate athletics in New England and thorough understanding of the issues facing UMass and intercollegiate athletics generally, and his unquestioned integrity make him the ideal candidate to lead our program."

He is taking over a UMass athletic department that has experienced its share of turmoil over the last few years, including the departures of two permanent athletic directors since 2002, the recent loss of head football coach Mark Whipple to the NFL's Pittsburgh Steelers, floundering student support for the University's 23 varsity athletic teams and the recent implementation of massive statewide budget cuts which forced the program to eliminate seven sports in the past two years, as well as drastically reshape the budgets of several others.

Leaman dies at 71

MARCH 8, 2004

JACK LEAMAN, THE HEART AND SOUL OF UMASS ATHLETICS AND THE UNIVERSITY'S WINNINGEST BASKETBALL COACH, PASSES AWAY AT AGE 71

BY MIKE MARZELLI

Jack Leaman, the winningest coach in the history of Massachusetts men's basketball and one of the more beloved figures ever to grace the University of Massachusetts' Amherst and Stockbridge Agricultural campuses, died Saturday evening of a heart attack. He was 71 years of age. Leaman, a color commentator covering the Minutemen for radio station 100.9 WRNX, was traveling home from the team's regular season finale in Richmond, VA. When he suffered the attack while changing planes at Dulles International Airport in Washington D.C.

"I sat with Jack on the flight to Dulles," third-year UMass coach Steve Lappas said. "We had to get out and switch planes, and just as we were about to take off a flight attendant notified me that something was wrong. "It was then that I noticed Jack wasn't there."

While Lappas returned with

See LEAMAN on page 9